Then no longer will the breathless movie fans seeing the heroine, with the prize limited rushing down upon her, be brought back to earth by the sight of a blank screen, and a terrible sizzling and sputtering in the rear of the house

The contemplated use of the incandescent instead of the arc light is expected to bring about a more satisfactory condition in moving picture lighting Men who have been experimenting for months say that the incandescent light is much steadier and far more reliable than the arc light now being used in moving picture machines

Recent Recommendations of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers

AT the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers there were four actions taken or suggested which are of particular and vital interest to the entire industry. These actions may or may not meet with the approval of all, but as the best results in any movement are only obtained after publicity has been given to them, we take this opportunity of placing them on record. Those which we are not able to treat in this issue will be taken up at a later date.

First—The Society definitely adopted a new standard film for small home or portable projectors, each individual film exposure being somewhat smaller than the present professional standard, this film to be made of non-inflammable stock.

Second—The proposal was made that one or more sides of the projection room be made of wired glass so that the public might be able to watch the operator at work, it being clearly stated, however, that all walls of the projection room facing the auditorium be made of heavy opaque fireproof material, as at present.

Third—A request was made by the National Fire Protective Association that the Society prepare specifications for an absolutely fireproof projector.

Fourth—The statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Optics that the manufacturers of optical equipment had signified their willingness to cooperate with the Society and adopt any standards which might be laid down by it.

In setting down these four cardinal features of the meeting we have done so without regard to their importance, and in treating of them we will take them in order as given.

FILM STANDARDS

Our personal opinion in regard to the use of film other than the standard formally adopted and used on all professional projectors is not to be considered. The action of the Society at its recent meeting and the adoption of the new standard is now a matter of record, and we merely wish to state the arguments advanced at the meeting.

It may be interesting to consider the points brought out in favor of the new standard.

First—That there should be a distinct dividing line between the amateur and professional machines.

Second—That the smaller film should be made of non-inflammable stock, so as to be absolutely safe.

Third—That there are portable projectors today being used which employ inflammable film of standard dimensions under conditions which are absolutely unsafe.

Fourth—The promotion of the use of non-inflammable film through the adoption of the new portable standard would tend to do away with the use of inflammable stock under dangerous conditions.

Fifth—At the present stage of the game a non-inflammable film of the same dimensions as are embraced by the new portable standard appears to be the only film which has ever had the endorsement of the Board of Fire Underwriters.

Sixth—That the new film standard is of such dimensions that any negative of standard professional width can be reduced in printing positives to the new standard dimensions adopted for portable projectors.

The arguments against the adoption of the new standard were as follows:

First—That there is no reason why there should be a special width film for portable projectors from a commercial standpoint.

Second—That the mere request or suggestion that only non-inflammable film be exclusively used in the portable standard would not be observed, for if there is money to be made in printing inflammable film in this standard there are plenty of people in the industry who would not hesitate to do so.

Third—That any one who ordered inflammable film in the portable standard dimensions could obtain it, as the Kodak or any other company could not limit the production of film in this new standard to non-inflammable stock.

Fourth—That the cost of production of non-inflammable film would be from 33 1-3 to 50 per cent higher than the cost of inflammable stock, thus supplying the incentive to unscrupulous parties to make prints in this portable standard on ordinary inflammable film, which would render the portable standard ineffectual as regards the elimination of fire hazard.

Fifth—In making use of the present libraries of film negatives it would be necessary to equip all laboratories with special optical printers for the reduction of the film images to the smaller size.

It was plainly brought out that the adoption of the new portable standard was not intended to force any maker of a portable machine to adopt this standard, as it was absolutely optional with the manufacturer or designer which standard should be employed. The only reason for the adoption was the possibility of obtaining concessions from the insurance interests through the National Fire Protective Association and other similar organizations.

In a future issue we will consider the other recommendations which were made, and which should be thoroughly investigated and discussed by all interested in the industry before action of any kind is taken.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Some Considerations in the Application of Mazda Lamps to Projectors

By L. C. Porter and W. M. States

[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Rochester, N. Y., April 9, 1918, and published by kind permission of the Society.]

THE fact that there are today in operation approximately 1,000 motion picture machines using the Mazda C Lamp as a light source proves that the incandescent lamp is a success in this field. The history of the developments which were gone through to achieve this success is very interesting. Some of the lamps and apparatus, which a short time ago seemed marvelous, today appear almost crude. However, we shall not take your time to describe the discouragements and the achievements along this line during the past three years. Nor shall we devote much time to a description of the fundamental differences between the arc and the incandescent systems. This data is already more or less familiar to you, through papers presented before your Society, through articles in the trade journals, and through commercial advertising of the concerns manufacturing projection equipment.

In starting anything new there are always interesting developments which come through practice. Unforeseen difficulties arise and new methods of operation are established. It is the purpose of this paper to call attention to some of the practical considerations which have been found of material assistance in getting the best out of the incandescent projector. We wish to present data which will assist the manufacturers of motion picture equipment to realize the great advantages of accuracy in the optical system. We also hope to describe little "tricks of the trade" which will be of service to the users of projection equipment.

Few engineers or operators realize fully how closely it is possible to work with the incandescent system. In the arc system there must be more leeway. The carbon crater covers a considerably greater area than is actually necessary, so far as light utilization alone is concerned. Moreover, the arc is more or less unstable. It wanders around, and hence some allowance must be made to meet that condition. Shading by the negative carbon and feed requirements constitute a very complex handicap. In other words, with the arc it is necessary, on account of this variation, to use larger carbons and more power than would be requireed if the arc could be held in a fixed position. Each optical system has a definite area over which it will pick up light. Any flux originating outside of that area adds little to the resultant screen illumination. Let us examine (Fig. 1), a diagrammatic sketch of the optical system of a moving picture machine.

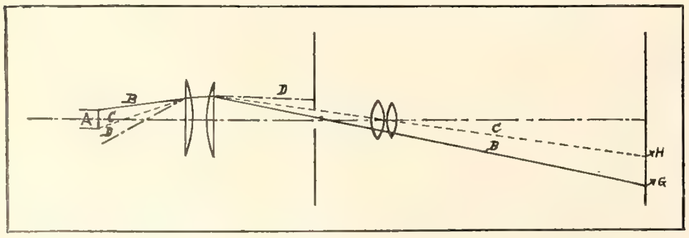

Fig. 1.—Showing limit to useful size of light-source for projector optical system

Assuming that the light originates from the arc A, the paths of the extreme rays may be indicated by lines B and C, terminating on the motion picture screen. Suppose we have another ray of light D, originating a considerable distance outside of the arc crater. It will be bent by the condensers similarly to rays B and C, and, therefore, will not fall on the objective lens and will not reach the screen. This ray of light, D, originates too far from the focal point of the condenser to be of service. It, therefore, becomes evident that there is a limit to the size of light source which can be utilized. There is a very simple method of determining that size. Let us send the light rays backward—i. e., suppose the screen were illuminated by another machine, or suppose it were made of translucent diffusing glass and lighted from behind, then the ray of light starting at point G on the screen would follow back along the path of the previous ray, B. Similarly a ray originating at point H, and so on for every point on the screen. If we replace the arc crater by a piece of ground glass or oiled paper, an image of the screen will be formed on this glass. By moving the ground glass forward and backward a point will be found where this image will be smallest and its edges sharp. That lighted area then is the maximum size area possible to utilize as a light source. All light rays originating within that area, and falling on the condenser will be projected onto the screen. It is not altogether convenient to light the screen by another machine, and, even if it is, the intensity of the reflected light finally reaching the ground glass is low. A more conveenient method is to place a piece of translucent diffusing glass (such as heavy density opal) directly in front of the objective lens and hang an ordinary Mazda lamp in front of this (Fig. 2).

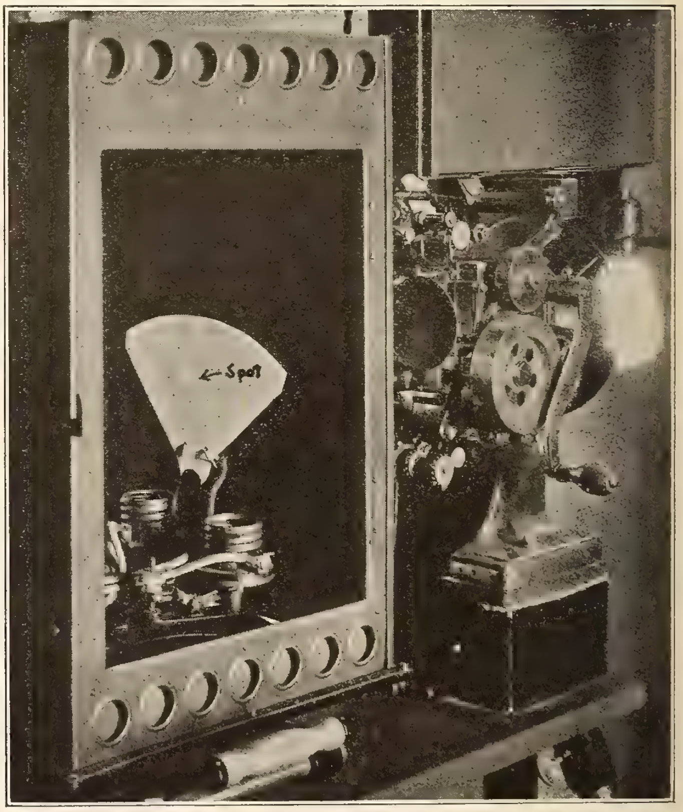

Fig. 2.—Projector arranged for back-testing. Note spot of light on translucent screen, which represents maximum source-area that can be utilized by a given system

This method of determining the useful size of light source is called back-testing. Let us take a specific example, a machine equipped with a 4½" diameter 6½" focus rear condenser lens, and a 4½" diameter 7½" focus front lens and a 1¾" diameter 5½" focus projection lens. Back-testing it we found the maximum light source size to have an area of .188 sq. in. In practice, this machine operates with ⅝" diameter carbons burning at an angle. The actual area of the crater is .368 square inches, or, in other words, it is .18 square inches, or 95 per cent. greater than the maximum, useful, light source area. This extra amount is, however, considered necessary due to the utter impossibility of keeping the arc crater fixed in one spot, and shading by the negative carbon (which is worse at low currents).

Having this extra area of light source available, slight variations in alignment of the optical system do not materially affect the total amount of resultant screen illumination, although colored borders and ghosts are apt to appear. This, however, is not so with the Mazda lamp. The filament of that light source is of fixed area, and remains exactly where it is put. Under these conditions a filament has been designed to fill exactly the useful area of the lens system. This area for the lens system in use is a square 4/10 of an inch on a side or having a total area of .16 of a square inch.

Let us suppose, for example, that in setting up the lamp in the machine an operator fails to center the lamp filament properly in the 4/10 of an inch useful area. Suppose it is 1/10 of an inch to one side. We then have only ¾ of our light source within the useful area, and this will result in a very material lowering of the screen intensity. Not only is there a loss of light, due to a portion of the filament being outside of the useful area, but also the beam projected by the condenser is bent to one side, and hence much light is spilled on the aperture plate instead of passing through the aperture. To illustrate this, the authors took a motion picture lamp, focussed it in a moving picture machine and measured the screen illumination. The lamp was then moved to one side in steps of 1/10" at a time. The following results were obtained:

Filament Centered......	Relative Light on Screen (Lumens)	100
1/10" off center.......	" " " " "	88.5
2/10" " "	" " " " "	77
3/10" " "	" " " " "	66
4/10" " "	" " " " "	38
5/10" " "	" " " " "	28

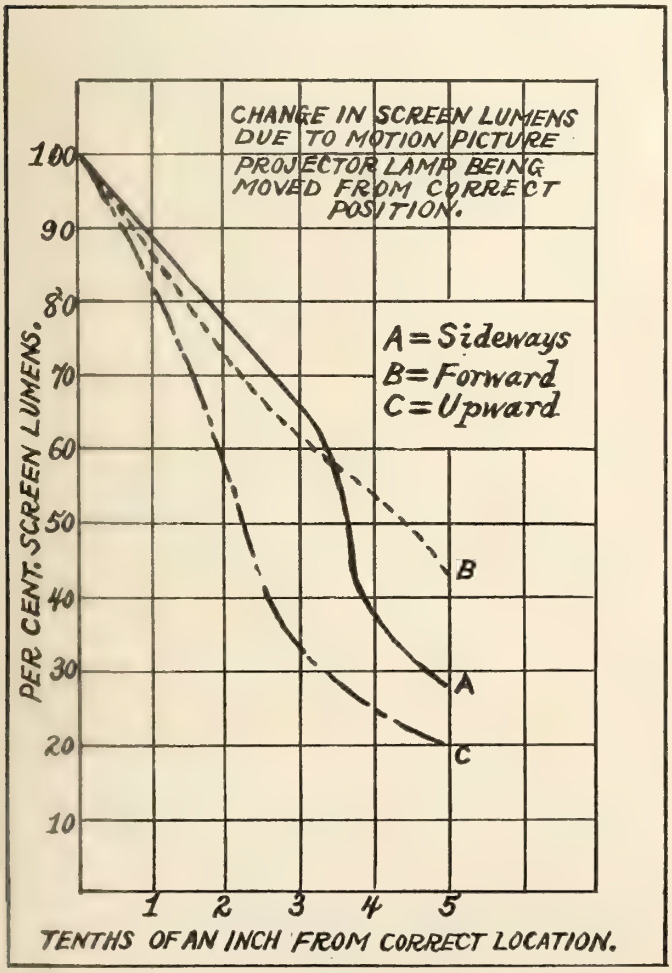

Fig. 3

If the filament is moved back of this position, an increase in screen illumination is obtained up to a point where the filament images are focussed sharply on the aperture plate. Here, however, the unevenness of the screen is so great as to be objectionable. Probably a compromise between maximum evenness and maximum illumination is acceptable. Such a compromise will result if the filament is moved back about ¼" from the point where it focuses most sharply on the shutter.

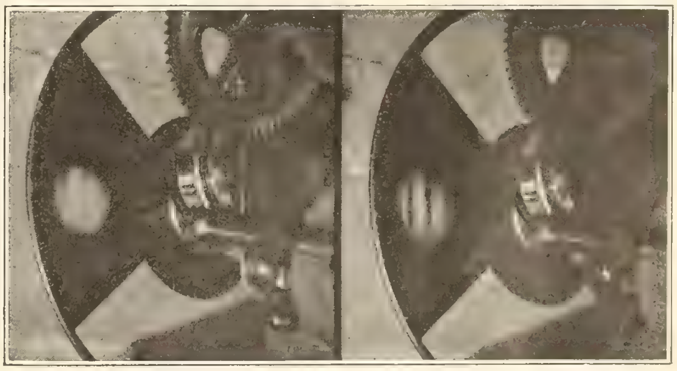
The following method may be used to locate the lamp filament: Light the lamp and set it approximately in its operating position. That is 2" in back of the edge of the 3½" diameter prismatic condenser or 2½" in back of the edge of the 4½" prismatic condenser. Place the lamp so that the plane or broad face of the filament is parallel to the front face of the condenser. Center the lamp with respect to both sides and up and down by adjustments provided on the machine for that purpose. When the filament is properly located in the horizontal and vertical directions, the spot of light on the aperture plate will have equal width on each side of the aperture and also above and below the opening (Fig. 4*a*) c should equal d.



(a) (b)

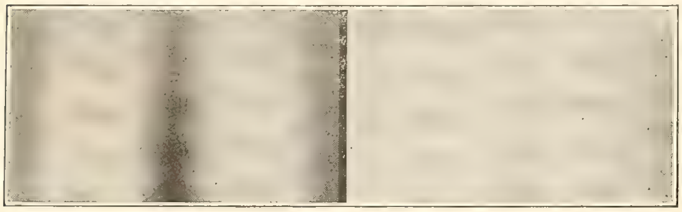
Fig. 5.—(a) Lamp-filament images properly focussed on revolving-shutter blade. (b) Space between images filled with reflected light by proper adjustment of spherical-mirror.

If these settings are not correct a larger spot is necessary to cover the aperture. For example, with the spot properly set it need be but 1¼" in diameter to cover the aperture. This means a total area of 1.21 square inches, of which 0.75 square inches of light goes through the aperture and 0.46 square inches, or 36 per cent is wasted (Fig. 4*b*). If the spot is but ⅛" too low or too high a 1$\frac{7}{16}$" diameter spot of light is necessary to cover the aperture which means an area of 1.35 square inches, hence practically 50 per cent of the available light flux is wasted (Fig. 4*c*). A similar effect occurs if the spot is too far to either side.

By means of other adjustments the lamp can be brought closer to or moved further away from the condenser. To determine when the lamp is at the correct distance from the condenser, place one wing of the rotating shutter in front of the objective lens. An image of the lamp filament will appear on this wing. This adjustment can be more satisfactorily made if the spot of light thrown by the mirror is not on the aperture plate in addition to that projected by the condenser. The mirror should be removed or turned to one side. By moving the lamp forward and back a point will be found where the image is sharpest. This is the correct operating position of the lamp. The appearance of the spot on the shutter wing should be as shown in Fig. 5*a*.

The accurate setting of the spherical mirror is also of great importance. The mirror performs two functions: It redirects that portion of the light from the lamp filament emitted backward and adds it to that projected directly on the condenser. By so doing increases of as high as 60 per cent in screen illumination have been obtained. Secondly, the reflected light fills up the spaces between the filament coils and thus evens up the resultant screen illumination.

After placing the center of the reflector in a horizontal plane with the lamp filament and the center of the condenser, the reflector should be moved forward and backward by means of adjustments provided for that purpose, until the reflected spot of light on the aperture plate is the same size as that projected by the condenser, in which position the filament image on the shutter will be of maximum sharpness. The mirror is then twisted or moved slightly sideways, until the dark spaces between the filament images on the shutter are filled with the reflected light, as in Fig. 5*b*.



(a) (b)

Fig. 6.—(a) Screen illumination when spherical-mirror is not adjusted to throw reflected images between the filament coils. (b) Appearance of screen when spherical-mirror is properly adjusted

The setting of the mirror is very important. If the mirror images fall on the lamp filament coils instead of between them, not only is this additional light cut off from the screen, but the life of the lamp may be slightly shortened due to overheating. Whether the mirror is properly set or not may easily be observed by quickly inserting and removing any opaque screen between the lamp and the mirror, noting the effect on the image on the shutter. If desired, the focusing of the lamp and mirror may also be accomplished on the screen instead of the shutter by removing the objective lens. The appearance of the screen with or without the mirror images properly set will then be as in Fig. 6, a and b.

This method of focusing results in a slightly more even distribution of light on the screen with very little decrease in average intensity. The degree of unevenness of screen illumination, when the filament is focussed on the shutter is, however, not discernible to the average eye. Tests to determine the effect on total screen illumination (neglecting the question of evenness, or otherwise, of distribution) of having the mirror improperly set gave the following results:

1/10" to one side......	" " " " "	88
2/10" " " "	" " " " "	74.5
3/10" " " "	" " " " "	74
4/10" " " "	" " " " "	74
5/10" " " "	" " " " "	74
Mirror properly located..	Relative Light on Screen (Lumens)	100
1/10" ahead..........	" " " " "	90
2/10" "	" " " " "	81
3/10" "	" " " " "	79
4/10" "	" " " " "	76
5/10" "	" " " " "	73
1/10" above..........	" " " " "	84.5
2/10" "	" " " " "	68.5
3/10" "	" " " " "	68
4/10" "	" " " " "	68
5/10" "	" " " " "	68

These values of the screen illumination for various adjustments of the mirror are shown graphically by the curves in Fig. 7.

Proper Location for Projector Shutter

G. Woodbury, Pomeroy, Ia., "Would you please give me your opinion as to where the revolving shutter should be located? Some operators claim it should be set as close to the lens as possible, while others maintain that it should be at the dissolving point of the projected beam. I have experimented with it at both these places and I believe that the result is better when it is located at the dissolving point. You have no doubt tried both of these positions and have come to a conclusion as to which is best."

Reply: When a projector shutter of the outside type is so mounted that it cuts the projected light beam at the so-called dissolving point, i. e., at the image of the front condenser surface formed some distance in front of the projection objective, the screen illumination is not cut off abruptly from side to side as the shutter blade passes through the beam, but is gradually diminished all over the area of the projected disc, which becomes so faintly illuminated as to appear altogether dark before the shutter blade has passed entirely through the beam. The theory of this dissolving effect will be gone into on a future occasion, but its practical significance is that a shutter with slightly narrower blades than are customarily used will serve to cut off all visible illumination from the screen before the projected beam has been entirely masked, if this shutter is so placed as to cut the projected beam at the locus of the image of the front condenser surface. As the use of narrower shutter blades permits the condition for the elimination of flicker to be more nearly approximated than is the case with shutters of customary dimensions, it would seem to be highly desirable that the shutter be always mounted to rotate in the plane of the condenser image, but in practical operating certain drawbacks to a strict adherence to this dictum become apparent.

In the first place it requires to be pointed out that the only advantage of the arrangement under consideration is the opportunity which it affords of approximating to no-flicker conditions by permitting a slight reduction in the width of the shutter blades. If, however, the shutter blades are not reduced in width, no improvement is effected in the screen results by placing the shutter at the so-called dissolving point of the projected beam, or, in other words, the results will be substantially the same as if the shutter were mounted close to the lens, Thus it is seen that under some circumstances, as for instance when an objective of short E. F. is used, it is not feasible to locate the shutter at the plane of the condenser image, because in the case of short focus objectives the projected beam commences to diverge so rapidly that no reduction in the width of the shutter blades is possible.

Again, with other objectives and arrangements of the projector optical system, the image of the front condenser surface is sometimes found to be located 12 or 18 inches, or more, in front of the jected beam at the so-called dissolving point. There seems at first glance to be no objection to extending the shutter spindle forwards in this manner, but it is soon found in practice that a shutter located so far from its actuating gears subjects the shutter gears to considerable strain, which shortly results in serious wear. It is possible, however, to attach a special bracket to the projector mechanism which will allow the shutter spindle to run in a bearing located somewhere near the shutter itself, and in this case most of the strain on the shutter gears is removed. In most cases, it is carrying things to ridiculous extremes, however, to mount a projector shutter 18 inches or more in front of the objective, for the improvement in results is very slight in any case.

Saskatchewan Operators Required to Pass License Examination

WE are in receipt of the following communication from Mr. R. W. Helme, of Regina, Saskatchewan, which sets forth the requirements of the recently established law regulating the issuance of licenses to operators within that province.

After April 1 any person desiring to become an operator of a moving picture machine may obtain an apprentice's license from the Provincial Secretary, but an operator's license shall not be granted until such applicant has successfully passed an examination before an examiner, who shall, from observation as well as by questioning, ascertain the candidate's competency by testing his practical knowledge of the following subjects:

(1) The handling of the lamp, appliances and wiring.
(2) Wire sizes and insulations.
(3) Testing for electrical defects in lamp and wiring.
(4) The use of the various safety appliances, mechanical and electrical.
(5) General precautions to be observed in operating moving picture apparatus and its connections.

The fee for such examination shall be $5.00. No candidate who fails to pass an examination shall be re-examined within three months of such examination. Candidates who pass the examination shall be graded into three classes, viz., first, second and third, according to the percentage of marks obtained in the examination. First class operators shall be eligible for employment in any theatre and by itinerant exhibitors, who shall employ only this class of operator. Second class operators shall be eligible for employment only in theatres in towns and villages, and third class operators only in theatres in villages. In the case where the applicant holds or has held an operator's license from any other province or country, on submitting satisfactory evidence of his standing to the Provincial Secretary, a third class license for this province may be granted such applicant without an examination.

World Pictures Better Service Plan Arouses Interest Among Operators

BETTER service in the way of cleaner films, intact titles and leaders, etc., has been secured and an intense interest among the country's motion picture operators has been aroused by the "Better Service" campaign inaugurated by World Pictures some time ago and continued with ever-increasing success from month to month.

In this a close record is kept of the condition in which operators return World film to the World branches and to those operators whose record for the month shows the most care in the handling of the film a prize of valuable merchandise is awarded.

Although the idea involves a great amount of bookkeeping on the part of the World branches, it is felt that the results attained far more than compensate for the time, trouble and expense involved. Not only has the contest had a splendid result in securing a better service for World Pictures theatres, but it has bettered film conditions generally. Operators everywhere, as a result of this contest, are realizing how important they are to a theatre's success, and are taking increasing care and pride in the manner in which they handle the film coming to them from day to day.

Winners in the World Pictures "Better Service" contest for March are: John J. Bowler, Opera House, Rockland, Mass.; J. S. Danie, 224 Berkshire Street, Bridgeport, Conn.; W. C. Marcuson,

"Real Operators"

Mr. Verner Hicks, Marion, Ill., a member of the National Anti-Misframe League, writes as follows:

"As a member of the League I wish to report a little incident that happened several days ago.

"Some time ago, after using a Universal single reel, I pasted one of our report blanks in the lid of the film box before returning. About two or three weeks later the same box came back to me, and on the label was written: 'We need real operators, not a Mis-frame League.—C. Rutledge, I. A. T. S. E. 135.' [Sedalia, Mo.] I will agree with friend Rutledge in this, but, as there are not enough real operators, we also need a League or something to keep the films in running condition for those cheap managers who will not pay a salary to attract a real operator.

Comment: It is all too true that many managers do not appreciate the importance of skill and brains in the operating room, and that some managers who appreciate the importance of employing skilled operators are apparently not willing to pay a fair price for high class work.

The progress of the National Anti-Misframe League is, however, a proof that operators throughout the country are giving serious attention to the requirements of their profession, and it is a sign of unprogressiveness and lack of appreciation of the requirements of modern photoplay presentation for any operator to go upon record as not endorsing the aims of the League.

We are forced to conclude, therefore, that Mr. Rutledge does not belong in the class of "real operators" of which he speaks, because at the present stage of the game no "real operator" would admit that he did not give his films thorough attention before screening them, and no "real operator" is opposed to co-operating with exchanges and his fellow craftsmen to the end that improvements may be brought about in the condition of films. By using the label of the N. A. M. L. in a futile attempt to propagate his antiquated and unprofessional ideas Mr. Rutledge has brought upon himself what is probably an unwelcome notoriety, but should he chance to read these lines our message is: "Welcome to the National Anti-Misframe League and progressive ideals, Mr. Rutledge. Let us have that application for League membership today."

Illuminate Your Screen with Artificial Daylight

TO GET PERFECT, CLEAR-CUT PICTURES ON ALTERNATING CURRENT—PICTURES THAT ARE PLEASING TO THE EYE

USE

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

These carbons give maximum screen illumination and will project perfectly the modern photo-play film. Their noiseless operation plus the economy they effect make them the most popular carbons on the market.

The use of the artificial daylight given by the White A. C. Specials necessitates absolutely no change in equipment. Simply change the carbons, using these new carbons in the place of the old A. C. carbons. You need not change your lamphouse, lenses or screen.

If you are getting poor results on alternating current, try these carbons and compare results with the old, roaring A. C. arc.

Please remember: White A. C. Special Carbons Are for Alternating Current Only.

Artificial Light in the Motion Picture Studio

By Max Mayer

[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Rochester, April 9, 1918.]

Installation of Equipment

FIRST of all let us deal with the manner of installing the overhead lights, as this seems to be a source of worry to everyone equipping an artificially lighted studio.

An overhead carriage or trolley system which facilitates the free and easy movement of the individual lamps or banks, both longitudinally and transversely through the studio, and which provides for the convenient raising and lowering of the lamps; that is the problem usually handed to the architect, or contractor.

After ascertaining the weight of the lamps, the weight of the structure required to move and support them grouped in most any position over an area, usually of 5,000 square feet or more, he finds this a weighty problem in more than one sense; often requiring reinforcement of the building structure to provide for the added weight.

Suitable means must also be provided for carrying the current to the lamps in all positions, and when the installation is to be made in a glass studio it must not obstruct the sunlight nor cast shadows.

When it comes to the reckoning, a system meeting all these requirements will cost a very substantial sum and should be planned by a skilled structural engineer, guided by someone well versed in the requirements of the studio.

In one of the modern studios in the East, the lamps are hung from four independent transverse carriages, each movable longitudinally through the studio. Each carriage is provided with a platform, easily reached from a fixed platform with stairway on one side-wall of the studio running the entire length. From these platforms the electrician has access to the lamps, electrical connections and raising and lowering devices. The individual lamps are hung in tracks on these transverse carriages and are thus movable to any position across the width of the studio. Each lamp takes its current through contact shoes from properly protected bare copper feeders strung along the carriages. These feeders on the movable carriages pick up the current through larger contact shoes from a set of stationary bare copper mains strung along the side-wall and connecting with the switchboard. The top lights are thus all controlled from one switch.

When a light effect is called for, requiring one of a number of top lights, controlled independent of the rest, provision is made for this in the following manner:

Each lamp is connected to its respective contact shoes through a separable plug with a short piece of flexible cable. In the center of the studio, throughout its length and above the transverse carriages, there is an auxiliary feeder run in conduit, from which are hung at intervals, pendant cables terminating in sockets which fit the plugs attached to the lamps. Thus, any of the carriages may be moved to a desired position, one or more lamps thereon disconnected from the trolley feeder and plugged through the nearest available pendant sockets to the auxiliary feeder which is under separate switch control on the board.

This equipment has proven quite satisfactory, but is cited here merely as an example and not for any superiority over numerous other methods now in use.

In the dark studio, where sunlight is never available to the camera, it is practicable to dispense with the carriage system by lining or studding the ceiling with lights properly spaced and wired for individual control, so that wherever a set may be placed on the floor, top light is provided by simply switching on the desired lamps. Provision should, however, be made for raising and lowering the lamps individually, to meet the various conditions.

Floor Lamps

It is hardly appropriate to suggest here either the kind or quantity of lamps required for any assumed condition, but it is important that all floor lamps be sturdy in construction and light enough in weight to be readily portable. They should be fitted with easy running swivelled rollers of large diameter so that they will readily ride over floor obstacles.

The lamps are continuously moved from place to place and ease of handling is very much desired.

Stage cables of twenty-five feet length or more are usually attached to the lamps and dragged about with them. It seems a good suggestion to fit each cable with a separable plug close to the lamp, so that the lamps and cables may be separately moved and quickly reconnected.

Distribution of Current to Floor Lamps

A simple, safe and flexible arrangement of current distribution, devised by the writer several years ago, is described as follows:

Along both side walls of the studio a series of plugging boxes is arranged. Each box consists of a three-wire 100 ampere (per side) plugging pocket, fed by rigidly installed wires from the switchboard. The boxes should not be more than fifteen to twenty feet apart and about four feet above the floor. The pocket openings should be downward. This will prevent their being used for ash trays or storage receptacles.

To each of these pockets is fitted a three-wire plug attached to a three-wire stage cable of equal capacity, 20 to 30 feet in length. Each of these cables terminates in a portable spider, or plugging box, having four two-wire pockets each of fifty ampere capacity.

The plugs fitting these pockets are attached to the lamps by stage cables of suitable length, usually about twenty-five feet. In this way each wall pocket would supply four lamps of fifty amperes or less with a large radius of movement for the lamps.

The switchboard is fitted, in addition to the top-light switches, with one switch for each plugging pocket, each switch being triple pole double throw, with the blades connecting to the plugging pocket. One throw of each switch is connected to a set of bus-bars fed through a master switch, the other throw of each switch is connected to a separate set of bus-bars, fed either through another master switch or direct from the service.

This enables the electrician to set his switches and lamps so that upon a signal being given he can turn on or off a portion of the lights in a set without disturbing the rest; so that a light-change can be played in a scene. In the old days this was usually done by holding the action, stopping the camera until the light-change was made and then resuming action.

Before concluding, I want to dwell upon the use of alternating current in the studio.

In the third report of the Society Proceedings a reference is made in Paragraph 6—Electrical Devices Committee Report on the use of alternating current in the projection arc. The objections cited apply here with only this difference —that in projection there seems no real remedy except converting or rectifying the A. C. to direct current, while in the studio the remedy is simple on account of the plurality of the light sources. All that is needed, to overcome the phase flicker, is a two-phase installation with the lamps properly connected up.

The exposure variations resulting from phase flicker become particularly pronounced on close-up dissolves and fades. This is due to the variations in the exposure period as the shutter opening in the camera is varied, and as close ups are often made with a single lamp, a flicker results, which is much more pronounced than that in A. C. projection, where at least the shutter value is constant.

To obviate this, never use a single lamp on alternating current, but always arrange the lamps in pairs connected on opposite phases. The results will surely justify your taking the trouble to see that this suggestion is carried out.

In conclusion, I want to say a word in behalf of the man who turns the camera crank. This subject intimately concerns him; for he is the one who assumes almost all of the responsibility of the lighting. If he is to carry the blame for failures he should also have the exclusive say as to the arrangement of the lights.

Let the cameraman make himself thoroughly conversant with lighting and the physical characteristics thereof which aid or disturb the results he seeks to attain, so that the director may be justified in entrusting to him this important phase of the work.

Thus, let Science wait on art and good judgment on both.

Kliegl Brothers Issue New Catalogue of Stage and Lighting Effects

STAGE and Studio Lighting Apparatus and Electrical Effects, is the title of a new catalogue issued by the Universal Electric Stage Lighting Company, 240 West Fiftieth street, New York.

It illustrates and describes the many new developments in stage lighting and effects which have been recently introduced. The popularity and remarkable present-day successes of many theatre productions, dramas and, particularly, musical comedies, are largely attributed to the modern developments of stage lighting.

Among the accessories described are the well-known Kliegl spot lights, electrical effects, pockets and plugs, connectors, border lights, proscenium lights, disappearing footlights, act announcers, fire logs, reflectors, electric carriage calls and Klieglight Lilliput and arc lamps, with accessories for use in motion photography.

The aim of the proprietors has been to make each article that they manufacture, bearing their trade name, "Kliegl Bros.," to be the best of its kind, and that they have succeeded is proved by the fact that Kliegl Bros. apparatus is practically a standard on the American stage.

New Machine Gives Different Size Picture

Mr. R. C. Hedrick, Odin, Ill., writes: "I had an old Edison machine which I recently replaced with a new Powers 5. Although I am using the same lenses, the picture on the screen is considerably smaller with the new machine.

"Has the size of the condensers anything to do with the size of the picture? Has the distance from condensers to aperture or from condensers to the projection lens anything to do with the size of the picture? Or has the way the condensers are mounted in the Edison machine anything to do with the size of the picture? They were mounted with the convex sides of both lenses away from the arc but with the new machine the convex faces of the condensers are together."

In Reply: The size of a projected motion picture image is governed by three factors, i.e., the E. F. of the projection lens; the width of the machine aperture (or, more strictly, the diagonal), and the length of the throw. In changing from the Edison to the Powers machine the correspondent has retained the same projection lenses, but it is possible and very probable that both the size of the machine aperture and the length of the throw are slightly different under the new conditions. Inasmuch as the correspondent has supplied no data as to the alteration in the size of his screen picture, the exact cause of the decrease in dimensions cannot be specified, but the aperture of the Powers machine is probably a little smaller than the aperture of its predecessor, and it is also likely that the new machine is located closer to the front wall of the operating room than was formerly the case. Either of these conditions would produce a change in the size of the projected picture.

Coming next to the questions propounded by the correspondent, the size, location, and method of mounting the condensers have nothing to do with the size of the projected picture, although these factors can influence the quality and quantity of the screen illumination. It appears that the correspondent has not made a study of projector optics when he states that with his Edison machine the convex surfaces of the condensers were both turned away from the arc. Doubtless he found them so situated when he assumed charge of the machine, and in the absence of proper knowledge of the optical system was afraid to alter the existing arrangement. The correspondent may be assured, however, that when a combination of two plano-convex condensers is used they should be mounted with the convex surfaces inwards, facing one another, and with the vertices almost in contact.

Music and the Picture

Review of Latest Publications

1—"Stolen Sweets," a beautiful and melodious waltz movement by Harry von Tilzer. (Published by Harry von Tilzer.)

2—"In a Garden of Shadows and Tears," by A. Manlowe, a very attractive melody of pathetic character. (Vandersloot Publishing Company, Williamsport, Pa.)

3—"Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," by Theodore Morse; every musician knows the famous old song hit—"We Won't Come Home Till Morning"—"Hail, Hail," is better. (Leo Feist edition.)

4—"We're After You," by Lloyd; one of those typical up-to-date march songs—most appropriate for cartoons of a political character. (Jeff Branen, editor, 145 W. 45th street, N. Y. C.)

5—"Buy a Liberty Bond for the Baby"—Harry von Tilzer's latest hit—as popular as the "Liberty Bonds."

7—"Chasing the Chickens," a great jazz number published by Forster Music Company, Chicago, Ill.

8—"A Russian Pansy," by Otto Langey. An attractive and new intermezzo, melodious and most appropriate for love scene. (G. Schirmer edition.)

9—"Ching, Chong," a great "jazz" one-step and popular favorite. (Richmond Music Company, 147 W. 45th street, N. Y. C.)

Musical Score for "Venus"

Among the various exhibitor aids being provided for the release of Edwin Bower Hesser's "The Triumph of Venus," with Betty Lee starred, is a fine musical score, especially devised for this picture. The atmosphere of beauty which is the graphic attraction of this feature will be enhanced, announces General Film Company, the distributor, by the carefully selected music arranged to accompany the screen presentation.

This music has been timed for use with the picture in its popular five-reel form, and the various moods of the gods and goddesses on Olympus, the denizens of the underground regions, the nymphs at play in the sylvan pools.

An early release announcement is expected from General Film.

Sergeant Empey Versatile "Guy"

Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, the original human dynamo, and star of the Vitagraph production of "Over the Top," has broken out in a new place. The man who fought the Hun for eighteen months and suffered seven wounds has turned song writer, and in the near future will turn out lyrics for six songs for Jos. W. Stern & Company, the well known publishers. The first of these will carry the title, "Your Lips Are 'No Man's Land' But Mine," and the royalties that accrue to Empey will be donated by him to the American Red Cross and other war relief organizations and charities.

When Empey bursts into song he will have the palm for versatility, his score to date being as follows: Soldier, author, lecturer, motion picture star, Liberty loan salesman, Red Cross worker, smoke fund booster, recruiting agent, special writer, and lyricist.

Ever since he wrote "Over the Top," most famous of all the soldier narratives so far produced, Empey has been one of the hardest working patriots in the country. He followed his book with lectures to hundreds of thousands of people, and then appeared in the film version of his book, produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and directed by Wilfred North. It has just finished a record run of four weeks at the Lyric theatre, New York. This picture, showing the realities of trench fighting and the tragedies of No Man's Land, is bound to prove a big asset to the Government.

Empey is at all times the soldier's friend and pal, and his work for the various smoke funds is one of the finest things he has done. By his appeals he has raised thousands of dollars for smokes and with the amounts he has brought in to the Red Cross his efforts in behalf of the soldiers have resulted in contributions of approximately $100,000. In the second Liberty loan drive he sold more than $1,000,000 in bonds and he is out to double this in the present campaign.

Where he finds time to do all the things he does is a mystery, but he is just as strong as he is magnetic, and when he puts his hand to song-writing he most likely will do the job just as thoroughly as he fought the Hun and performed his other numerous tasks.

In addition to his first song, "Your Lips Are 'No Man's Land' But Mine," he is working now on the lyrics for two others, entitled "Up and At Them" and "We're In It to Win It."

Valuable Addition to Your Library

Most every leader that is wide awake and is making a success of his business is on the lookout for music that will help him build up his line of work; there is no doubt that every progressive musician is looking for something "new" and "unique" in its construction—something out of the beaten path.

I also know that the greatest difficulty to be encountered in the work of Picture Music is the accumulation of a proper musical repertoire.

Being aware of this fact, I wish to call the attention of every musician to an edition of Hurries and Furiosos, recently published by the "Cinema Music Company," Columbia Theatre Building, New York City.

These numbers known as the "Cinema De Luxe Edition" are compositions of exceptional musical merit, with a total playing time of at least 5 minutes, without repeats. They are written with an "Aftermath" or "Coda," maintaining the

The Office and Sales Force of the American Photoplayer Company Gave a Liberty Loan Dance April 6, at Which Many Thousands Were Subscribed character of the composition in a subdued manner, and thereby enabling the musician to make the transition into the next number without a too abrupt finish.

This "Aftermath" or "Coda" is also playable at the end of any strain or movement. This in my estimation is a very important factor, due to the fact that in most cases the battle or fight scene is longer or shorter than the composition, and the "Aftermath" can then be played and serve as a modulation into the next number whenever necessary.

The first number of this edition entitled "Military Hurry" (for battle scenes) is now ready and is obtainable at a special advertised rate of 60 cents for small, and 80 cents for full, and 25 cents for piano or organ.

Serving the purpose of this department, which is here to help all, I earnestly suggest that every musician avail himself of a copy of this "Military Hurry," which I consider the most valuable addition to any Music Library. Just think of a battle scene, lasting through a half reel and not having the trouble of playing the same hurry 5 or 6 times, and I am sure you will appreciate my suggestion.

Music Cues vs. the Exhibitor

The importance of appropriate and suitable music for motion pictures is one of the most essential factors in the exhibition of motion pictures.

The enormous variety of subjects presented on the screen, the wealth of possibilities from a musical standpoint, and the increased effectiveness of exhibiting through the right kind of music, was and is the only factor that has induced us to create the music cue service in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. More and more it has been brought to our attention that we have in the music pages published in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS a wonderful aid to exhibitors, of which some of them are not taking advantage. We are getting letters from all over the country, from musicians who have used this music page, saying that it is the most beneficial thing MOTION PICTURE NEWS can give them.

Our Music Cues are compiled by an expert. They can not be considered as advertising mediums for the music of certain music publishers, the reason being the fact that in selecting the music for our cues we do not only give the title of the musical number, but also clearly specify the character of the number suggested so to enable the musician to substitute with a number of a similar kind if he does not possess the one mentioned.

In a recent conversation with S. L. Rothapfel, Manager of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York City, Mr. Rothaphel commented as follows about the special significance of real good music in connection with motion pictures.

"Music is the all-important feature in this kind of an enterprise and it is a pity that exhibitors do not give this subject more careful attention. I know of very few theatres in the United States where I can sit back in my chair and thoroughly enjoy the music for a picture."

Mr. Exhibitor, we wish you to bear this fact in your mind that Mr. Rothapfel is not the only one who condemns your ideas as far as music is concerned, it is your patron—your ticket buyer who does the same thing. It is up to you to help your musicians and to see to it that your music is, if not a predominating, at least an important feature of your show. Give your musician the music page of the NEWS; call his attention to it—it means no extra expense to you, but it surely will help your show. By doing so, you will in a very short time notice the difference in the attitude of your audience. When music is played which is adapted to the photoplay, your audience will go out and talk about it, and in a few weeks you will find that it also makes a big difference in your receipts. You all realize that the effect of a motion picture is heightened to an extraordinary degree if each situation represented therein is brought into proper atmosphere, and that this result can be attained only through the rendition of good program music selected with special reference to the varied settings of the picture, but experience has demonstrated that most managers and theatre owners invariably cut down on their music just as soon as their box-office receipts show any signs of diminishing. They do not seem to know that it is possible to make music a special attraction and that the public invariably enjoys and is willing to pay for hearing a good concert.

Give your musicians the music cues, get the first performance perfect, don't experiment in the presence of your audience in trying to improve your music with each successive performance, your show will never be perfect, as by the time your experiments have brought a fairly good result, the picture has finished its run, and an unknown film takes its place, and the process, if repeated too often will sicken even the most conscientious musician. He will get lazy and incompetent and in despair will give up this struggle and resign to playing musical doggerel. It is up to you to change these conditions, if they exist, and if not, improve. Remember, Mr. Exhibitor, good music makes good pictures better. Give the public double value, a fine show, and a good concert.

—THE EDITORS.

General Comments

Practically all of the better class of vaudeville houses throughout the country have signified their intention of paying the tax to the Authors and Composers' Society for the privilege of using the musical numbers issued by members of the society.

William Jerome has quit the publishing field to join the staff of Leo Feist. He and Jack Mahoney are collaborating on some new songs. Feist has acquired the publishing rights of several of Jerome's old numbers.

Vincent Sherwood, the professional manager for the McKinley Music Co., is working hard to make "Daddy, I Ain't Mad," a real jazz hit. It is the sort of a song that Sophie Tucker sings into popularity.

When one well known song writer heard that Irving Berlin, Howard Johnson, and several other song writers had joined the army, he remarked: "There'll be a hot time for the old song writers when the new song writers go to war."

L. Wolfe Gilbert and Anatol Friedland have made a business record for themselves. Since the first of December, when they opened offices, they have landed three real winners in "Are You from Heaven?" "You've Been Your Mother's Baby Long Enough," and "I'm the Brother of Lily of the Valley." For motion picture work the melody of the baby song is a wonder.

At the Royal theatre two weeks ago Sophie Tucker sold $112,000 worth of Liberty Bonds. The first half of last week at the Riverside she disposed of $90,000 worth of Liberty Bonds.

F. J. A. Forster, the Chicago publisher, has returned from the coast. "Missouri Waltz," which he publishes, has outsold any instrumental number ever issued. "Blue Rose Waltz," by Frederick Knight Logan, the Waltz King of America, promises to give "Missouri Waltz" a stiff fight for first honors.

"There's Always Something Doing Down in Dixieland" is a new novelty number published by Jos. W. Stern & Co. Private Frederick Rath, author of "When the Moon is Shining Somewhere in France," published by the same firm, is arranging to have one of his war sketches produced.

Fred Vandersloot, the genial publisher of Williamsport, Pa., writes that he never saw a number get such a splendid start as did his latest composition, "Nona." His "Love's Melody" is selling better than ever and is becoming a fixture on most musical programs.

The A. J. Stasny Music Co. has moved into the offices in the Strand Theatre building formerly occupied by the William Jerome Music Corporation. Stasny's "Parlez Vous" song has become a real hit.

"In the Makins' of the U. S. A.," Harry Von Tilzer feels that he has one of the real hits of the war songs. And it makes a good instrumental number.

About two years ago Ernest Bruer wrote "When the War Breaks Out in Mexico I'm Off for Montreal." Today Bruer is in the army and doing his little bit in France.

The two bands at the Grand Central Palace appear to be shy of good music, especially live war numbers. It might be a good idea for some of the song "Pluggers" to give the bands the "once over."

"If He Can Fight as He Can Love" is the latest war song put out by Leo Feist, and if the way singers are going after it is any criterion of its future success, there is nothing for the firm to worry about.

L. Wolfe Gilbert and Anatol Friedland are doing their share in writing war songs, their latest being "Who's Afraid of the Kaiser?"

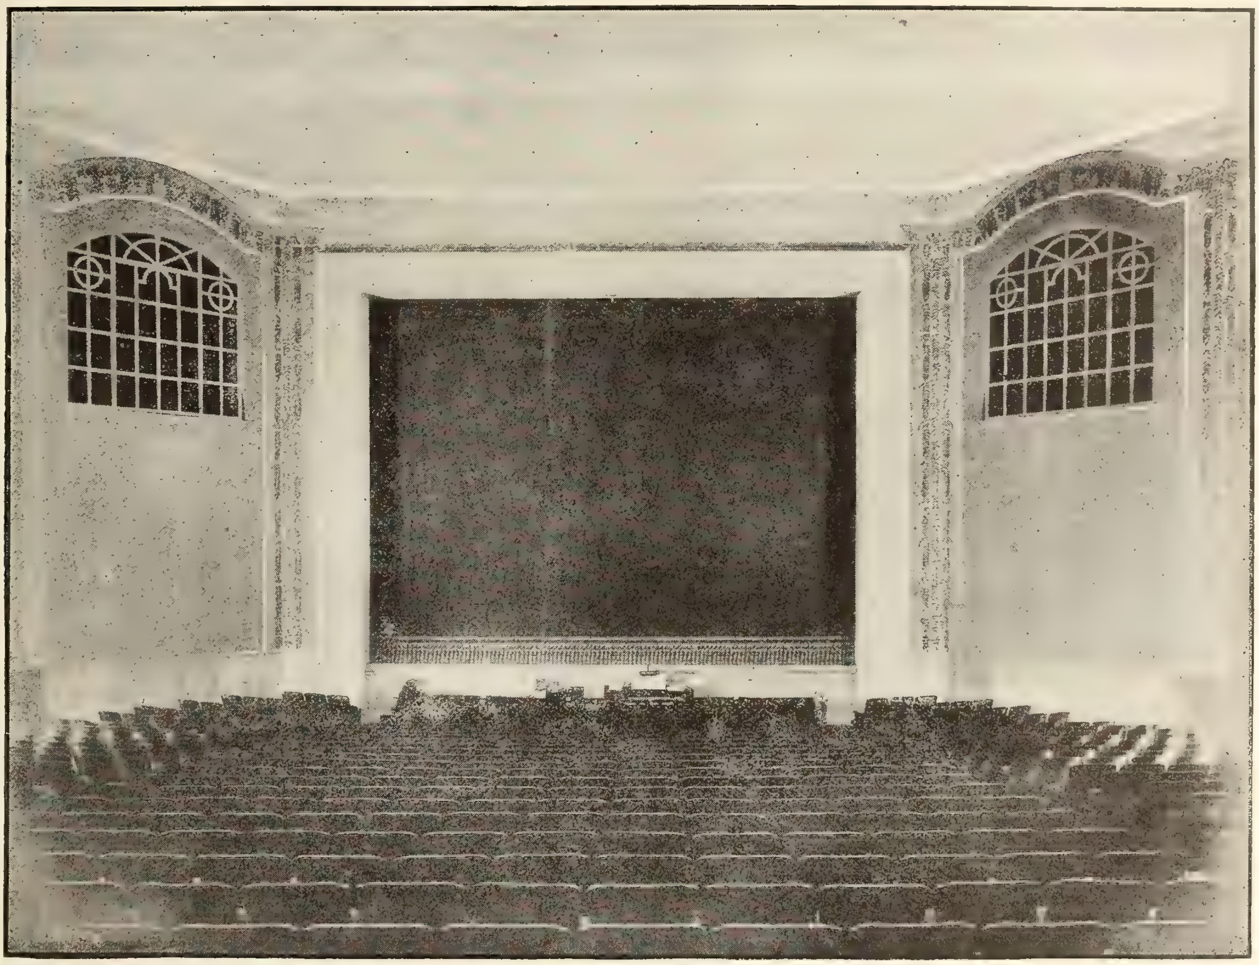
THE BARTOLA
Gives music for every possible musical situation under the instant control of one player
Write for particulars.
CHAS. C. PYLE, General Sales Agent, 707-712 Mallers Bldg., Chicago, Ill. Factory, Oshkosh, Wis.



This is one of the first-class successful Boston theatres using the Estey Theatre Organ. The organ pipes are behind the grille shown on each side of the stage. This theatre is about to enlarge its seating capacity, so successful have its offerings been, in which success the Estey Organ has played a prominent part.

Make your people enjoy themselves

Let them hear as well as see. You get the best pictures for your house. Do you not also want the best music? The best music for motion picture theatres is unquestionably

THE ESTEY THEATRE ORGAN

In hundreds of theatres it is delighting crowds nightly, interpreting pictures with music.

Use it for the music that goes with the pictures. Use it for a music program in addition to pictures—for an overture at the beginning, for music between pictures, for music during the intermission. No matter what kind of entertainment you give, The Estey Organ will make it better and draw more people. It can be built to fit any theatre.

Without cost to you we will send an expert to look at your theatre, tell you what kind of an organ you could use best, and give you an estimate of the cost. We will also tell you some theatre near you that has an Estey Organ, so you can go and hear it and judge for yourself.

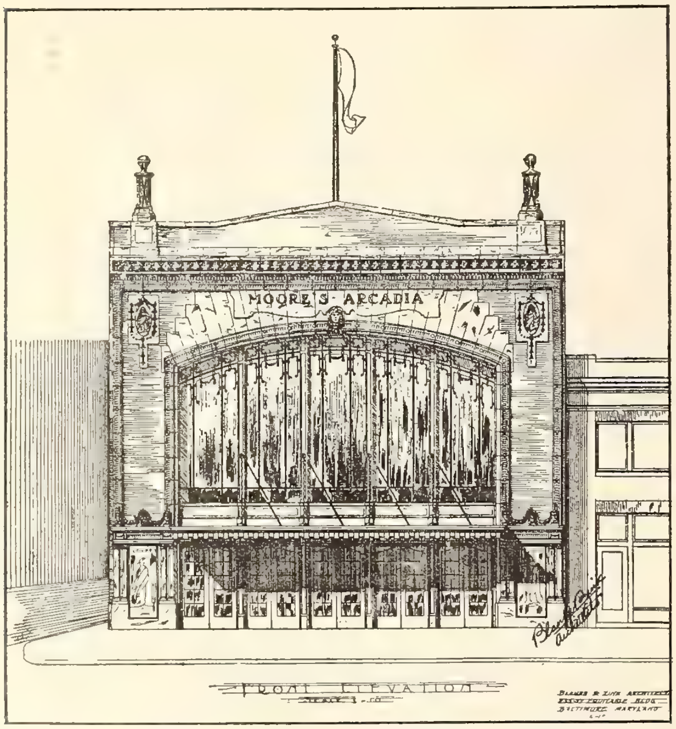
Theatres Worth While

Tom Moore Building Still Another

TOM MOORE is to have still another theatre in Washington. He already owns the Strand, Garden and Plaza, and the Rialto, which will have a seating capacity of 2,000 on the main floor alone, is rapidly nearing completion. Now comes the announcement that he has begun construction on still another downtown house in the heart of Washington's fashionable shopping district, to be known as Moore's Arcadia.

It is the intention of Moore's Theatre Corporation to make the Arcadia the symbol in Washington of elegance in design, equipment and furnishing and of the finest the motion picture in America and Europe can afford in the way of cinema entertainment. The new house will not be of the size of Moore's Rialto, rapidly nearing completion, but will provide a seating capacity of something less than 1,000 and cater particularly to those who appreciate and desire photoplay diversion amid surroundings of refinement and artistic beauty such as the Capital has never had.



Architect's Drawing of Moore's Arcadia Theatre, Washington, D. C.

The Arcadia will have an entrance frontage of forty-five feet on F street, with a lobby leading directly into the main auditorium, which will have a depth sufficient to insure perfect picture projection and a dome ceiling approximately fifty feet high equipped with the latest type ventilating system.

The F street front of the house will be of a new-process decorative stucco, surmounted by a handsome marquee, and the interior furnishings will be exclusively of the Adam period, with a general color scheme of old rose, gold and white. The orchestra chairs will harmonize with the color tone of the house and will be of tapestry velour.

Special provision has been made for elaborate lighting effect, a complete indirect system to be installed with arrangement perfected for flood-treatment to blend with the predominating tint of the picture being shown upon the screen.

The stage setting will be one of the most beautiful ever seen in Washington. It combines with the most exquisite color treatment novel art-lamp illumination, which is so devised that it may continue throughout the showing of the pictures without impairing their clearness upon the screen. This skillful neutralization of the vivid contrast between the brightly illuminated screen and total darkness on all sides overcomes all tendency to eye-strain, in addition to furnishing effective dressing for the picture.

In addition to a large orchestra of solo artists the Arcadia will be equipped with a giant pipe organ and a grand piano, thus insuring an ensemble strength adequate to the most exacting score that any feature photoplay might require.

There will, of course, be spacious rest rooms for both ladies and gentlemen, handsomely decorated and exquisitely furnished in the same general color and period schemes as the body of the house.

"Washington has never had a motion picture theatre in the conduct of which the primary consideration has been the creation and maintenance of an atmosphere of artistic beauty and elegance such as one might expect in a handsome private drawing room," said Mr. Moore in discussing his new project. "It is precisely that lack that we are going to supply in the Arcadia. It is to be the gem of the Capital's picture playhouses, not so large as our Rialto, for example, but equal to that house in all essentials except capacity and stage dimensions. The location I deem the best in Washington, and the builders have signed an ironclad guarantee to have the house ready for occupancy within three months. Abnormal conditions in this city rendered it impossible to house the tenants who necessarily were compelled to vacate the premises to enable us to proceed, and difficulty in securing desired materials owing to stress of war orders was, at first, encountered, and the breaking of ground at Eleventh and F streets has therefore been deferred from time to time since the first of the year, but such hindrances now have all been cleared away and the Arcadia will be rushed to completion."

Liberty Excellent Small City Theatre

ELECTRA, Texas, a city of 5,000, has a creditable theatre in the Liberty which seats 465 and has all of the conveniences of the best theatres in the leading cities.

Front of the theatres is in plaster relief and stucco with tile side walls and tile floor. At night the front of the house is brilliantly illuminated with myriads of lights. The interior is done in panel effects with huge pilasters crowned with plaster relief heads. The main auditorium is over one hundred feet in length, affording ample space, and the general color schemes followed in the decorations are light green, ivory and gold. The stage is equipped with modern lift scenery, and though motion pictures form the permanent attraction, vaudeville and road attractions appear from time to time.

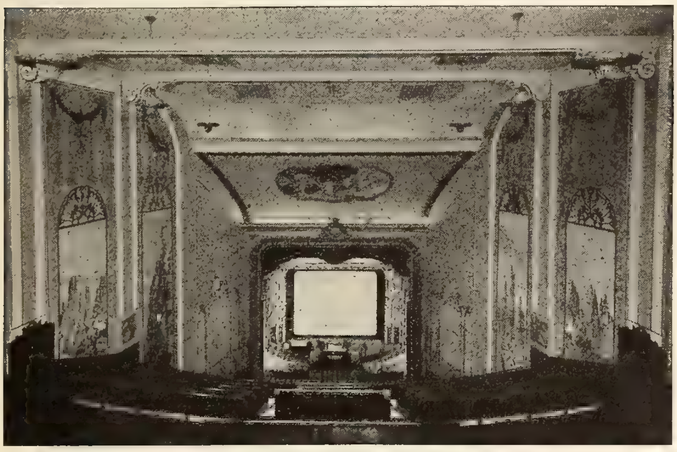
The operating room is built entirely of reinforced concrete, making it entirely fireproof. All the wiring is in conduit set in concrete with flush switch cabinets. Two Motiograph machines are used.

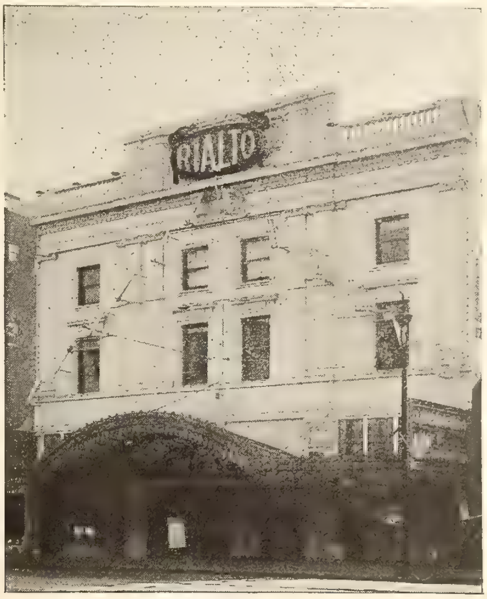
One of the principal features of the theatre is the music, which is furnished by a $4,000 Wurlitzer pipe organ. The ticket-selling booth is equipped with the National ticket selling machine.

Rialto Theatre Scores in San Francisco

From the name of Rialto, one familiar with moving picture circles naturally expects the Rialto theatre of San Francisco, Cal., not to be of the ordinary type. And it is not. It is worthy of its name, and by mingling the far Western ideas of beauty with those of the theatrical East, the builders of the Rialto have a theatre to be proud of. And they are. They are proud of the building, its equipment, its conveniences, its programs, and its way of handling the people.



Auditorium, Rialto Theatre



Exterior, Rialto Theatre, San Francisco

The success of a modern picture theatre depends on the comfort of the patrons and the services rendered them. People no longer patronize ill-ventilated, crowded theatres with quivering pictures. To say the Rialto is a success tells you why in the same words. It is a good management that makes comforts, arranges good programs and presents them in the proper way.

For comfort, the Rialto is a large roomy place with 1,600 seats

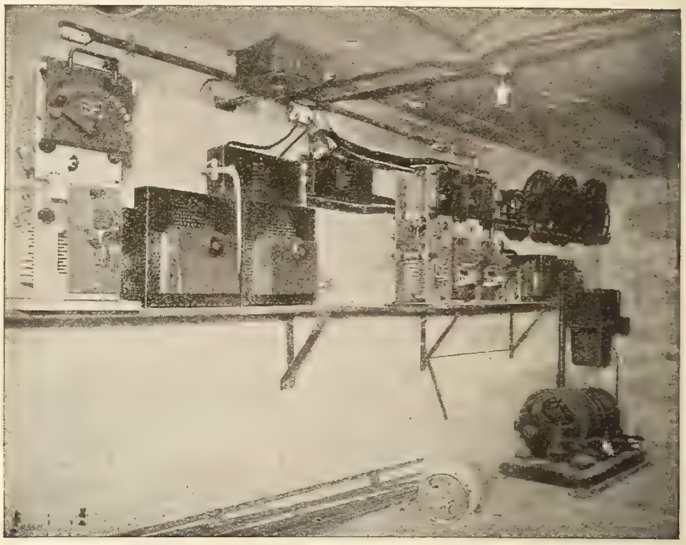
well spaced with wide aisles. It is ventilated with a 3-h.p. belted intake and a 2-h.p. belted exhaust fan.

To properly present a picture program requires, first, a properly equipped operating room. Nothing in the Rialto theatre's operating room has been spared that would make a better picture.



View of Operating Room, Rialto Theatre

It has three Powers 6 B machines projecting a 14 by 18 foot picture at 135 feet throw, using direct current from a 5.4 Westinghouse motion picture motor generator set. The other equipment, conveniently arranged, consists of three Albert speed regulators, three Albert arc controls, one Power dissolver, one Westinghouse control panel wired for D. C. 110 v. break down service, one Westinghouse automatic motion picture reel transfer system and one motor-driven rewinder.

The second necessary feature of perfect picture presentation is music, and the Rialto has this in its fine Wurlitzer.

NEW JERSEY

The property of Prior and Faucett, Ocean and Eighth avenues, Belmar, has passed into the hands of Hildinger, Papier and Bishop, of Trenton. This is the site of the merry-go-round, and will be altered into a motion picture theatre with 800 seats. The Hildinger Company is well known in Trenton, where they have a chain of twenty-eight theatres, and are in a position to present the very finest of films for the amusement of the picture lovers of Belmar.

NEW YORK

Secretary James G. Brownlos of the Binghamton Chamber of Commerce announced recently that a new theatre, to cost approximately $235,000, would be erected in the Parlor City in the near future. The new theatre will provide for various kinds of theatrical amusements, including big road shows, vaudeville, motion pictures and other kinds of amusements.

PENNSYLVANIA

Philadelphia parties, with New York backing, are after the Lord and Gage building, at Reading, for a motion picture house. A local syndicate, headed by Theodore Auman, Frank G. Hill and George A. Rick, are also interested in a movement to transform the property into a motion picture theatre. Messrs. Auman and Hill are interested in the Lyric theatre.

SOUTH DAKOTA

E. A. Hunt, of Roch Rapids, reports satisfactory progress is being made on his new motion picture theatre, and Contractor L. Cummings promises to have it ready for opening by October 1.

The first floor will be devoted to the showroom and have a ceiling 20 feet high so as to have room for a series of boxes and balconies; a space of 16 x 24 feet will be occupied by a confectioner of like business. The second floor will be used as a ballroom, which will be 48 x 80 feet in size, with only necessary room taken off for cloak and toilet rooms. The building will be of ornamental brick and Bedford stone.

WISCONSIN

The Strand Motion Picture theatre at Madison, which has its entrance on Mifflin street and its auditorium extending back to Dayton, will be ready for occupancy in June. The seating capacity will be 1,450.

It Pays to Advertise

How good is your advertising?

Is it pulling 'em in? Do your displays stand out on the newspaper page and hit the reader so hard that he says: "Gee, I've got to see that one"?

How about your publicity?

Is it snappy stuff that your newspapers are glad to print; and your accessories and your special campaigns—are they getting the business?

Your advertising is right if you are using Paramount and Artcraft Press Books.

They're prepared by a staff of experts. Press books are only one of the big free service aids you get when you book Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

Popularity of Beautiful Vitagraph Star is Reflected at the Box-Office

"It is our belief that Alice Joyce will make a host of friends at the Madison Theatre next week, and we sincerely hope that you will be kind enough to give us the first opportunity to take any further productions in which she may be starred."

J. H. Kunsky, Madison Theatre
Detroit, Mich.

"The delightful artistry of Alice Joyce seems ever to be a joy to my patrons, and her drawing power and popularity are emphatically reflected at the box-office. Please notify me of all features in which Miss Joyce will appear in the near future."

William Donlon, Mgr. Orpheum Theatre
Utica, N. Y.

"In addition to her great beauty, Miss Joyce possesses a charm and distinction that make any part in which she appears interesting."

"OVER THE TOP"

with Sergt. Arthur Guy

EMPEY (Himself)

is of Vital Interest to Every One of Them!

That's Why It is Being Booked in

EVERY CITY, TOWN AND VILLAGE IN THE UNITED STATES

That's Why It is Packing Every Theatre That is Showing It—Just as it Packed the Lyric Theatre, New York, at Every Performance.

"Over the Top" ushers in a new epoch in the history of motion pictures. In volume of bookings, in length of runs, it hits the highest mark yet set by any super-feature anywhere.

They're waiting for it—they're waiting for it in the large temples of the motion picture in the metropolis, in the large "key" cities of the country, in towns, villages, hamlets, in crossroads settlements, in every camp and cantonment. Its fame and success are preceding it everywhere.

"Over the Top" is being booked for the entire season's run at many summer resorts. It will prove the greatest through-the-summer feature ever booked. It will send the box-office receipts up with the temperature.

This Is the Way A HUMAN EXHIBITOR Figures His Picture Values:

HE watches a screening, sees the plot develop, watches the actors, notes the sets and the "look" of the scenes and then asks himself the following questions:

"Do the things I am seeing in this picture happen in the lives of the people in my audiences? Do these players act and behave like the everyday, normal human beings to whom my theatre caters? Are the problems and emotions in this picture the common, recognizable problems and emotions of men and women in general?"

He could combine all these questions in one and ask himself: "Has this picture got humanity in it?" The great public of the world worships before the God of Things As They Are. It is a FACT WORLD, as opposed to the world of Fancy. Give your audiences LIFE AS IT IS. When you do this you have challenged and will hold their interest.

My dear Count:

Replying to yours of recent date regarding the picture "Lest We Forget", beg to state that I have refrained from answering the same awaiting results at our various theatres when I could answer you more intelligently.

The business we did (which was record breaking everywhere) simply bore out our judgment. In all of our New York Theatres, it was absolute capacity.

The picture opened Monday night in Baltimore to what might have been termed a "Riot". As you may judge what the audience thought of the picture, they took up subscriptions immediately after the presentation and sold Three hundred and five thousand dollars worth of Liberty Bonds that night. It was the picture that did it.

The audiences at our various theatres simply were wild with enthusiasm and I want to take this means of thanking you for the opportunity of presenting it in our houses.

ML/NL.

Yours very truly,

Marcus Loew

ANNOUNCEMENT

INTO the world of motion pictures has come a new and successful star whose achievement on the screen, whose personality, whose downright ability as an artist make him a wonderful addition to Metro's all star series.

You have seen him in "The Lone Wolf;" you have seen him in "Empty Pockets" and you, as showmen, know that he already has made a place for himself at the top.

This man is BERT LYTELL and Metro takes pleasure in announcing the first of his appearances as a Metro Star in "The Trail to Yesterday." Metro only asks that you see Bert Lytell in this production and then judge for yourselves.

TRIANGLE

It's in the Eating

THAT'S where the proof of the pudding lies.

You will never know what TRIANGLE pictures and TRIANGLE service will do for your house until you have given them a trial.

The one object for which you are in business is profit—and profit is registered at the box office.

TRIANGLE service is not designed to fill your house and then take all the receipts, leaving no profit for you. Nor is it intended to sell you pictures at reasonable prices and then when, through your efforts, your box office shows a profit, to suddenly raise your rentals to unreasonably high figures.

TRIANGLE is a combination of good pictures, founded on human-interest stories, artistically directed and with talented players; plus prompt, courteous, honorable and business-like service. The TRIANGLE policy has for its object the success of motion picture exhibitors and it is sufficiently flexible to meet the demanls of any exhibitor in the country.

The TRIANGLE Program offers you two pictures each week on which you can absolutely depend—pictures that are consistently good, week-in and week-out—pictures that will always please any audience.

TRIANGLE service is offered at prices which guarantee a profit to all exhibitors who will use reasonable efforts in the exploitation of pictures.

It is the unalterable policy of TRIANGLE—an instruction rigidly enforced by the corporation—that salesmen must do business with exhibitors only on such a basis as will insure them making money. Exhibitors must make money on TRIANGLE service—this is the very foundation of the success of TRIANGLE.

GIVE TRIANGLE A TRIAL. Let us make you a proposition for running a few TRIANGLE pictures. Compare the opinion of your patrons, the service from our exchange and the box office results of TRIANGLE with any other program you have used or are using.

There's a TRIANGLE exchange near you. Don't delay. Find out at once what TRIANGLE Service will cost YOU.

Minding Their Own Business

EXHIBITORS possess the real values of the motion picture business. Their theatres are the fundamental assets of the industry. Their investments exceed all other investments.

Yet, until this moment, exhibitors have had little to say about the running of the business—scarcely, even, anything to say about the running of their own part of the business.

Their attempts to pool their interests, and thereby exercise the voice in affairs which their combined booking power would give them, has resulted either in the feathering of the nests of a chosen few of their number, or in the financing of the selfish purposes of outsiders.

The reason for this has been, that once having assembled their forces, exhibitors have given over the control of these forces to others.

The AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS CORPORATION has been formed BY exhibitors, FOR exhibitors, to keep the control of the exhibitors' booking power in the hands of exhibitors.

The purpose of the organization is to gain for the exhibitors' booking associations affiliated with it, a definite and consistent supply of meritorious pictures, at price concessions which such combined booking strength will earn—not to take advantage of that strength for selfish interests.

Exhibitor booking associations, affiliated with this organization, retain ALL of their independence, ALL of their funds, and likewise are WHOLLY responsible for the management of the AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS CORPORATION.

This management is vested in a Board of Directors, made up of exhibitors, and elected by exhibitors. To make this board fully representative of all exhibitors, one director is allotted to every hundred days of booking represented.

That a directorate of such representativeness may be relied upon to provide an efficient and trustworthy management, is best attested by the results which are now being obtained by such exhibitor booking units as:

The Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate, of New York.
The Associated Theatres, Inc., of Minnesota.
The Motion Picture Theatres Association, of Illinois.
The Associated Theatres, Inc., of Illinois
The United Exhibitors Association, of Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania.
The Exhibitors Booking Association of the Intermountain States.
The North and South Carolina Exhibitors Booking Association.
The Exhibitors Booking Association, of Michigan.
The Tri-State Exhibitors Circuit, of Pittsburgh.

Retaining their present independence, but affiliated in a national organization that will assure the better producers an even more extensive market, these, and other booking associations, now in process of formation, will for the first time in the history of the industry, be in a position to realize the full power of their strength.

That such realization will bring added savings in rentals, and increased returns in the excess profits of each booking association, will be obvious to the most casual investigator.

If you would have a share in these benefits, write today to the

AFFILIATED DISTRIBUTORS CORP.

JUDGING "THE EAGLE'S EYE" BY NEWSPAPER STANDARDS

AS evidence of the opinions of the country's leading newspaper editors about the public appeal, timeliness and importance of "The Eagle's Eye," this is what they did, in their respective papers, during the week preceding the publication of the first chapter of the story:

The Philadelphia Evening Ledger posted two color half sheet cards on all its newsstands, placarded its score of delivery wagons with three sheet announcements, ran two and three column ads in its daily columns—all advertising the publication, for twenty weeks, of the story of "The Eagle's Eye."

The Boston American announced the first chapter with a seven column, two line display heading across the FIRST PAGE OF ITS SECOND MAIN NEWS SECTION, AND BEGAN THE STORY IN THE SEVENTH, OR "BIG NEWS" COLUMN ON THAT PAGE, the second most important in the paper.

The Washington Times published full page advertisements, drawing attention to the appearance of the first chapter.

The Chicago Examiner also used full page ads, lauding the story of "The Eagle's Eye" as the greatest serial feature of the year.

The Los Angeles Examiner began the first chapter on its first page, giving it equal importance with war news.

The San Francisco Examiner started the story with a four column, full page depth layout on the first page of its second main news section.

The Buffalo Express, Albany Telegram, Atlanta Constitution, Houston Post, Austin (Texas) American, Denver News, Salt Lake City Tribune, and twenty-eight other big dailies treated it with equal prominence.

Not even the most popular of the big war stories that are being published as feature matter have received the great amount of advertising that the newspapers have given to their contracts for exclusive local publication rights to the novelization of the story of "The Eagle's Eye."

It is another, and an irrefutable evidence that "The Eagle's Eye," in picture form, is the biggest subject in the industry. There is nothing that can begin to compare with it. It is so big it belittles description.

Exhibitors who have booked it are unstinted in their praise of its drawing power. Patrons have gasped at its revelations. It is the pictured history of Imperial Germany's war against America on American soil.

The big first, second and third run accounts throughout the United States agree, after showing the first episodes, that there never has been, in the history of motion pictures, anything to compare with

YOU MAY NOW BOOK PATHÉ FEATURES ON EITHER THE SELECTIVE SERVICE (OPEN BOOKING) OR THE PROGRAM PLAN: TAKE YOUR CHOICE!

Why the Selective Service Plan Appeals To The First Run Exhibitor

¶ He may pick the pictures his patrons want;
He may, by selecting his features, reduce his "poor days" to a minimum;

¶ He doesn't have to buy a "pig in a poke," for program booking is booking blindly. A first run house cannot afford to book blindly. A picture which may jam a competitor's house may be a frost in his;

¶ By the selective service plan an exhibitor is the judge of what his patrons should have. He may book only those pictures on which he knows he can make money;

¶ A family trade house must be very careful as to the kind of pictures it runs. Under the selective service plan an exhibitor can keep out the pictures which only hurt his trade but which he must take under the program plan.

Pathé

Why the Program Plan Is The Best For The Smaller Houses

¶ The Program plan is cheaper; it is obvious that a better price can be made on twenty-six features on one contract than on the same twenty-six sold individually; ¶ The small town exhibitor is often too far away from the exchange centre of his district to select his features personally. He has well justified confidence in the Pathé branch manager and salesmen and knows they know his requirements. Thus he is saved the time and expense of frequent visits to the exchange; ¶ Three out of four of the Pathé features have been winners for him. He has made money on three and broken even on the fourth. He may well be satisfied with such a consistent showing and he is! ¶ His patrons are perfectly satisfied with the Pathé features and have told him so. And those features were selected for him by the Pathé branch manager and the salesman serving him. Why should he change the system which is making money for him?

THE SELECTIVE SERVICE PLAN IS THE BEST FOR ONE HOUSE, THE PROGRAM PLAN FOR ANOTHER. AGAIN WE SAY-TAKE YOUR PICK!

MORALE

A motion picture opportunity and obligation of service.

MR. BRUCE BARTON, editor of "Every Week," in one of his constructive editorials says:

WORDS come and go: they have their day. We have passed through the reign of "psychological" and "efficiency" and "merchandising."

And a new little word now holds the throne: the destinies of the world are wrapped up in its six letters.

It is spelled this way: M-O-R-A-L-E.

I listened the other night to Will Irwin's description of the great Italian disaster. There are no better fighters in the world than the Italians. Cadorna had established them in positions almost impregnable.

What, then, happened to hurl them to defeat?

First of all, the report spread insidiously all over Italy that the war would be over in December, that the peace conference even then was under way in Switzerland.

It spread first, not among the soldiers, but among the women at home. Soldiers going home on leave met wives who gave them the good news and warned them: "Don't take any chances now: the war is practically over. Just be careful a few days more."

The whole story is too long to tell. But, for our purpose, the significant fact is this—the morale of the people at home was first attacked; and they, in turn, poisoned the faith and determination of the troops at the front.

Morale is as old as warfare, and it can be made or broken overnight.

And that nation whose morale curve is highest when the final conflict comes will win the war.

What, then, is this quality—morale? Of what elements does it consist?

Cheerfulness—bred of the knowledge that the home fires are burning brightly and are worth fighting for.

Courage—sustained by the courage of those who are behind.

Faith—that the cause is eternally just, and therefore can not fail.

These are the elements of morale. If you yearn for the news of victory that will spell peace, see that you keep these qualities in your own heart strong and vibrant.

For almost always, when morale begins to weaken, it begins to weaken first of all at home.

THE MOTION PICTURE SCREEN is one of the most powerful agencies available for building and sustaining the morale of our people. The picture screen has given much—there is much more to give. Let every exhibitor see his duty.

Making Longer Runs Possible

THE owner of a large city picture house had this to say in our office last week:

"There's a danger in urging runs longer than two weeks.

"Generally speaking, your campaign for longer runs is an excellent one. I agree with you that the daily change is the fundamental fault of the business.

"But you ought to urge the quick change houses to come up to longer runs—from one day to three or four—show them how they can do it with profit.

"The house now using week runs has a steady patronage. Extended runs are apt to lose the patronage. The people go elsewhere in the meantime and get the habit. They may not come back.

"What we need," he went on, "is a situation all over the country more nearly approaching the week run. That would be a fine thing for the whole industry.

"I would suggest that you bear more heavily along this line and don't let your enthusiasm carry you too far on runs, say, over two weeks."

We agree and we don't agree with the criticism. But we give it frankly here as lending some impetus, perhaps, to a discussion of what we shall always consider the industry's biggest problem.

We have suggested the subject, by the way, to our Exhibitors' Advisory Board, and we anticipate some very interesting statements, especially along the line of the cooperation necessary between manufacturer and exhibitor to make longer runs possible and profitable.

* * * *

IT is certainly true that the number of houses which should jump out of the daily change fallacy into runs longer but less than a week is very large; it is true that right among this class of theatres is where the industry's big sore spot lies today; and obviously right here is where the change to longer runs should be advocated and accomplished—through that unity of plan and purpose between exhibitor and manufacturer so necessary.

By the way, we have just had laid before us the case of a six hundred-seat house which barely existed profitably under a daily change policy. Today—a few months later—this theatre, now playing good pictures for four days each week, has nearly trebled its receipts and pays a handsome profit.

Not only that, but a dormant neighborhood has been so awakened that it now, apparently, wants a thousand, or even a two thousand-seat house at higher prices.

These are the neighborhoods and these are the theatres which need longer runs—backed, of course, by the good showmanship essential to any such enterprise and advance.

And in our estimation, as we have frequently stated, nothing will prevent the right man coming along and grabbing these opportunities.

As to the big house and a run over two weeks, we believe that any changes inherent therein are a matter of location, competition, house management, advertising, and other individual problems which will have to be solved altogether as an individual case.

It is the exhibitor's own problem, to be determined altogether by those different factors entering into each different situation.

We cannot help being pleased over the success of those houses which are taking the jump now right along. And we are making every effort, in each case, to publish completely the ways, means and consequences of the move.

In closing this editorial we are adding another which has a very big bearing on the issue of longer runs.

It's the Backing that's Needed

MANAGER BRANHAM, of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, in an interesting article in this issue says that pictures are all right, but that the exploitation material with them is all wrong.

We respectfully but emphatically refer this statement to producers.

You may shout from the house-tops for longer runs, gentlemen; you may make pictures which will hold up during longer runs—and, of course, this is the first essential. But you will never have longer runs until you equip the exhibitor with the advertising material—all the advertising material—which also is an absolute essential to longer runs, and profitable runs at all.

You may think you are doing this, but you are not.

You may think others are doing it for you, but they are not.

And you'd better begin right now with the most rigid house-cleaning you ever had—and find out, yourself, just what you are not doing.

* * * *

YOU have the right object in view; you are spending plenty of money—too much, perhaps. But, just the same, the man at the other end of the line, the man who books your picture, is not getting the help he needs—not, by a long shot,—to sell successfully his picture, your picture, to the public.

You are spending too much money in selling him—the exhibitor. You are yelling at him too much, just as if he didn't have his own sources of information in booking pictures and had to accept your own claims.

Why don't you advertise with him and not so much at him?

He'll book your picture on its merits. Why don't you help him sell it on its merits? Why don't you spend your efforts and your money that way?

It can be done.

Every one of your good pictures can be thoroughly merchandized. In other words, you can put each one out and over, over for all it's worth to you and your exhibitors—and with no more and probably considerably less money than you are spending now to do nothing.

The ways and means are right under your nose; you don't use them in the right way, that's all.

Frankly, gentlemen, we are right in this matter, and you ought to be told the truth.

Exhibitors are telling it to you now, and more and more they will raise their voices in the matter.

E Johnston

Funkhouser Again

"MAJOR" FUNKHOUSER—we use quotes, as do the Chicago newspapers—has edited "Hearts of the World" to suit himself, whatever the wishes and high council plans of the French, British and American Governments.

He now turns his attention to "My Four Years in Germany" and eliminates eight scenes from a picture founded upon the facts of a book written by the United States Ambassador to Germany.

There will be many who, in their exasperation over the fanaticism of one city official seeking to countervent the cause of patriotism and world justice, will accuse this fellow of pro-Germanism.

We do not. We believe the charge should be bigotry in the nth degree.

But there should be some charge. And the charge, we believe, should be made by the Government of the United States. And action cannot come too soon.

Stage to Screen—and Vice Versa

ANTHONY PAUL KELLY, playwright now—otherwise Tony Kelly, successful photodramatist—has scored a hit in his first stage play, "Three Faces East," now running in Boston and certainly destined to open successfully in New York in August.

At least George M. Cohan says the play is a hit, and having seen the play and knowing Mr. Cohan, we are not disposed to argue the point.

Mr. Kelly's play—naturally, because of his previous training in photo-dramatic construction, lends itself splendidly to picturization.

And the question arises: why not make a play and the photoplay of the same theme at the same time and also put them out simultaneously?

The ready answer, of course, is: Why, the picture at fifteen cents admission would kill the stage play at $2.00.

But would it?

Not in New York, certainly; nor in any other large centres. Here is where stage plays flourish and motion pictures do not compete in substance nor diminish attendance.

The play ought to be helped—greatly—in these centres by the appearance of the picture throughout their surrounding districts and by the very considerable advertising that would be had.

This would be especially true if the same cast appeared in the play and the picture.

Plays founded on books are helped, not hurt, by the book sale. And the book sale is revived by the play.

Pictures, it must be borne in mind, are more like books than like stage plays. The motion picture is an illustrated story.

Traditions, it would seem, stand mostly in the way of this innovation.

Who will be daring enough to try it out?

Away With Tradition

IF there is one thing the motion picture business will not tolerate it is tradition.

True of the making of pictures; true of the showing of pictures.

People want novelty; or, to express it otherwise, novelty is the attractive force, the basis, of entertainment.

Some veteran showman, we forget who at the moment, stated and proved well his point, that the show business is one of the most stable and conservative.

But, he stated, it can only be made stable through constantly upholding the principle of novelty.

It is a current saying that the film business travels fast and changes fast.

So it does, because the public—upon whose favor the whole business is built—demands new things.

The procession is fast.

Woe to those who lag behind a year or so—even a month or so.

A la The New York Herald

SHALL the theatre projection room be kept sealed up tight, as it is today, or shall the patrons be allowed to see the operator at work by means of a wired glass window visible from the lobby or foyer? This is a question which is being discussed by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and which, if approved by that body, will be recommended to the entire industry for universal adoption. The arguments for and against this proposed change, which is radical, are given on page 3013 of this issue.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

JAMES H. SHELDON has taken up the Mutual reins. James Sheldon—the young-old executive of the picture game. Young, in that Chicago folks like to refer to him as "Jimmy" Sheldon, like to let you know that he was one of the best football players the mid-west ever developed; old, in the abilities which have gained him remarkable personal successes in his comparatively short picture career, old in the shrewd business-like pair of eyes denoting the well-balanced executive.

President Sheldon has personality—that warm, good-fellowship glow that makes friends at sight. He listens to you as readily as you listen to him—and though he doesn't talk much he makes you feel that he would like you to talk more.

Here's boosting for "Jimmy" Sheldon to carry Mutual over the line for a touchdown—and then kick goal.

Speaking of James Sheldon's personality brings to our mind that of Frank Tichenor, vice-president of General Film, and also a one-time gridiron star. Here is another open-faced "Pal" sort of a fellow. "A great big kid," some used to picture him, but—and a great big BUT—it took quite some big kid to perform the miracle of resurrection with General Film that "Tich" has accomplished. Note we use the past tense—"Accomplished."

COMING back to the subject of Mutual—keep a weather eye on John R. Freuler.

We say this because of an interesting little line in the story concerning the recent changes. "I have important motion picture plans in the process of consummation which will probably be announced early in Autumn."

John R. Freuler's nerve and foresight made Chaplin the "Million Dollar Comedian"; John R. Freuler's picture knowledge covers everything from the ground up.

So if John R. has some plans concealed up his sleeve, and if Autumn will see them turned loose—then it behooves us to watch the sleeve and watch for Fall.

It's a long, long way to Chicago, but Dame Rumor doesn't mind the jump at all. So the old dame told Broadway last week that Terry Ramsaye was resigning from Mutual. As soon as Arthur James hears the rumor—if it doesn't die abornin'—he'll probably sue Terry for stealing his act.

Arthur being the most resigned person on Dame Rumor's list—in fact, a very cheerful picture of patient resignation.

WE simply can't keep our minds off Chicago this week. Now it's Funkhouser.

If the picture industry allows the present opportunity to give final burial honors to Major Funkhouser to slip by—then the picture industry deserves all that a dark and dismal future holds in store for it in Chicago.

It isn't a time for conversation, it isn't a time for all to sit idly by and watch the efforts put forth by the promoters of "Hearts of the World" and "My Four Years in Germany." It's the psychological opportunity for all to act—and act quickly.

We of the picture industry have never shown any particular political aptitude—but it seems only elemental Fourth Ward strategy to grasp such an opportunity as this.

Let's put it baldly, bluntly, crudely—will we ever again have a ballyhoo like the British Government's backing of "Hearts of the World" and Ambassador Gerard's prestige for "My Four Years in Germany?"

That's unvarnished. But it's truth.

WE JUST HAVE TO PRINT THIS

"SERVING It With Speed and Ginger" in last week's News spoke about buying Liberty Bonds "until it hurts." President Paul H. Cromelin of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation liked the editorial, but didn't simply sit down to write the Editor how good it was. Instead he had the particular paragraph pasted on a strip of cardboard and stuck over the telephone switchboard window at the Inter-Ocean. The afternoon of the following day the company cashier notified him that an additional $10,000 in bonds had been taken up by the Inter-Ocean office force.

And if the present opportunity slips by with no more than the usual court actions, if the storm clears with Funkhouser alive and kicking—then——

Well, let's prepare to do a little kicking on our own part —and of our own parts.

This Major Funkhouser, by the way, is the same Major Funkhouser who is quoted by members of the First Illinois during the Spanish War as saying: "Take care of the mules. To hell with the men. We can get all the men we want, while mules cost the Government forty dollars each."

Write your own ticket.

JUST after we get "all het up" about Chicago we come to a news story which makes us admit that perhaps the manufacturers have troubles enough of their own right now without taking on the task of Funkhouser's final squelching.

A jump in the Canadian import tax from two and a half cents to seven and a half is a matter of both serious and pressing importance.

It is a matter, it seems to us, of even more interest to Canada than to American film manufacturers.

The latter, of course, will experience severe inroads on their business under a tax that demands approximately three hundred dollars on each print of a feature. But if the manufacturers suffer loss of business, what of the Canadian exhibitors who will have to pay, not only the increased tax on the subjects that do enter the country, but who will also have to pay the increased rentals due to a curtailing of the quantity of subjects sent into Canada.

One well posted and conservative informant tells us that the new tax will put over a third of the picture theatres of Canada out of business. Add this to the losses suffered by American manufacturers and the tax boost becomes a matter for international consideration.

It is hard to say, with due regard to the amenities, just what the United States can do to help in the matter, but the manufacturers certainly have a task on their hands that demands swifter and more able action than the usual joy-riding trip to a legislature.

Letters from a Self-Made Exhibitor to His Son

Number Three

Cuthbert has just been hooked one hundred berries for a feature exploiting a star with nothing much but her reputation and an extensive wardrobe. After playing to poor business he has written, protesting against the "star system."

Dear Cuthbert:

OF course you don't like the "star system" and the various things you say in your letter about stars strike me as rather funny because, if you could set the words to music, nearly every exhibitor in the United States would be playing it on his ukelele and the words would be warbled by a chorus of about 15,000 voices.

The star might be classed as a sort of fungus growth, with particular application to the genus mushroom, but as that also applies to the entire industry it isn't very effective. Time was when no company permitted the mention of the names of members of the cast, and it was the production which put the "star" over, NOT the star who carried along the picture. In those days if you so much as mentioned "pictures to the cheapest actorine in the legit, she would wrinkle up her patrician nose, as though she was being gassed and say, in her most elegant diction: "What, pictures. Not me! Whoodyer think yer talkin' to?"

But during the past three years — Whew! It's a wonder some of 'em haven't been killed in the rush. Of course, their personal representatives mention it in the publicity matter that they have been "persuaded," "lured," "entreated" to come in, and that finally, in a laudable effort to advance the picture art, they have "consented" to appear in ONE picture. And one is all a lot of them ever DID appear in, for reasons which I refuse to mention. Others have kept on consenting at salaries not more than a thousand per cent. higher than they drew down in the spoken drama.

"Talk about art compromising with appetite! You eat regular in pictures, even if it is on location now and then."

Some of them have undoubtedly added to the dignity of the motion picture by the injection of their well-advertised personalities, but there have been others who haven't added to much of anything but their bank account. In the legitimate these artists have to rehearse a new production for weeks without pay and then they may open up to a week's run followed by a protracted period of loafing or, worse yet, find themselves stranded in Boonville, Indiana, with their personal belongings acting as collateral for food and sleeps consumed at the hotel. They got to be mighty good pedestrians in the old show days and some of them got so they could go longer without a drink or something to eat than a camel. Not so in the despised movies.

And so art finally compromised with appetite. It was deemed better to act in the movies and EAT than to shine in the legit. and just shine. There isn't a whole lot of nourishment in scintillation. Some actors can diet on admiration and grow fat, but the best of them have to descend to ordinary inartistic grub at intervals. In the movies there are no free rehearsals; no sign on the bulletin board, " This show closes Saturday "; no living in a suitcase and sleeping in day coaches. Can you blame 'em?

Understand that not all our recruits from the legitimate were driven to us through meal-ticket motives and, by the same token, not all of our stars are former stage celebrities. Some of our greatest stars and staresses are products of the motion picture (of, by and for the motion picture). I merely mentioned the stage star in passing to indicate one of the reasons for the rapid ascendancy of the star system and it is significant that at about the time this industry has gone crazy on the star thing the wise legitimate producer has discontinued almost entirely the exploitation of personalities. They paid through the nose and LEARNED.

I want to take exception to one thing you say in your letter and that is that the producer is wholly to blame for the " star system." Of course, I am two hundred odd miles away from you and I make no claim to second sight or clairvoyance, but I'd like to lay a little bet that after you had dictated your mighty protest against the star system that you sat right down and wrote your advertising for two weeks to come and that you plastered the stars' names in letters about three times as large as anything else on the bills and if some particular star wasn't quite as stellary as you could wish you laid it on a little thicker, thus doing your little bit to boost her into that hallowed class where it takes six figures to write down her annual stipend, and enables her producers to hook you for three or four times your present service rate some time in the near future. It only takes five figures to write down President Wilson's yearly salary, but then all he is doing is guiding a nation of 100,000,000 through a world war and practically dictating the policy of the Allied World. Why should he get as much as our stars?

The exhibitor blames the producer and the producer blames the exhibitor, they both blame and execrate the star, and the star—why the star just grins amiably and continues to get it while the getting is good. What would you do, son, if you were a star? You needn't bother to answer as that belongs in the foolish question class. But I am going to settle this argument right here.

If you will open the Bible your mother gave you several years ago you will read something like this: "In the beginning the Lord created the earth and all that in it is" or something like that, and then a little further along "—and he also created the stars." And there, at last, the responsibility is placed. But they were located many millions of miles away where they constituted no menace to anyone. It remained to the produco-scientist and the exhibito-astronomer to bring them within hitting distance, and you can't really blame them for accepting the motion picture as their particular oyster, when everyone in the industry has been diligently and painstakingly trying for several years to present them with all the profits of the business on a diamond-studded serving tray.

It is only a question of time now when you will begin to read notices like the following in the trade journals:

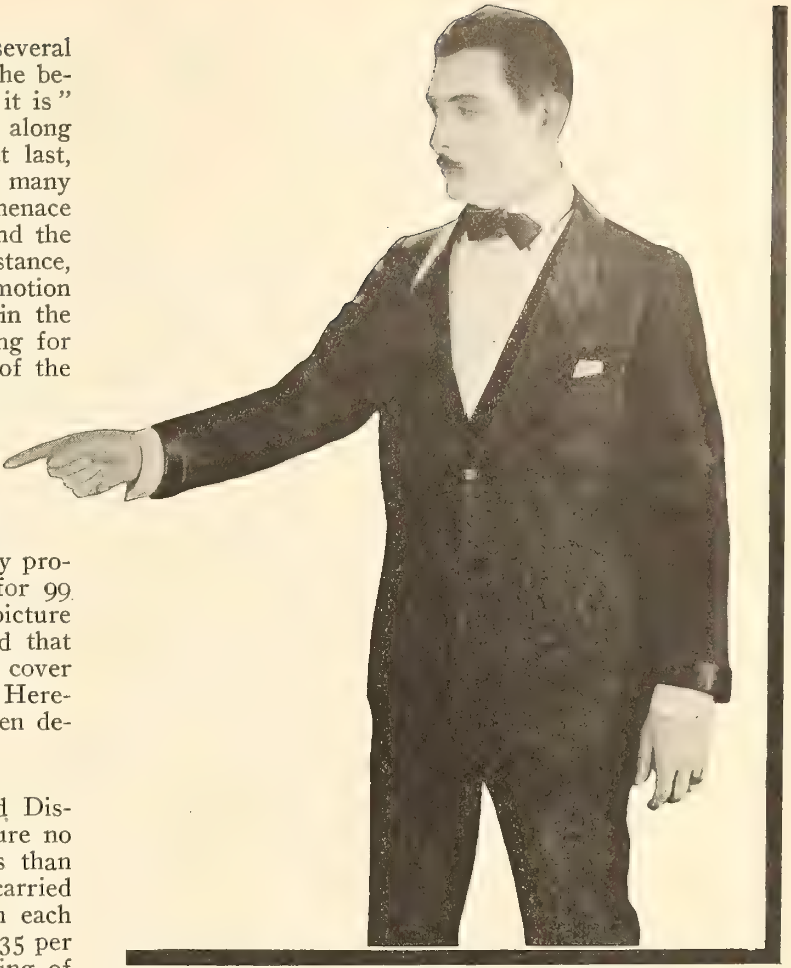
"At the regular meeting of the Film Star's Union, Local No. 13, last Tuesday evening, it was decided that any member of the Union who appeared in any production without first securing a contract calling for 99 per cent of the gross revenue derived from that picture should be blackballed. It was unanimously agreed that 1 per cent of the gross was more than sufficient to cover the costs of production, distribution and exhibition. Heretofore the greedy producers and exhibitors have been demanding 5 per cent of the gross."

Or maybe this:

"At the regular meeting of the Producers and Distributors Association it was voted that in the future no films should be rented to exhibitors charging less than fifty cents admission. It was further moved and carried that clauses be added compelling exhibitors to run each subject a week and agreeing to devote no less than 35 per cent of their average gross to the proper advertising of the star and the producing company. I. Gottum Goinn, the prominent film magnate, in making the motion said: 'With our present tremendous production costs we simply MUST get more money and the only place we can get it is from the exhibitor. It is up to him to get it from his public but, because many exhibitors hesitate to raise their prices to the public, we'll have to do it for them. They claim that their patrons won't stand for it and are already protesting against too high prices for the quality of the goods delivered, but we can't help that. This business is going to blow up soon, anyway, because the public is getting pretty well disgusted.' The motion was carried without a dissenting vote."

"What? Me do this scene over? Not today. I'm a star with not only reputation but temperament as well."

Naturally, the above is an exaggeration, but it sort of caricatures present conditions. You ask me the way out and I tell you that I don't see any way out just now; if I did I'd capitalize that idea and make my immortal fortune. Lots of cagey boys in this business are pretending that they have discovered the answer and roping in credulous exhibitors through the medium of lurid promises of a soon-to-be-realized prosperity, but I haven't seen a scheme yet that appealed to me particularly. I want to avoid advising you to any great extent, but I can't refrain from cautioning you against being a fall guy for smooth promoters, of which we have more than our share. Take my tip and whenever any fillum man approaches you and says, "I want to get you to invest——" just ring for the police or the Home Defense League or sumpin' like that. If you MUST invest, I have a lot of nice pretty stock in various film enterprises which I will sell to you at the going price, which in most cases is $7.50 the ton, baled.



"The Bible says the Lord created stars, but take it from me, where would they be today without the producers and the press agents?"

While I am always glad to hear from you, I wish you would inject a little joy into some of your letters. You are no worse off than the rest of us and better than most, because you have that job as operator waiting for you when my new theatre opens. I pay my operators $21 per week, and you will have to step lively to earn such good wages, but you ought to qualify if you spend enough time in the operating room. From what you say it doesn't take you long to count up nights. Spend the rest of your time riding a machine. Here's hoping.

Affectionately,

DAD.

P. S.—Your mother says to get Bertha Bleedum in "Twin Souls," as she is just too sweet for anything. You ought to get it in a month or so for a hundred and a half. It's a rotten picture, but Bertha is too sweet.

SYDNEY COHEN President of the New York State Exhibitors' League, says: "A number of the Harrison reviews covering pictures I have had the opportunity of seeing impress me as if I had helped dictate them. I am firmly of the opinion that if straight-from-the-shoulder, honest criticisms and review of pictures are continued they will be fruitful of worth-while results for exhibitor and producer. I believe it will eventually tend to the making of better pictures and the producers will consider the viewpoint of experienced exhibitors who 'know' a picture and have a somewhat intelligent idea of what the people want. The exhibitor wants honest reviews." SEE PAGE 2942.

Anita Stewart Picture Begun

"The Mind-the-Paint Girl" is First of Special Series Planned by Albert E. Smith—Tearle in Cast

ANITA STEWART, with a cast of exceptional strength in her support, began work last week at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn, on "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," the play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, which is to be the first in the special series of Anita Stewart features planned by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

In announcing the cast for this production, which will be directed by Wilfrid North, Mr. Smith says that he has tried to give Miss Stewart the finest talent obtainable.

Miss Stewart, of course, will play the role of "Lily Parradell," the piquant musical comedy girl, and opposite her, in the part of "Viscount Farncombe," will be Vernon Steele, who created the role in the original London production of the play.

Conway Tearle, recently with Ethel Barrymore in her Broadway production of "The Lady of the Camelias," returns to the screen in Miss Stewart's company, playing the role of "Captain Nicholas Jeyes."

In addition to these, many of Vitagraph's most popular favorites will be seen in important roles. Evart Overton, star of many Blue Ribbon features, will appear as "Morris Cooling." Templar Saxe has been cast for the part of "Lionel Roper," Denton Vane will portray "Sam De Castro," Arthur Donaldson, last seen in "Over the Top," as von Emden, chief of the German spy system, will play "Vincent Bland."

Virginia Norden, who appeared in support of Miss Stewart in "The Combat," "His Wife's Good Name," and other pictures, will have an important role in "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," and in addition there will be thirteen other feminine players in the cast.

President Smith states that "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl will be given an elaborate production in the matter of settings and that the wardrobe of the star and the supporting women will constitute a fashion show in itself. Miss Stewart, for several weeks before she started work on the play, divided her time between the Vitagraph studio and her modiste, with the result that she will be seen in a variety of gowns and frocks.

Mr. Smith says that he is now considering several of the plays which have been selected tentatively for Miss Stewart's other features, and he expects to be in a position to announce the titles of them within a few days.

Cohan Staff Teaches Cameramen

Doing the Service for United States Government Cinema Department —Students Accompany Regulars on Assignments

JACK COHN, manager of the Universal Animated Weekly department, and his entire force of motion picture photographers have practically been commandeered by the United States Government for the purpose of teaching men registered in the Government cinema department the method by which motion pictures should be taken to obtain the best results.

The first squad of Government photographic recruits reported to Mr. Cohn on April 29, and they were assigned to accompany the regular staff photographers of the Animated Weekly department in covering the events that later are scheduled to appear on the screen.

The assignment of the Government men followed a conversation between Mr. Cohn and Captain J. D. Sears, of the Signal Corps. Captain Sears called the attention of Mr. Cohn, of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., to the fact that it was the duty of the company to do everything possible for the education of the men. This remark, however, was not necessary, as the Universal Company already had placed its entire activities at the command of the Government.

The first of the Government men to report were Sergeant Nugent and Privates Vogel, Davis and Gunshor, all students of the school of military cinematography of Columbia University. The reporting hour was at 9 o'clock in the morning and the soldiers were given orders that their assignment was to remain with the Universal photographers just as long as those photographers were working. They were placed under the direction of the photographers, who will be the final judges as to their ability to handle a motion picture camera without assistance.

Just as soon as this squad has completed its education, other men will be assigned.

Change for Honaker

Roy T. Honaker has severed his connection with the Thorpe theatre at Thorpe, W. Va., and is now manager of the American at Bluefield, W. Va.

Conventions of Triangle Exchange Managers

The first of a series of conventions of exchange managers of the Triangle Distributing Corporation was held at the home office of the corporation on Monday and Tuesday, April 22 and 23, the managers of the Eastern exchanges being present.

The convention was under the direction of R. W. Lynch, vice-president of the corporation, and was attended by J. W. Heisman, sales manager, and by Exchange Managers W. J. Pratt, of Boston; B. E. Wilkes, of New Haven; C. B. Price, of New York; T. C. Montgomery, of Buffalo; J. R. Levy, of Pittsburgh; W. J. Hagerty, of Philadelphia, and S. E. Kent, of Washington, D. C. R. E. Bradford, exchange manager from Chicago, who happened to be in New York, also attended.

Mr. Heisman is now in the West where he will conduct similar conventions in Chicago, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco.

Binney Visits Boston

H. J. Binney, president and director general of the Florida Film Corporation, is spending a few days in Boston prior to his return to Jacksonville, where work on the Josh Binney comedies will be resumed in the Klutho Studios, under his personal direction. Mr. Binney has completed the first three of a series of twelve two-reel comedies to be released one each month. He has selected as titles for these pictures "Fred's Fictitious Foundling," "Fabulous Fortune Fumblers" and "Freda's Fighting Father."

F. I. L. M. Beefsteak

The F. I. L. M. Club, of New York, gave its regular beefsteak dinner on Wednesday evening, May 1, at Healy's. It was one of the club's most enjoyable affairs to date. Among the prominent people in attendance were Messrs. Meyer and Schneider, David V. Picker, Harry Reichenbach, William L. Sherrill, Ike Hartsall, Lee Ochs, Louis Blumenthal and C. B. Hoy. The entertainment was furnished by Healy's Hodge Podge Revue from the Golden Glades.

Convention Notice

Notices have been published to the effect that the next meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers would be held in Boston on July 13. This statement is said to be not correct; the next meeting of the society will be held in Cleveland some time in October. The exact date will be announced later.

Canada Boosts Import Rate on Films

Government Insists Upon Payment of Five Cents Per Lienal Foot on All Shipments Beginning May 1—Industry Considers Tax a Severe Blow

FOLLOWING closely upon the heels of the announcement that the tax on theatre admission goes into effect among Canadian motion picture houses on June 1, bringing a revenue similar to that exacted in the United States through the same source, comes the announcement that the Canadian Government has imposed an additional tax on the industry. This time it is in the shape of an import tax which is given as one hundred and fifty per cent. greater than the former charge. This means that five cents per lineal foot must be paid on all prints or film going into Canada.

The measure went into effect May 1, apparently without any advance warning, and swept the American exporters and the Canadian film men completely off their feet.

Disruption Feared

In response to an investigation begun and developed by Motion Picture News, in order to give the whole industry any benefit of news in regard to the trend of events, the following telegram was received at the New York office of the News on May 3: "Disruption of the entire Canadian film trade is feared by the drastic tax on film which went into effect May 1. Industry in Toronto and Canada dazed by the blow. The increase in duty amounts to 150 per cent. The tax is now five cents per lineal foot, and it is expected many smaller exhibitors will be forced out of business on account of the high film rental which will have to be charged. Exchanges will approach the Government immediately in an effort to lighten the blow if possible. The situation is indeed critical for all."

It was learned that companies in the United States who ship film regularly to Canada heard, through rumor, that the tax was expected to go into effect at some future date, and to avoid falling under the heavy rate immediately put large shipments together and started them to the Provinces. It is thought though that these shippers, who figured on saving many hundreds of dollars by sending the films before the tax was imposed, were too late to escape the increased charge, as the shipments were made on May 1, the day the new rate went into effect.

Film Men Take Action

A representative of Motion Picture News in Canada, after going into the case thoroughly, reported on May 4, as follows: "Consternation reigns everywhere in the Canadian film trade, over the drastic measure that has been taken against the industry as a whole by the Canadian government. There is no question about the seriousness of the situation. Blank ruin stares many exchanges and exhibitors square in the face, unless some adjustment, somewhere, somehow, can be made to ease the situation.

"In an effort to arouse the entire exhibitor-body of Canada to a realization of their peril, three of Canada's largest exchanges took it upon themselves at noon Friday to telegraph every exhibitor in the entire Dominion of Canada, over 1,000 in number.

"The telegram read as follows:

"Wire, and have your lawyer, banker and other influential citizens wire your member of parliament at Ottawa, and ask him to oppose the imposition of the new tax of five cents per foot on film. This increase of 150 per cent over present duty is a larger burden than the Canadian moving picture industry can stand. In view of the fact that the increase on other articles averages about 10 per cent, this terrible tax imposed on films cannot be justified, and if imposed, it means the ruination of the business. Final action is being taken at Ottawa now, so lose no time wiring your member

Strong Argument Prepared

"Panic has apparently spread among both exhibitors and exchanges, and a desperate effort will be put forth immediately with the government officials in Ottawa to see what can be done.

"A deputation of prominent film men leaves Sunday night for Ottawa to confer with the government.

"If the import tax stands as it now is, it means that the three leading Canadian exchanges, Universal, Regal and Famous Players, will have to pay into government coffers in duty on imported film between $60,000 and $70,000 per year each. Many exhibitors will be absolutely forced out of business. The new duty on film being brought into Canada, which is now five cents per lineal foot, is absolutely prohibitive. The burden will be more than the industry can bear. The duty increase is more than 150 per cent. It will cut film importation to the bone, create a condition utterly without precedent in this business, and spell business disaster and financial ruin for hundreds of exhibitors, as well as many exchanges.

"The deputation which leaves Sunday night for Ottawa is prepared to put up a strong case, and the reception by the government will be watched with more interest than has ever been given to any film deputation to visit the Capital."

REMOVAL NOTICE

THE offices of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in Chicago have been moved from 110 South Dearborn street to Room 1004, Consumers Building, 220 South State street.

The trade both in and out of Chicago is cordially invited to pay us a visit, to get acquainted with us and our new location.

Clip this new address and keep it at hand. It may—and we will—be of service to you at any time you say.

National Board Holds Annual Luncheon

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures held its annual luncheon Friday in the Green Room of Hotel McAlpin. More than two hundred members and guests were present. During the course of the luncheon prominent members of the Board, representatives of Paramount and Fox, and public officials gave short addresses. Marguerite Clark was introduced by John Flynn, publicity and advertising director of Famous Players-Lasky, as one of the speakers. Miss Clark complimented the members of the Board on their efforts in favor of better pictures and spoke of her work in connection with the Third Liberty Loan drive. Miss Clark said that she had raised, personally, more than eighteen million dollars.

Other speakers were John Flynn, Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board; Hetty Gray Baker, Fox Film; George Middleton, author of "Polly With a Past," and prominent scenario writer; John M. Casey, license commissioner of Boston, and Lester M. Scott, executive secretary of Girls' Camp Fire.

Northwest Exhibitors in Convention

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest opens its annual convention at Minneapolis, Tuesday, May 8, with a large attendance of prominent theatre owners from all sections of the big territory embraced by the organization.

Preceding the opening of the session rumors were rife concerning a concerted movement to oust President Gilosky, Secretary Hitchcock, and other officeholders. Among those mentioned for president was O. A. Rowe, of St. Paul, while William A. Steffes and Ed Hinz were advanced as candidates for secretary.

The immediate withdrawal of the organization from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was being strongly agitated.

Eighth Anniversary of Rothacker Firm

Organized in May, 1910, the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., of Chicago, is this month celebrating its eighth anniversary. Congratulations and more power to the company and its hustling president.

E. J. MYRICK Managing director of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Oregon, writes: "I have been a very close observer of the Harrison reviews and find them of great value. They are a step in the direction of the goal and the exhibitor who does not heed will come to the end sooner than expected. The department is sure to become one of the busiest exhibitor's most valued assets. Can you imagine a man in the business who will not gladly pay MOTION PICTURE NEWS $10 a year for such a service? Mr. Harrison is doing a fine work and he should by all means be given every encouragement. With best wishes for the NEWS." SEE PAGE 2944.

Brunet Reveals Pathe Ideas

Asserts Latter's Success is Founded on Belief That Scenario is the Main Thing—Finance Good Productions

BASING his statements upon his knowledge of the policies that have made Charles Pathe one of the biggest international figures in the film world, Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., last week revealed the ideas of Mr. Pathe as reflected in the plans of the American Company.

"The remarkable business system of the French Pathe Company is evidence that it is an opportunity and a privilege for us to follow the policies, outlined by Mr. Pathe and properly adjusted to American conditions," said Mr. Brunet.

"His experience in the motion picture business cannot be doubted and contrary to what is true in most industries, that of the motion picture, according to him, does not lend itself to a combination of the elements that compose it. Manufacturing and distribution are industries and commercial propositions more or less to be compared to some existing organizations, but the production end is entirely different. By 'production,' I mean the scenario writer and the director, who at least must keep their own individuality.

"Only with difficulty is art commercialized, as well as fancy and originality, which are the bases of the motion picture industry, and those who would believe the contrary are wrong, especially if they also believe that it will suffice for them simply to obtain contracts with celebrated artists in order to result in the ultimate success of their company and prosperity in their business.

"Whatever his or her fame, there is no star capable of being worth the amounts required in producing the negative, if the scenario is only mediocre.

"Therefore, the scenario, which is the main point, is the brain-substance of individuals, who only with difficulty can be secured and associated and whose output cannot be forced and increased at will, even with much money."

Ochs Issues Convention Call

Exhibitors' League Will Hold Meeting in Boston Middle of July—National Association Will Also Be Represented

AN official call by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, issued May 4, formally set the time and place of the annual convention of that body, and the coincidental Exposition of the Motion Picture Industry, as July 13-20, at the Mechanics' Building, Boston.

The President of the United States has been asked to open the exposition, which will be held jointly by the Exhibitors' League and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Invitations were extended to all organizations connected with and affiliated with the Motion Picture Industry to hold their annual meetings and conventions simultaneously with the exposition. Already the conventions of The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers and The Society of Motion Picture Engineers have been scheduled for that time.

President Ochs' call put great emphasis on the importance of the work to be accomplished by the Exhibitors during the coming year, and because of this urged all State and local organizations to pay their per capita tax in order that a full quota of delegates and alternates might be sent to the convention. He was particularly anxious that the split that occurred in the ranks of the exhibitors at the last convention and which was only partially healed at the convention in Washington last winter, should be entirely healed so that the exhibitors might move as one in furthering any plans made by the league to render aid and support to the Government in response to the appeal made by President Wilson a year ago. That the aid already given has been great, the President has admitted in publicly commending the industry for services it has rendered, but Mr. Ochs points out that the opportunity for still greater service to come renders it imperative that the exhibitors tender their unanimous, whole-hearted support to the program adopted, and that it is therefore of the utmost importance that the coming convention and exposition be made the biggest and largest in the history of the business.

"Jake" Gerhardt Is with General Film

J. H. Gerhardt, long known to the theatrical and motion picture field, through his connection with the New York Dramatic Mirror, is a recent appointee at the headquarters office of General Film Company, in New York City. Mr. Gerhardt will be associated with Sales Manager W. F. Rodgers in certain specialized work.

Fire Does Big Damage at Lasky Studio

A row of buildings two hundred feet long, containing color photography, purchasing, publicity, photography, wall paper and drapery departments, together with the general stock room at the Lasky Hollywood studio, was totally destroyed by fire Tuesday afternoon, April 30. The dark stage for double exposure work was burned, and the small enclosed glass stage badly damaged The loss is estimated at $100,000.

The buildings were of frame construction, one and two stories high. It is thought the fire started in the building occupied by the color photography department. The cause is unknown.

Immediately following the fire it was announced that concrete and steel buildings will replace the ones destroyed, and that the work of rebuilding will begin at once.

No film or negative was lost, and the fire will not affect forthcoming releases in any way, it was stated.

Mid-West Distributing Company Changes Name

The Mid-West Civilization Company, Denver, Col., announces that it has changed its name to The Mid-West Greater Features Company. Heretofore, the company has handled only Thomas H. Ince's production in its territory. Recently, the announcement reads, the company has acquired the rights to Selig's "The Garden of Allah" and McClure's "The Warrior," for distribution in its territory.

Max Schubach, general manager, writes that "The Warrior" is booked for third runs; "The Garden of Allah" for first runs, and "Civilization" for second and third runs. The Mid-West Greater Features Company operates in the territory composed of Utah, Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico.

J. W. Burke is president of the company.

French Veterans Pay Visit to World Studio

On Tuesday of last week a number of the "Blue Devils," as the veteran French chasseurs now in this country are called, paid a visit to the World studios where Oscar Apfel was busy directing Kitty Gordon in her latest World Picture. Much to the surprise of all, Cameraman Lucien Gainguy was quickly in the center of the group of gesticulating poilus and it was necessary to call off production work for a few minutes. It seems that Gainguy was a sergeant in their organization during the first year of the war when he received the wound that forced his discharge.

Sheldon Takes Mutual Presidency

Position Vacated by John R. Freuler, Who Gives Lack of Moral and Financial Support as His Reason for Move—Hutchinson Quits Board

JAMES M. SHELDON on May 3 took up the reins attaching to the presidency of the Mutual Film Corporation, following the resignation on the previous day of John R. Freuler. The latter had occupied the chair as head of the Mutual Corporation since 1915, three years after the formation of the company.

Announcements of the change came both from Mr. Freuler and the Mutual Company, together with the statement that Samuel S. Hutchinson, of Chicago, had resigned from the board. Other changes were also made known, and it is expected the company will swing into a new stride which will carry its business along with a renewed vigor.

Thirty-six Film Exchanges

The announcement from Mutual was as follows:

"John R. Freuler today (May 2) resigned as president of the Mutual Film Corporation of Delaware, and James M. Sheldon of New York was elected his successor, at a meeting of the board of directors held at the concern's office at 220 South State street, Chicago.

"Warren Gorrell and Walter McLellan of the Federal Reserve Bank, Chicago, were elected to the board of directors. Samuel S. Hutchinson, of Chicago, resigned from the board.

"The officers of the corporation now include: G. W. Hall and John F. Cuneo, vice-presidents; Paul H. Davis, treasurer; I. C. Elston, Jr., assistant treasurer; Edward Stoddard, secretary, and H. G. Davis, assistant secretary.

"The Mutual Film Corporation is among the oldest and largest of the motion picture concerns. It includes a system of thirty-six film exchanges covering the United States and Canada. The Mutual is now distributing pictures starring Charles Chaplin, Edna Goodrich, the Charles Frohman stars, William Russell, Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher. The roster of stars which have been in its service through the period of its history includes a majority of the celebrities of the screen. Its gross output has ranged as high as one million feet of motion pictures a week."

James M. Sheldon, the new president of the Mutual, is known in the motion picture business through his connection with the Syndicate Film Corporation, as president of the Randolph Film Corporation and more recently as head of the Empire All-Star Corporation. Prior to his motion picture connection Mr. Sheldon was a lawyer.

"Business as usual" was Mr. Sheldon's terse statement on taking his new office.

Opposed in His Course

The announcement which is accredited to Mr. Freuler concerning his resignation, and which was prefaced with the statement: "Back of this announcement is the latest chapter in a long history of motion picture finance," was as follows:

"I have resigned from the Mutual Film Corporation for the reason that I have been opposed in the execution of the course which I have deemed to the best interests of the stockholders and creditors of the Mutual Film Corporation, including all of its subsidiaries.

James M. Sheldon, Newly-Appointed President of Mutual.

"I regret that I have not been given either the moral or financial support from those interested, which was necessary to the conservation of the interests mentioned.

"The destiny of the concern is now in the hands of a committee of three men, I. C. Elston, Jr.; Warren Gorrell and George W. Hall, directors and officers, and their associates.

"This committee represents the principal creditors of the Mutual Film Corporation. This group of men has purchased the assets of the Mutual Film Corporations of Delaware, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, New York, California and of Canada which previously were held by the Mutual Film Corporation of Virginia, the parent concern. The stock of these concerns is now held by the committee against claims from the principal creditors totaling about $700,000. The committee has given the stockholders one year in which to satisfy the claims and redeem the stock.

"It is to this operation and the steps by which it was performed that I have most strenuously objected.

"I have important motion picture plans in the process of consummation which will be announced probably in the early autumn."

The Mutual Film Corporation was organized in 1912 and three years later Freuler took the presidency of the concern.

"My Own U. S." Opens Brooklyn's Best

"My Own United States," the special Metro release, starring Arnold Daly, was picked as the opening bill at the Brevoort theatre, the handsomest house in that borough, for the opening week beginning April 30. The Tuesday night presentation was by invitation only and included the people most prominent in the civic life of the borough.

In addition to the feature, which was presented with a squad of United States marines, the current Universal Weekly and Charlie Chaplin's "A Dog's Life," were used.

The Brevoort, which is located at the corner of Brevoort place and Bedford avenue is the handsomest motion picture house in Brooklyn. It is under the direction of A. H. Schwartz, who also controls the Linden and the Rialto.

Widner at the Helm for Vitagraph at Capital

A. L. Widner, formerly of the Vitagraph office in Philadelphia, is now at the helm of affairs of the Washington Vitagraph exchange. He has surrounded himself with an excellent corps of assistants including Donald Allen from the Goldwyn office of Philadelphia, for the Baltimore branch; Karl Suelke from Paramount of Philadelphia, for the North Carolina territory; Eugene Wilson, well-known showman, for Poli's forces, for the Virginia and West Virginia territory, and Arthur VanDyke, from the Goldwyn office of Philadelphia, as booker.

High Now Branch Manager at Baltimore

Wallace High, formerly of the Kleine System, is directing affairs at the Baltimore branch of the Lust Super-Films Exchange. Six men from this exchange have entered the service of Uncle Sam—two in the Navy and four in the Army.

Perret Prepares Surprise

It was announced last week that Director Leonce Perret has a distinct surprise in store for the world. While he is carefully keeping the title, cast and nature of his new endeavor secret, it is known that the work will be a propaganda and that it will be under way very soon.

E. MANDELBAUM Head of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio, and for years one of the best known exhibitors in the country, declares in a letter: "I think the Harrison reviews a fine department and hope it will be continued. The longer this is in operation the more valuable it will become, both to you and to exhibitors. Exhibitors will find from constant reading that these reviews are dependable and they will take them into consideration in making their bookings. Assuring you of my pleasure in co-operating with MOTION PICTURE NEWS at all times." SEE PAGE 2946.

Fox Raps Chicago Censorship

In Speech at Hitchcock Dinner at Chicago Press Club Producer Defends "Cleopatra," Which Funkhouser Held Up

WILLIAM FOX has just returned to his New York office after a two weeks' business trip to the Middle West, which included visits to the Fox exchanges in Chicago, Indianapolis and Cincinnati.

While in Chicago he was among the celebrities present at the Press Club at a dinner given in honor of Raymond Hitchcock, the actor-manager. Mr. Fox had been ill in the Windy City but he made a special effort to be present to reciprocate for the compliment Mr. Hitchcock paid him in the latter's speech at the recent testimonial dinner given for Mr. Fox.

In his address at the Press Club, Mr. Fox spoke of the censorship problem in Chicago, which has long been a bone of contention between the local authorities and the producers. Mr. Fox vigorously defended the costuming in his production of "Cleopatra," on the grounds chiefly of historical accuracy. He pointed out that to have ignored the data which has come down through the centuries on the costumes and the customs of Cleopatra's time would have made the picture ridiculous and of no historical value.

"I have always opposed censorship of the kind that would deprive the screen—meaning the public—of the worth-while, artistic photoplay," Mr. Fox said. "I cannot understand any logical reason for the condition that has obtained under which such films may be exhibited everywhere except in a particular section of the West, where there has been nothing short of dictation as to the type of motion picture that the people can see.

"In practically every civilized city of the world, this authentic version of Cleopatra has been shown and received with great acclaim."

Mr. Fox told of the difficulties which confronted his organization in having the picture exhibited in Chicago. The city's Corporation Counsel recently overruled Major Funkhouser, the censor, and gave the film a white permit. At the dinner, Mr. Fox was introduced as a "great civic and philanthropic leader of New York City and a man who personally contributed $40,000 to a single charity and who has risked millions of dollars on his opinion of what the public wants in pictures."

"Joan" Intended as Spy-brake

Goldwyn Expects Mabel Normand Feature to Put Damper on German Propaganda—Is Not a Battle Picture

GOLDWYN'S production, starring Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg"—which is neither a war nor a battle picture—is a story that Goldwyn expects will put the brakes on insidious German propaganda in America.

It is intended as a faith and courage builder; an answer to those sly and secret tongues that are striking at the morale of the American people. For four years poisonous agents have been trying to tear down and undermine the faith of the American people, and now, in "Joan of Plattsburg," through the medium of a popular and beloved girl star of the screen, a motion picture producing organization has found the way to reach directly into the hearts of the public and offset the blows being struck at the national courage.

"Joan of Plattsburg," with a general appeal to both sexes, is directed nevertheless to the women of America. Men may react to false rumors, have their efficiency reduced through propaganda, but the faith of women is endurable and constitutes an impregnable fortress in times of national trial, declares the Goldwyn statement.

Knowing this, Goldwyn, when it accepted "Joan of Plattsburg" in its story form, asked Porter Emerson Browne, the author, to intensify the woman's appeal in his scenario. And Mr. Browne has succeeded. He has taken a little charter orphan living near the great Plattsburg encampment where Uncle Sam began training officers to lead our soldiers in the battle to make the world a decent place to live in. He has had this little Joan learn for the first time of the historic and inspiring Joan who led France into battle and conquered the enemy. He has made his little orphan character respond to the magic of the Joan of history; to create within herself the desire to parallel in this modern day the career of France's heroine. He has shown this little Joan of today revealing her disappointment when told that no one again could duplicate the career of Joan or Arc, but that every girl, as well as every boy and every man and woman, in the nation could be of as great service to her nation as the Maid of Orleans. And then comes that tense tight moment in the story of "Joan of Plattsburg" when the little heroine cries out: "What can I do to help my country?"

And the balance shows what she did.

Harrisburg May Restrict Billboards

Opposition has arisen in Harrisburg, Pa., to the proposed city ordinance now pending before Council which would place rigid restrictions on the erection and use of billboards within the city. This measure, which imposes a tax of one-fourth cent annually on each equare foot of advertising space on billboards and places a penalty of $25 to $100, or imprisonment, upon violators of its provisions, is regarded as a direct slap at theatrical advertising. One clause particularly objectionable to theatre men is that which prohibits the placing of any advertising matter on "any wall, window, door or fence," without the written permission of the owner of such property. This, it is pointed out, would make it almost impossible to continue extensively the placing of window posters advertising motion picture and other shows—a practice which is very much resorted to in Harrisburg. One of the leading Harrisburg daily newspapers, "The Patriot," in an editorial on April 30 attacked the proposed ordinance on the ground that in its present form it would accomplish little good. The same day, when the bill was called up on second reading in Council, action was postponed at the request of Mayor Keister, the father of the bill, who said he thought there ought to be a conference on the measure before it is advanced further, in view of the opposition that has developed.

Ohio Censors Ban Tugging at Skirts

Reports from the Ohio Board of Censorship for the week ended April 13 show that 166 reels of films were reviewed. Nine eliminations were made in four dramas and four comedies. Cut-outs ordered included drunken scenes, questionable sub-titles and suggestive bits of action. The board also has adopted the rule that scenes showing men pulling at the skirts of women must be eliminated. Films recently put under this ban for such scenes include "His Day Out," "Saucy Madeline" and "Walter's Wasted Life."

Pictures for Department Store Employes

The Montreal office of General Film Company reports that in connection with its welfare work Goodwin's, Ltd., a big department store of the city, conducts a noon-hour picture show of one reel, the program of which is supplied solely by General Film Company. So successful has this proved that another big store is said to be considering adopting the idea.

Funkhouser Draws Fire of Producers

Battle Now Centres Around "My Four Years in Germany" and "Hearts of the World"—Pennsylvania Board Also Accused of Pro-Germanism

MAJOR M. L. C. FUNKHOUSER, veteran of many censor skirmishes, some of which he has won and others in which he came out second best, has met the biggest battle of his battling career, and "military" experts in the motion picture industry are predicting that the Chicago terror will probably be reduced in rank as a result of his most recent offensive.

Censor Funkhouser opened a big drive on all fronts by ordering eliminations in "Hearts of the World" and following up this move by an attack on "My Four Years in Germany," the latter of which was wholly unprepared for the blow. These actions led to accusations of pro-Germanism against Funkhouser, which later spread to include the Pennsylvania Board, which also objected to "Hearts of the World."

Both Films Approved

Both of these films in question have been approved not only by exhibitors and the public in various cities, but by officials in Government circles, as pictures worthy of presentation everywhere in an effort to acquaint the people with facts in regard to conditions as they exist here and abroad.

The fight at last reports was still raging, and the managements of both productions are lining up their forces against the Chicago Board and the Philadelphia Board. In the meantime, "Hearts of the World" has been withdrawn from the Garrick in Philadelphia because six scenes were taken out, spoiling the feature.

The following telegram of protest against the alleged action of the Chicago censor, M. Funkhouser, was sent to President Wilson, asking him to have the United States District Attorney in Chicago investigate the cutting of Griffith's picture, "Hearts of the World," because of Funkhouser's alleged German sympathies:

"Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, the White House, Washington, D. C.:

"Sir—I respectfully call your attention to the following facts:

"We are presenting in Chicago and in other cities D. W. Griffith's latest photo drama, 'Hearts of the World,' taken by Mr. Griffith upon the battlefields of France by special permission of David Lloyd George and the British War Office. One-half of the proceeds of this picture in England is to go to the British Government for relief work.

"The city censor of Chicago, Funkhouser, apparently of German sympathies, has ordered the elimination of two important scenes which show German brutality in the occupied territory of France. One shows a German soldier stabbing a wounded Frenchman with a bayonet on the battlefield, an actual incident described to Mr. Griffith by a Colonel of the British Army. The other scene shows German officers in a dugout forcing their unwelcome attentions upon French girls, who are condemned to virtual slavery, based upon actual facts in possession of the British Government.

"These scenes, together with the entire picture, constitute tremendous propaganda of a patriotic nature, arousing audiences in New York and other cities to great pitch because of the absolute truth of the indictment against Germany. The censor of Chicago has eliminated these scenes apparently because of his German sympathies. May we respectfully appeal to you to have the United States District Attorney in Chicago investigate this matter?

Gerard Makes Appeal

In regard to "My Four Years in Germany," the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, May 4, made the following announcement:

"Ambassador Gerard will take the case up personally with Federal authorities in Washington to see if means cannot be taken to curb Funkhouser's evident determination to prevent films showing German acts of brutality from being shown in Chicago. It is believed that through his personal acquaintance with Attorney General Gregory and George Creel, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information, Mr. Gerard will be able to bring about an investigation of the 'Major's' activities along lines that smack of uncertain Americanism.

"In slashing 'My Four Years in Germany,' Funkhouser has run afoul of a film that has already received the unqualified endorsement of Government officials in charge of Liberty Loan publicity and army heads interested in giving the men in the various U. S. cantonments a vivid idea of Germany's diplomatic perfidy and barbarous methods of warfare.

"On May 3, the following wire was received by J. D. Williams of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in reply to his of the day previous: 'Have taken matter up with Attorney General, and Federal Government is without power. Suggest an instant appeal to Governor Lowden demanding investigation and removal. (Signed) George Creel, Chairman.'

"On May 4, J. D. Williams wired Aaron Jones of Chicago as follows: 'Warners demand eliminations put back and film run in entirety or not at all. H. M. Warner or Gerard will make special trip to Chicago to fight case to finish if necessary. Forwarding you by day letters wires endorsement Governor Missouri, Mayor Indianapolis.'"

Bill in Congress for 15-Cent Coin

The movement for the coinage of a silver fifteen-cent piece has progressed to such a point that a bill authorizing the coin has been introduced in the Lower House of Congress by Representative George F. O'Shaunessy, of Rhode Island, who presented the measure at the request of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

A campaign has been launched by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in co-operation with the exhibitors' organizations throughout the United States for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear upon the members of the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures to favorably report the bill at an early date. The 17,000 exhibitors whose patrons number 15,000,000 daily, have been requested to communicate with their Congressmen at Washington, urging them to work for a report recommending the bill by the committee and to vote for the measure when it comes before Congress.

The bill, introduced by Representative O'Shaunessy, in no way reflects the ideas of any single individual or company, but of ninety per cent. of the motion picture producers and distributors, the supply and equipment companies, trade paper publications and exhibitors as represented in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. This great organization is recognized by the Government officials and is the unit which, under the able leadership of its president, William A. Brady, has co-operated most effectively with the various Federal departments since the declaration of war by this country.

ERNST BOEHRINGER General Manager of the Boehringer Amusement Company, of New Orleans, says of the Harrison reviews: "If you were to discontinue this feature some other trade journal would take it up. It is valuable to every exhibitor who has enough common sense to know that he doesn't know it all and who welcomes the other man's viewpoint. We have not seen every picture Mr. Harrison has criticised, of course, but we have seen enough of them, enough to feel that his criticism is fair. Unfortunately producer-distributor advertising seems to bias some of the other criticism we read, so there are some critics in whom we place very little confidence." SEE PAGE 2948.

Hart Builds Fine Organization

Head of Government Division of Films Has Efficient Staff of Assistants—First American War Film Completed

CHARLES S. HART has been discharging the duties of the office of Director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information for only one month, yet in that brief space of time he has succeeded in perfecting an organization which bids fair to make this division of George Creel's department not only of great value to the United States Government but to the entire film world.

The first result of the work undertaken by the Division of Films is the completion of a seven-reel feature film entitled "Pershing's Crusaders." This is the first of a series of Official American War Films, and it will be shown for the first time at the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, during the week beginning Monday, April 28, Arrangements have also been completed for engagements in the principal theatres of New York, Chicago, and sixteen of the largest cities in the United States. Other big features are in advanced stages of production.

In the organization of this division, Mr. Hart has selected as the heads of the various departments those who have had wide experience in their respective fields.

At the head of the production department is Herbert C. Hoagland, who was for years editor of the Pathe Weekly. He not only has charge of the feature films but will also handle the Weekly War Review.

George Bowles, who is manager of the Feature Film Department, has for years been a prominent figure in the theatrical world. For twelve years he was general manager for Wagenhals & Kemper. He managed D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" during its phenomenal year's run in Chicago, and afterwards handled the same picture for a year and a half in Australia, New Zealand, Polynesia and Hawaii.

Howard Herrick, publicity manager, has for the past three years handled publicity and advance work for "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" in the large cities. Prior to that he was advance representative for William Faversham, Virginia Harned, Marie Dressler, and such successes as "The Pink Lady," "The Shepherd King" and "The Clansman."

Marcus A. Beeman, assistant director, formerly secretary of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce, and later secretary of the State of New Jersey Chamber of Commerce, is in charge of special propaganda work among patriotic and other societies.

G. A. Smith, manager of distribution, was formerly assistant general manager of Pathe.

Gardner W. Wood, advertising manager, has held important positions in the advertising departments of Paramount and Essanay.

Louis E. Loeb, formerly comptroller with Paramount, holds the same position in the Division of Films.

Mrs. Jane Stannard Johnston, whose work has been known in the film industry from the early days of Paramount Pictures Corporation, of which she was advertising and publicity manager, is secretary of the Division of Films.

May Allison Sent to Coast by Metro

Maxwell Karger and George D. Baker, respectively production managers of Metro's East and West coast studios, have come to an amicable agreement in the transferring of two of Metro's stars. Viola Dana has returned from a seven months' sojourn on the Pacific coast, and will make further productions in the Eastern location, and May Allison will change places with Miss Dana, going to California as soon as she has completed the third in her series as an individual star.

Walthall in Artcraft Features?

It was reported from the West Coast by wire, May 4, that Henry Walthall had signed to appear in D. W. Griffith productions for Artcraft.

"Our Boys in France" Tobacco Fund

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has received a check for $4, contributed by the patrons of the Majestic theatre, Oakland, Neb., to the Cigarette Division of "Our Boys in France" Tobacco Fund. A large carton of cigarettes and smoking tobacco, in original packages, from the patrons of Rochester theatre, Rochester, Wash., and forwarded by Manager Clyde Paton, is also acknowledged.

Libston Addresses Buyers

John A. Libston, treasurer of the Interstate Film Company, and producer of "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," gave an interesting talk to a number of film buyers who attended a trade showing of this film last week. Mr. Libston briefly reviewed the Zeppelin L-21 and its activities.

In and Out of Town

Simon Ehrlich and A. F. Coleman, representing Ehrlich Bros., and the Saenger Amusement Company, Shreveport, La., owners of a circuit of nine theatres in Louisiana, were in New York, last week, on business.

Bert Tiller, manager Arcade theatre, Lake Charles, La., dropped in on New Yorkers, last week, combining a business and pleasure trip.

Frank Zambreno, Chicago, exchangeman and head of the Unity Film Company, left New York for Chicago, last week, taking with him prints of several independent features which he purchased for his territory. Among his purchases was the entire series of Jester Comedies.

Ivan Abramson, director general, Graphic Film Corporation, left New York last week, with the "When Men Betray" company, to shoot several exteriors in the mountains of Virginia.

E. M. Porter, general manager, Precision Machine Company, left New York, last week, on an extended trip through the West in the interest of the company.

George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, was in New York over the week-end.

Martin J. Quigley, Exhibitors' Herald, Chicago, is in town.

Max L. Levenson Holds a High State Office

Max L. Levenson, of the Boston law firm of Levenson & Levenson, has been appointed Assistant Attorney General of the State of Massachusetts. He is the youngest man ever to hold the office.

Mr. Levenson has long been identified with the motion picture industry, both in a legal and business way. He and his brother, Joseph M. Levenson, have been personal counsel to Hiram Abrams and Walter E. Greene, the executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for many years, as well as New England counsel for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Levenson has also been counsel for, and associated with, the late Mitchel H. Mark and Moe Mark in all of their theatrical enterprises. He is also director and assistant treasurer of the Boston Photoplay Company, and director of the Metro Pictures Corporation of New England, and the American Feature Film Co.

East and West Boost Loan Sky High

Three Billion Goal Greatly Exceeded as Members of the Industry Settle Down for a Rest Following Long Grind—West Coast Claims a Record

THE Third Liberty Loan Campaign came to a close the night of May 4 following a month of vigorous drives in which the motion picture industry the country over played a prominent part, and found the coffers of Uncle Sam bulging over with the proceeds from the sale of Bonds.

That the industry in all its branches is responsible in a great measure for the success of the Third Loan is readily conceded by officials keeping check on the situation. Both the East and West Coast film colonies gave good accounts of themselves, the stars and producers pitching in and selling Bonds as well as buying them. It is said the West Coast is responsible for the sale of $27,000,000 worth of Bonds, and the East Coast is expected to nearly equal that amount.

Great Results Shown

A dispatch to MOTION PICTURE NEWS from Los Angeles said:

"Members of the film colony of Los Angeles have purchased and have been responsible for more Liberty Bonds than any other class of business or professional people in California or the Western States, and it is expected the total sum by the end of the drive will be equal to one-twentieth of the Los Angeles quota, something over $27,000,000.

"On Saturday morning, April 27, the figures for the outright purchases for people engaged with the several studios was a trifle more than $1,100,000. This amount does not include the sums raised by the stars from the several studios at meetings held nightly from an English tank in Central Park, Los Angeles, which were conducted under the direction of J. C. Jessen of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"The opening night, April 20, Sessue Hayakawa was the star appearing, and without lights or music sold $6,350. Monday evening, Viola Dana and Bert Lytell, Metro stars, took subscriptions totaling $13,400. Of this amount, Lytell purchased $5,000. William Desmond, Roy Stewart, and a bevy of girls from the Triangle, had the tank on Tuesday evening, and sold bonds to the amount of $6,150. William Duncan, Nell Shipman, Larry Seaman, Grace Darmond and others from the Vitagraph, including Studio Manager W. S. Smith, sold bonds on Wednesday evening to the sum of $16,500. The first three named gave $700 to apply as first payments on bonds, providing the purchaser made a like payment. This greatly stimulated the sales.

"Dorothy Dalton, Robert McKim and Wally Reid represented Paramount on Thursday night, other stars who promised to appear not being present. Miss Dalton purchased $35,000 of bonds in addition to what she had taken with the studio allotment which totaled $182,000.

Theda Bara Scores

The greatest meeting of the week was that presided over by Theda Bara on Friday afternoon at three o'clock. Miss Bara purchased $10,000 worth of bonds and the crowd swelled the total sum to $38,500. It was estimated there were at least 35,000 people at the park during the afternoon. The total sales numbered 269, and the cash receipts were $6,490.

Friday evening was Universal night with General Manager Henry McRae serving as master of ceremonies. Rupert Julian, Ella Hall, Douglas Gerrard, Mae Murray, Priscilla Dean, Kenneth Harlan, Monroe Salisbury, Ruth Clifford and others. Mae Murray, who had previously bought $40,000 worth of bonds, subscribed for $3,000 more, and gave kisses with thousand-dollar purchases. Others of the Universal bought liberally. Ruth Roland, who was present, purchased a $1,000 bond.

Clara Kimball Young was in charge for Saturday evening. Monday, April 29, was American night with Mary Miles Minter, "Big" Bill Russell, Margarita Fisher, and thirty other American people appearing. Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle and his gang, including Alice Lake and Sophye Bernard topped the bill for Tuesday evening. Wednesday was Pathe night with stars and leading people from Astra, Diando and Rolin Studios present, including Fannie Ward, who has bought $50,000; Frank Keenan, Bryant Washburn, Bessie Love, Baby Marie Osborne, Ruth Roland, Bebe Daniels, Betty Compson, Toto, Harold Lloyd, George Larkin and others. Thursday evening Al E. Christie commandeered the tank, and by the aid of his entire company managed the meeting.

The amount for these meetings was $164,300, with every indication that the personal subscriptions would be near the two million mark when all returns are in.

MONTHLY INDEX

A FULL index to the pictures released during the month of April will be found in page 3009.

There you will find the title of the picture, the maker, the number of parts, the page of the NEWS on which it was reviewed, the page of the Ad-Talk, Music Cue Sheet, etc.

A mine of information. Especially if you file each month's index away. Do you? Or must you look for a needle in a haystack when you want an old review?

Directors Do Their Bit

The Motion Picture Directors' Association held a special meeting on April 30, to further the Liberty Loan.

The meeting was addressed by P. A. Powers, who stated that thirteen million daily witness motion pictures; that the directors are doing most patriotic work by instilling into their productions elements to strengthen the morale of the people.

Mr. Powers vigorously urged the members present to continue the work, citing many helpful ways this would be of benefit to our country during the war. The subscriptions to the Liberty Loan among the thirty odd directors present amounted to $161,150. This did not include the directors of the New York Studio who were out of town, nor those of the Los Angeles Studio, M. P. D. A., which report has not as yet been received. A conservative estimate of the subscription of the directors of moving pictures to the third Liberty Loan was set at a half million dollars.

Pathe Not Asleep

J. W. Kyle, film editor of Pathe, and secretary of the Pathe Club, who was assigned by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, to canvass the home office in the interest of the third Liberty Loan, succeeded in raising $6,500 in one afternoon. Practically every employe in the office who subscribed to this amount already had purchased bonds elsewhere. Mr. Kyle got several additional thousands before the Government's drive officially ended. Members of the Pathe home office were liberal buyers of the first and second bond issues.

All stars rendered excellent service, and it seems unfair to mention one without mentioning all, but lack of space does not permit.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation prepared and paid for a full-page advertisement in a New York daily to give the Loan a farewell push.

Employes Over the Top

On Monday, May 6, MOTION PICTURE NEWS was informed by wire from the coast that employes of Los Angeles studios subscribed nearly $1,000,600 through the film industry, and Chairman Charles Christie estimated that the amount through other channels was $500,000. Sennett-Paramount night at the "tank" brought $14,500, and goodly amounts were likewise raised by other companies. The total amount credited to the film industry of the West Coast, on May 6, was approximately two and a half million dollars.

Lusitania Sinking in Cartoon at Strand

Windsor McCay's serious animated cartoon, "The Sinking of the Lusitania," was shown the week of April 28 at the Strand theatre, New York. The picture has all the appearance of motion photography.

DEE ROBINSON Manager of the Apollo Amusement Company, of Peoria, Illinois, writes: "I have noticed the Harrison reviews and think they are just what we want. They seem to be his honest opinion of a feature regardless of the maker, and I hope you will keep this department up." Other prominent exhibitors who were quoted as enthusiastically endorsing the Harrison reviews are Charles Barnham, of the Minneapolis Strand, and Harold Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. SEE PAGE 2955.

Canadian Provinces Prosper

Phil Kauffman of Regal Makes Tour and Finds but One Dull Spot—West Recovers from Crash

PHIL KAUFFMAN, general sales manager of the Regal Films, Limited, has just arrived back at the head offices of the company, in Toronto, after a trip which embraced the entire Dominion of Canada from coast to coast. He was gone six weeks, and in that length of time covered every important centre in this country.

In his trip across the continent, Mr. Kauffman had an opportunity of getting real first-hand information regarding conditions as they exist in the Canadian film business today, and he declares that throughout the length and breadth of the land is a distinct feeling of trade optimism that augurs well for the future.

Mr. Kauffman first visited the Maritime provinces. In Halifax, he found the exhibitors doing capacity business. In fact, business with them was never better. The town is jammed constantly with soldiers and sailors of the Allies, and has fully recovered from the disastrous explosion. Business in St. John and other cities in the maritime provinces is excellent.

"The province of Quebec is practically the only dull spot on the Canadian map at present," said Mr. Kauffman. "There has been a decided unrest among the French population in this French-Canadian province, and the unsettled condition here has greatly affected the exhibitors' end of the film business. The activity of the Military Police in enforcing conscription in this province, has made the young men afraid to congregate in any public amusement place, as the authorities have an unpleasant habit of swooping down upon a theatre and making the young men show reason for their non-appearance in uniform.

"In the Canadian West I found that trade conditions were really very good in spite of the war, higher admission prices, and the slump which struck the West some time ago. The West seems to be recovering rapidly from the effects of the general real estate crash, and if a good crop is secured this year, the Canadian West should be placed solidly on its feet. The dullness, which existed in Winnipeg, has practically disappeared. The Daylight Savings Bill is hurting somewhat until the people get used to the new measure.

"In Calgary everything and everybody was bustling. Conditions were exceptionally good in this city. In Edmonton, the situation was fair to middling, while in Vancouver, I found conditions very similar to those existing in Halifax, N. S.

"I was greatly pleased to see the great change in the manner in which business is conducted between the various exchanges and the exhibitors. The exhibitors are now beginning to realize, thanks to a wide-awake Exchange Managers' Association, that a contract is not a mere 'scrap of paper.' Exhibitors now live up to the contracts they sign, with the pleasant result that the exhibitors are not being oversold by the film salesmen."

Rothacker News Notes from Chicago

E. F. Lessner, of the advertising department of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has resigned to report at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., where he will join the colors.

John Hahn, assistant secretary, is making an extended trip through the West in the interest of the Rothacker organization. Mr. Hahn will spend several days in Denver at the studios of the National Film Corporation, a day or so at Salt Lake City visiting the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit there, and then will go direct to Los Angeles, where he will devote two or three weeks to personal calls on the Rothacker customers and friends in that territory. Mr. Hahn expects to return to Chicago about May 28.

Watterson R. Rothacker has returned from New York after having attended a convention of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

E. O. Blackburn, of the sales department, has returned from his Eastern trip, where he was personally directing the production of a number of multiple reel industrial pictures.

Jack Byrne, of the studio department, is in Minneapolis, Minn., co-operating with Major Schmidt in the production of a picture to be presented by the United States Fuel Administration.

G. S. Anderson, of the sales department, has just returned from an extensive trip through southern Illinois, where he was supervising a number of industrial productions.

Steger Completes Marion Davies Feature

Julius Steger has completed the interiors and exteriors for "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," featuring Marion Davies. The picture is now in the process of assembling and editing and will be ready for release in June.

"Joan of Plattsburg" Is Shown to Press

Members of the trade and daily press were guests at a private showing of the Goldwyn patriotic production, "Joan of Plattsburg," at the Stanley theatre, New York, on Tuesday, April 29. The picture was presented to the accompaniment of an appropriate special musical program. Following the showing the members of the press and Goldwyn officials partook of a luncheon in a private room at Murray's.

Porter Emerson Browne, author of the picture, was the guest of honor, and the only speaker at the luncheon. Mr. Browne, one of the founders of the Vigilantes, a group of authors banded together to assist the United States in the successful prosecution of the war, spoke of the necessity for such pictures as "Joan of Plattsburg," which besides being of entertainment value were patriotic propaganda of the best sort. Mr. Browne has made a study of the psychology of the American people during the war, and says that such productions as "Joan of Plattsburg" are the kind needed at the present time.

Niles Welch Among Most Popular Leads

Niles Welch, the young leading man who has been forging his way to the front with such steady strides recently, has become one of the most popular leading men in pictures, and seemingly deserves the credit that is his.

One of the most recent branches of his popularity extended to the four-minute field. The young star's talks in theatres and other places where the services of a four-minute-man are in demand, have been straight to the point and very positive of result. In addition to this work he has gone ahead with his motion picture work, his latest activities before the camera embracing appearances in "Reclaimed," the production which Harry McRae Webster will place on the market shortly.

Mr. Welch has been leading man for Mae Marsh and other popular stars, in addition to starring alone in several productions. His performance in "The Unbeliever" held such a degree of merit that many favorable comments were heard.

Wants Another Wallop at the Hun

Robert Klein, character actor at the American studios at Santa Barbara, who was wounded while fighting for France and was invalided home a year and a half ago, has again volunteered, this time with Uncle Sam, and has been assigned to the Hospital Corps at Camp Kearney.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Ince?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

THOMAS H. INCE—"Thomas Handsome" we would fittingly call him were he an actor and were we writing for gushy fan circulation—has probably wondered why he hasn't appeared earlier in this series.

Granting, of course, that Thomas H. knows this series is in existence.

Others, who do know of it, have been wondering.

So we suppose explanations are in order.

Thomas H. Ince has been on the schedule for this series for a long, long time, but we have kept postponing the interview in the vain hope that he would come to New York on a visit and enable us to give an up-to-the-minute close-up flash.

But it doesn't happen.

That man Ince surely does love his work—and California. He just sticks to his studio lot as if success hadn't long ago made it possible for him to take life much easier.

Perhaps that is why "Supervised by Thomas H. Ince" means so much. Mr. Ince is on the job every sunrise to see that it does mean something.

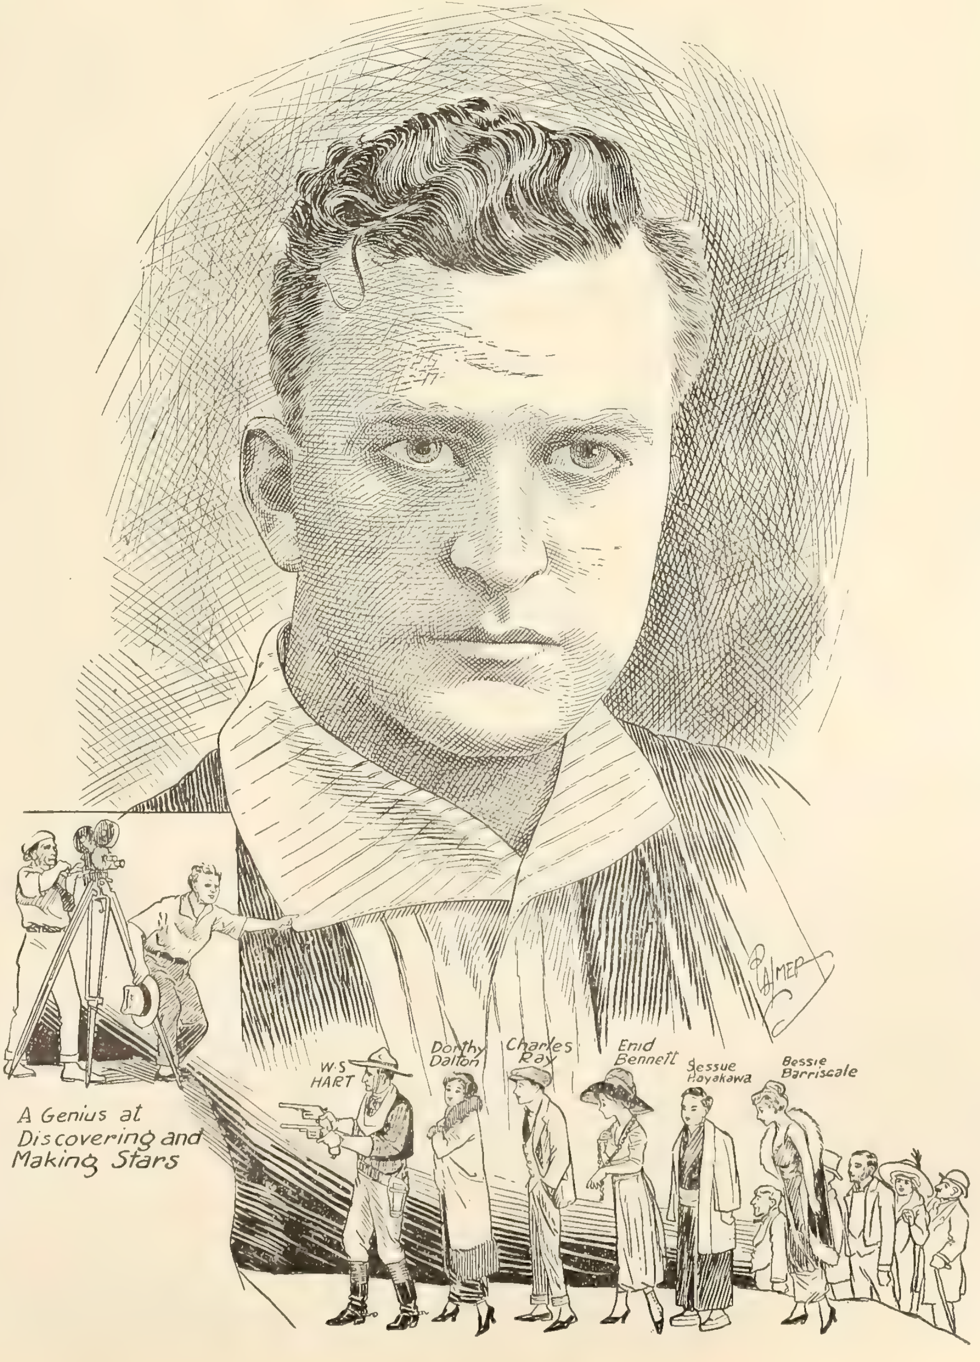
But to get back to our opening thought.

People have been asking us why we haven't told them what kind of a fellow Ince is. We haven't because he wouldn't leave California and enable us to get a first-hand interview. His case is much the same, though it also reverses, as that of J. Stuart Blackton, who hasn't appeared yet because he ran away on us—to California.

We'll get even with both by writing them up in their absence.

We are tempted to write Mr. Ince up through the medium of our "Exhibitors' Box Office Reports."

Have you ever noticed the frequent recurrence of a particular phrase in those reports—used by the exhibitor in Maine and the exhibitor in Michigan—"Ince standard."



A Genius at Discovering and Making Stars

A few exhibitors have reached the point where they don't even bother to tell us that they thought the picture good—they just write "Ince standard." That's enough.

It's something to have created a standard of value in this picture game.

It's an achievement—and in that achievement is the index to the personality of the man Ince.

Thomas H. Ince takes everything he does seriously—he puts all there is of him into everything he does.

He came into the picture game because it offered a job—and he was an actor out of a job. That was in the early days when motion pictures weren't a very serious matter.

But did Tom Ince treat them as a passing time-killer?

No—he took them seriously. From the start—and from the start he made good. And he kept on taking everything he did seriously—and kept on making good.

When the early years brought dollars in undreamt of abundance, Thomas H. went seriously at the task of enjoying life—and he took his family along with him.

No one ever called you into a corner to whisper a sub-rosa morsel about Director Tom Ince.

He even took serious joy out of the stage folk who a few years previously hadn't much thought for Actor Tom Ince—and less when he went into the despised "movies."

The changes of a few years brought them to Director Thomas H. Ince looking for—jobs. And be it said—even while he got serious delight in letting them witness evidences of his changed state—if Tom Ince had the job and if the former scoffer fitted it—he got it.

There's one other thing that Thomas H. Ince has reduced to a serious standardized science—and that is the discovery and development of screen stars. He's a regular Christopher Columbus at that.

The Reader Has His Say

A Snappy Answer to Anarchist on the House Organ Question

Mr. William A. Johnston, Editor,
Motion Picture News, New York.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

As editor of "Progress-Advance," the house organ published by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, I desire to comment upon the article published in the May 4 issue of the Motion Picture News, in which house organs as a species were attacked unmercifully by your anonymous correspondent, "Anarchist."

After reading this, I came to the conclusion that "Anarchist" was not on the mailing list for "Progress-Advance." I came to this conclusion, not because I think the paper is perfect, but because nearly all of those ON THE MAILING LIST have opinions totally different from those expressed by "Anarchist."

We are in daily receipt of letters—unsolicited—from readers of the paper, in which we are told that it is indispensable to wide-awake exhibitors. We receive about five requests a day from exhibitors who wish to be placed on the mailing list.

The aim of "Progress-Advance" is to be of service to the exhibitor showing Paramount and Artcraft pictures. We claim that it is fulfilling its mission; we have documentary evidence to prove it.

Let me take a few specific instances. Recently a "Want Ad" department was inaugurated, as a free service to readers. In order to test this department, we had replies directed to this office. There has been an average of four answers to every advertisement published.

The other departments are not so easily tested, but we were recently assured of their value by a coupon we published, in which exhibitors were asked to specify the departments they found useful, those they found useless, and others they would like to have included as regular features. The returns on this coupon were numerous enough to constitute a criterion whereby the paper could be reorganized.

To meet the suggestions of these exhibitors, several departments were cut to half their size, and six new features were added. This was in line with our policy to give the exhibitor the sort of magazine which will be of real service. We are still open to suggestions from exhibitors, and if sufficient demand is felt for any change, that change will be made. A magazine which is edited to suit the expressed demands of its readers cannot very well be ridiculous to those readers. "Anarchist" says that all exhibitors find all house organs ridiculous. The readers of "Progress-Advance" assure us that "Progress-Advance" is valuable.

"Anarchist" selects several stock departments of the average house organ to hold up to special ridicule. Among these are "Publicity Piffle," "Specimen Ads," "Exhibitors' Service," "Studio Gossip," "Music Cues," etc.

There is no "publicity piffle" in "Progress-Advance." We feel that the exhibitor can find all of the "publicity piffle" he needs in the trade papers, and we consequently devote every page of our house organ to service.

The Specimen Advertisements, or criticisms of exhibitors' advertising, are prepared by one of the most important advertising agencies in America. Instead of considering this department useless exhibitors constantly send in samples of their advertisements, with requests for criticisms. Many of them build their following advertisements acording to the suggestions given. In this connection the following letter is of interest:

"We have been pleased to note that you have seen fit to use two of our advertisements for the Globe theatre in your department. One, three or four weeks ago, on Charles Ray in 'His Mother's Boy,' and a recent one on the Mack Sennett diving girls in 'It Pays to Exercise.'

"Sincerity is seldom a flatterer, but in this case I feel very much complimented because I know you are sincere, as I know that you sometimes use very uncomplimentary remarks about advertising.

"We shall be pleased to forward you copies of our advertising from time to time and assure you that anything you desire to say at any time, whether it be good or bad, meets with our hearty approval.

"We are enthusiastic readers of 'Progress-Advance.'

"(Signed) D. L. CORNELIUS, Mgr.
"Saenger Amusement Co., Inc."

The "Exhibitors' Service page in 'Progress-Advance'" is made up chiefly of suggestions by exhibitors, which they have found successful in building business. We often have the pleasure of seeing these ideas worked up successfully by other exhibitors. This page is not made up of advice by those who never ran a theatre in their lives, as "Anarchist" suggests. It is made up of suggestions from the most successful exhibitors in the country.

The Music Cues are used by nearly all Paramount-Artcraft exhibitors, which includes the largest theatres in America. Besides these stock departments with which the writer finds fault, we have several other features which he does not mention, and which, as far as we know, are not included in other house organs.

As an answer, then, to "Anarchist's" question: "Whyinell is the house organ?" let me give a few comments from readers of "Progress-Advancse":

E. D. Rhine, Manager of the Bates theatre, Attleboro, Mass., when asked in a circular to give his estimate of the value of all the trade papers in the field, gave this answer:

"'Progress-Advance' answers the purpose of all the trade papers, as far as we are concerned."

Carl W. Andre, Palace theatre, Kewanee, Wisconsin, recently wrote this:

"When it comes to real good stuff, 'Progress-Advance' has everything backed off the boards. A little paper, but big in ideas and suggestions. A valuable aid to exhibitors."

Wagman and Light, of Pittsburgh, who handle the advertising for 130 motion picture theatres, recently wrote:

"We would appreciate very much if you would forward us a copy of each edition of 'Progress-Advance' since its inception. We always find it chuck full of ideas and wish to complete our files."

Frang I. Barzelay, an exhibitor of Everett, Mass., wrote regarding a recent special number:

"Just a word of praise for the 'Publicity Number' of 'Progress-Advance,' which, in my opinion, was a 'white man's number.' It should prove a great help to exhibitors. In other words, it should help them to help themselves. Let us have some more of that kind of stuff."

The Publicity Number was also the subject of a complimentary write-up in the New York Times.

Hugh Otis, manager of the Otis-Renner Theatre Company, Hackensack, N. J., wrote in only to-day:

"I have noticed in your last two issues, footages on feature films. This is a big help to the exhibitors, as it gives them a line on what singles to book to fill up the show. I had intended to write you about this several times but it has slipped my mind. I also want to compliment you on the music cues, which I cut from each issue and hand to my orchestra leader.

"I note also you have given a review on May productions which will be beneficial.

"The object of this letter is simply to acknowledge the benefits derived from 'Progress-Advance' for which I thank you."

I do not suppose you have space for any more comments, Mr. Johnston, but if you have, I shall be both able and pleased to let you have a full page or two pages of them. And if you will let me have "Anarchist's" name and address, in order that I can put him on the mailing list, I have an idea that his appreciative comment will be among them.

Very sincerely,
FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION.
PATRICK KEARNEY,
Editor Progress-Advance.

Metro Feature Arouses Washington

The outstanding event of a patriotic week in Washington was the Red Cross benefit performance at Harry M. Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre when "My Own United States" was presented before official Washington and a capacity audience that cheered the production to the echo. The occasion was a benefit of the Interstate Commerce Commission Red Cross Auxiliary, a branch of the big central body which has as members the wives of cabinet officers, Senators and other officials.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson occupied a special box and became so enthused over the patriotic character of the production that she not only applauded but at the conclusion of the showing is said to have exclaimed:

The Knickerbocker Theatre was especially decorated under the direction of Arthur L. Robb, who is house manager for Mr. Crandall, and patriotic bunting was displayed everywhere.

R .F. Bingham interpolated in the sixth reel with a stanza of the song, "My Own United States," intensifying the dramatic effect considerably. The ushers were all debutantes of Washington society.

"My Own United States" completed a week's run at the Casino Theatre, another of the Crandall theatres, and made a remarkable impression.

General Co-operates with Kleine in Canada

Under an agreement just put into effect, General Film Company, Ltd., of Canada, and the George Kleine System are cooperating in Canada. While the George Kleine System retains its complete identity the business of the Kleine exchange is being handled by General Film on a service basis. In Montreal the exchange will probably be located in the quarters of the George Kleine System, while in Toronto the General offices will become the home of both organizations for that territory.

General also announces that on April 29 D. Lee Dennison, formerly of Paramount and previous to that with George Kleine, became manager of the Pittsburgh office of General Film Company.

Berst Busy Picking His Advisory Board

Following his election by the board of directors as president of the United Picture Theatres of America, J. A. Berst assumed direction of the affairs of the organization on April 29. Mr. Berst states that this week he will make known the names of the members of his advisory board, which will be composed of representative exhibitors in all parts of the country. It is stated that the personnel of the board when announced will create a decided stir in film circles.

Pelzman Manages American Standard Exchange

Samuel D. Pelzman has been appointed manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation's New York exchange, at 130 West 46th street. Mr. Pelzman is an experienced exchange man, having handled for Universal "Traffic in Souls," "Samson," "Neptune's Daughter," "Where Are My Children," and other features.

Sears in the Marines

Exhibitors Box Office Reports

LAST MINUTE REPORTS

The Following Reports Came Under the Wire as Motion Picture News Went to Press

A Dog's Life (First National-Chaplin)—" Broke all records; one week." " Played to the biggest business yet." " Last day better than first. Clean. The best star in the universe." " One week to big and extra big business."

Woman and the Web (Vitagraph Serial)—" First episode very good."

Woman and the Law (Fox Special)—" A crackerjack picture." " Extra good. Big despite rain."

At the Mercy of Men (Select-Brady)—" It gets the money, but we are not proud of this kind for our house."

Over the Top (Vitagraph Special)—" Extra big all eight days. Will play one week more." " Extra big for full week."

Mr. Fix-It (Artcraft-Fairbanks)—" Big business. If Doug did steal Mary's kid stuff he made a good job of it." " Big business, but not so good as other Fairbanks' pictures."

Lest We Forget (Screen Classic-Metro)—" Opened big but fell down. Four days."

Editor's Note: The Box Office Report chart includes all pictures released within the previous eight weeks on which a sufficient number of exhibitor reports have been received to base a verdict. In the column " Average of Exhibitors' Reports " the term " Extra Big " indicates a picture which far surpassed expectations; " Big " means a picture doing better than the usual business for that day under average conditions; " Average " is the grading given the production on which business held up to normal; " Poor " indicates the picture falling below normal in box office and entertainment value.

KAISER, THE (Jewel)	Extra Big	“Biggest since ‘Birth of a Nation’! Broke all house records.” “Gave extra midnight show.” “Over-boosted and with impossible ending, but a money-getter.” “Broke records for past two years. Held over for three extra days.” “A wonderful production. Packed them in.” “Extra big at big prices.”
LA TOSCA (Fredericks—Paramount)	Average	“Good production, well staged, but not generally liked.” “This type of picture does not draw well.” “People do not care for this kind of play. Anything with costume is dead.” “Very good picture.” “Failed to please and failed to produce the cash. Too gruesome.” Heard many complaints. Not a laugh in picture.” “Very good.” “Subject too old.” “Good picture; poor business.”
LAND OF PROMISE, THE (Burke—Paramount)	Average	“Star was killed by serial, ‘Gloria's Romance’!”
LES MISERABLES (Farnum—Fox)	Extra Big	“Capacity, great feature.” “Return engagement, business held up all week.” “Great story; great production.” “Very fine production.” “Farnum does his best work.” “Patrons satisfied, but too long for my house.” (700 seats in high rent section.) “Strong picture. Well done. Star at his best.” “Good.”
LIE, THE (Artcraft—Ferguson)	Average	“Very good picture because it had heart appeal.” “Very good. Pleased all.”
LIMOUSINE LIFE (Thomas—Triangle)	Average	“Appeals to the ladies, but not the men.”
MEN WHO HAVE MADE LOVE TO ME (Kleine—Essanay)	Poor	“Decided failure and taken off after two days.” “This is a frost.” “Out of the ordinary and well liked.”
MIDNIGHT TRAIL, THE (Russell—Mutual)	Average	“Our patrons said this was Russell's best.” “Good.” “Not up to Russell's standard.” “Fair.”
MOTHER'S SINA, (Williams—Vitagraph)	Average	“Not up to standard but star got it over.” “Below average.” “Just a piccure.”
MORAL LAW, THE (Brockwell—Fox)	Average	“Poor photography, subject will not please.” “Story good.” “Photography punk, picture the same.” “Good picture.”

HAVE you read the messages on Pages 2940, 2942, 2944, 2946, 2948—and on the page opposite?

These messages are more than boosts for the Harrison reviews—they are tokens of the bonds of Service linking Motion Picture News and its readers. They are business messages to Exhibitors and to Manufacturers.

Are you a business man?

Are you spending your dollars—either advertising or subscription dollars—or are you exchanging them for value received?

Think it over.

PARAMOUNT-EMPRESS THEATRE

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

April 27, 1918.

Mr. William A. Johnston,
President, Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Johnston:—

You certainly are starting something all the while. Since you placed me on the Advisory Board I have been bombarded with night letters, communications, etc., from producers and near-producers seeking to get me on record anent their wares. What have I done to be so persecuted?

Apparently you have woke up divers parties, at least, so I take it from your letter of the 23rd. " What do I think of P. S. Harrison's Exhibitor to Exhibitor Review Service? "

Hats off! say we, to any trade journal that has the guts to print an honest opinion. We kow-tow to a concern that has the nerve to divorce the business office from the editorial branch of the service. Yea, verily, the millennium must be at hand when the advertising section and the news pages do not always gibe. I would hate to see you lose advertising patronage, but at the same time I would hate to see you relinquish independence. Harrison may not always be right, but his batting average is away up, at least as far as the pictures we run are concerned. You are doing a good missionary work.

Do the manufacturers imagine that the average intelligent exhibitor swallows hook, bait and sinker, the grand and glittering array of adjectives let loose in the advertising pages of the average trade journal? If they kick at the truth I would suggest the English style of criticism—boost the good stuff and let the mediocre go with the remark that among the other releases of the week So and So's five-reel feature also ran. The exhibitor can read between the lines and there is no comeback in the form of libel suits and other publisher's ills.

A good, honest booking guide is what the exhibitor has been wishing for. If you can convince both him and the manufacturer that you are supplying a long felt want you should worry. Judging from the fashion, divers vice-presidents, sales-managers and press agents are bombarding the exhibitor with blank forms to be filled in and returned post haste duly scored, signed and delivered, somebody must be credited with engineering a grand awakening.

Yours truly,

Geo. E. Carpenter.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

"Mile-a-Minute Kendall"

Jack Pickford in a Role That Fits Like a Glove

(Paramount—May 13)

NO fault whatever can be found with this Jack Pickford photoplay, which really couldn't fit him any better had it been written specially for him.

The scenario is based on the stage play of the same name by Owen Davis, and tells the tale of a dissipating young man who is cast off by his wealthy father, and who eventually wins a fortune and a wife in the girl of his boyhood days who stood by him.

Mr. Pickford, as well as Miss Huff, portray their roles excellently. The story is very interesting and is full of heart appeal. It is the kind of a picture that will help make more friends for these two young stars.

This offering will please any audience.

"The Model's Confession"

An Unusual Occurrence—The Same Story Sold Twice

(Special Universal—June 3)

THIS is a very interesting and entertaining photoplay. There is an unfortunate occurrence connected with it, however, as the story is exactly the same as "Society for Sale," released on the Triangle program April 21, and which I reviewed in issue of March 4. I have been informed that the author of the story, which has appeared in Snappy Stories Magazine, has sold the rights to the Triangle Film Corporation, while the publishers, to the Universal. What is more peculiar, Herbert Prior assumes the role of Lord Seldon in both pictures.

Both pictures are good, "The Model's Confession" having the advantage over the Triangle version in photography and cast, with the exception of the role of Billy Ravensworth, which, in "Society for Sale" is portrayed by William Desmond more convincingly, while the Triangle contribution has it over the Universal's in compactness and swiftness of action.

They are both good pictures and worth playing. However, if you have a contract for both programs, you should avoid booking them too close together.

"The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21"

Authentic Views of the Destruction of a Zeppelin

(Released by the Interstate Film Co.)

THE chief value of this two-reel picture to you lies in the fact that the scenes of the destruction of the Zeppelin L-21 are authentic and not studio made. It is by mere luck that such incidents can be photographed. The photography is not very clear, but you should hardly expect it to be any better when considering the circumstances under which such picture could have been taken.

"An Honest Man"

(Triangle—May 5)

THIS offering is clean, interesting and entertaining. The story was written by Henry P. Dowst and is rather original. It depicts a young tramp who is befriended by a farmer. While at work the latter is stricken, and fearing it is his end, he begs the young tramp to find his long lost daughter and deliver to her a package containing fifty thousand dollars. While the tramp is telephoning for the doctor, the farmer has another relapse. Thinking the farmer dead, he leaves immediately in search of his daughter. He finds her ill, and takes her back to the farm to recuperate. Both are agreeably surprised to find the farmer living and in good health, the explanation being that it was to the doctor's efforts.

The honesty of Wm. Desmond, as the tramp, and the simplicity of Graham Pette, as the farmer, both portraying their roles convincingly, will no doubt appeal strongly to your patrons.

"The Little Runaway"

The Typical Irish Story, Neatly Staged, Makes Good Entertainment

(Vitagraph—May 6)

THIS picture offers a field for serious thought and it would be well if directors and authors could arrange to see it and study it carefully. There are no deaths nor violations interwoven in the story, the plot being a very simple one — Director Wm. P. S. Earle deserves credit for his ability to get all the values out of it — and yet, as an exhibitor, I could not wish a better entertainment for my patrons.

It is an Irish story, written by Paul West, which tells in a very natural and not exaggerated way what Irish life really is. It is about a poor Irish colleen, who met the much hated but really kind-at-heart Lord, owner of the village, not knowing his identity. The Lord went to America with the purpose of marrying riches, but eventually married the plain mannered Irish girl he had met back home.

The Irish atmosphere has been maintained throughout very realistically. Youthful Miss Leslie portrays her role with remarkable naturalness, while Mr. Earle's fine personality helps make an excellent young Lord.

This offering is pleasing throughout and it will leave a pleasant impression.

"The Dagger Woman"

(Russian Art-Pathe—May 12)

THE most striking feature in this photoplay is the superb acting of Olga Zovska. She is a pretty woman and photographs well on the screen, and it is safely assumed that she would create a good following in this country were she to work under an American director. Outside of that, there isn't much that would appeal to the American public.

The story tells the tale of a Russian society girl, who, unknown to her parents, consented to pose as a model for an artist. He became madly infatuated with her, but grew very cold after the painting was completed. Unable to win his love back she thrusts a dagger in his back killing him.

The distributors should hardly expect an American audience to like this picture. Besides being sensational, it has a very tragic ending that leaves a bad taste.

"Selfish Yates"

(Ince-Artcraft—May 20)

THIS offering will bring many lumps in the throats of your patrons and your own for that matter, as it is full of the element that appeals strongly to human emotions. There is one thing to be regretted, however, and that is, the picture has not been kept entirely clean. These facts must be looked square in the face, that no matter how strong or interesting an attraction may be, unless the entertainment is free from any suggestiveness, it is not in keeping with the wants of the great majority of the picture-goers nowadays.

The story, in a few words, tells of the regeneration of Yates, a selfish saloonkeeper, through the influence of a good woman. She later was lured to a lonely place by Riley, a man who desired to make her his prey. Yates arrived as the struggle was going on, beat him brutally, and carried the girl in his arms to her cabin. Her life, after hanging in the balance for several hours, is saved through the efforts of a doctor for whom Yates sent.

The details of the struggle in the dark, where the brutal assault against the girl took place, are subdued to such a degree that they are not recognizable. However, it conveys clearly to the mind of the spectator what it is all about. This particular feature will, no doubt, prove objectionable to those of you that cater to exclusive family patronage.

It is hoped that Mr. Sullivan, the author, who has written innumerable clean stories in the past, and which have brought him fame, will avoid the suggestive subjects.

Why can't we have something similar to "The Bugle Call?"

"The Accidental Honeymoon"

A Light Comedy Drama That Should Prove Worth While

(A High Art Production Produced by Harry Rapf)

"THE ACCIDENTAL HONEYMOON" is a clean and entertaining light comedy drama. The story deals with a young man, who, tired of life, decided to commit suicide by lying across a railroad track and letting the train run over him. A girl who was having trouble with the motor of her automobile further up the road, asked him to help her start the motor, and in return for the favor she promised to give him a more high-class killing with her machine. In the end the two fall in love and decide to get married.

There are several humorous situations throughout which will be the cause of many laughs for your patrons. The cast is rather heavy for this sort of theme, but the parts are well acted.

You should encourage the picturization of such themes.

"With Hoops of Steel"

Walthall's New Production Doesn't Impress the Reviewer

(Paralta-Hodkinson—May 29)

THIS is not the kind of an attraction that you can brag about, although it will do you no harm if you run it. In the first place the director has been handicapped by a bad story.

The desire of the producers to give Mr. Walthal a different role for a change is praiseworthy, but he is not convincing in this picture as a cowboy.

I did not consider the cast a successfully selected one as none of the players seemed convincing in their parts. The little fellow acts very amateurishly. I have seen so many children assume their roles to such a perfection that I have come to consider them as natural-born actors, therefore there is no reason why a better one could not have been chosen for this picture.

"Resurrection"

Pauline Frederick in Tolstoy's Classic of Doubtful Value

(Paramount—May 6)

"RESURRECTION" was written by Count Leo Tolstoi, the famous Russian author and philosopher, and is considered as one of those classics that deserve the esteem of the literary world. It is to the Russians what Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" has been to the French, and for that matter to the entire world. However, for picturization purposes, it will prove a very unfortunate selection. It is not the kind, irrespective of its value as a literary masterpiece in book form, that will appeal to the American public, as it is too suggestive.

The story, in short, depicts a Russian girl who was betrayed by a Prince, thus becoming an outcast. Years later, while living the life of the "Yellow Ticket" class of women, she was arrested, accused of a murder she did not commit, and sent to Siberia. Remorse stricken, the Prince secures a pardon for her, but she refuses to leave the suffering people in exile who had awakened her to her regeneration.

The picture was produced very elaborately and contains much human interest, the direction, photography and lightings all being of the highest standard. Picturization of such themes, however, I consider a misjudgment of the wants of the great majority of picturegoers at the present time.

"Journey's End"

Ethel Clayton's Latest an Average Program Offering

(World—May 13)

A GOOD ending saves somewhat this picture, which is rather slow, therefore it can only be classed as an average offering that will help to make up the week's program.

The story deals with a young married couple, whose domestic harmony was disturbed on account of the husband's affairs with other women. They signed a mutual contract to live apart for three months as a kind of a try-out to see if they could live without each other. Eventually a reconciliation takes place.

Gihbsson Distributes Simplex Machines

Leif Gihbsson, a partner of J. L. Nerlein, Ltd., Christiania, Norway, and the firm's American representative, with offices at 309 Broadway, New York City, who lately returned from abroad, is considered one of the most progressive of the younger men in the motion picture industry.

His company is the exclusive distributor in Norway, Sweden and Denmark for the Simplex Projector, manufactured by the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York.

Mr. Gihbsson has been connected with J. L. Nerlein, Ltd., for eight years. He first became associated with the company in its photographic supply department and some time later entered the film exchange in Christiania, where he remained for two years. The exchange was organized four years ago in a small way and now employs two hundred people in various capacities. It handles the Pathe program and open market features. Mr. Gihbsson passes on all films personally and judges their suitability for Scandinavian audiences.

Mr. Gihbsson buys in the American market, pictures, chemicals and apparatus for laboratories, as well as having in charge the import of projection machines, accessories and supplies for the Christiania house.

In 1917 he was admitted to membership in the firm, which was established in 1878 by J. L. Nerlein as a small supply house and is now doing business on an extensive scale. It is capitalized at $300,000. J. L. Nerlein was the first man to introduce Kodak goods in Norway.

Dusenburys Retire to Enter War Work

Joseph W. and William J. Dusenbury, leaders in amusement circles in Columbus, O., sprang a big surprise on Columbus people the other day by announcing that they would immediately retire from active management of their theatrical and other enterprises in Columbus in order to devote their services, without pay, to the Government for the duration of the war.

Messrs. Dusenbury had leased Olentagy Park to Will D. Harris a year ago and when they decided to retire from active business they offered Mr. Harris the lease of the Grand theatre, he immediately accepted. Mr. Harris will pay an annual rental of $15,000. At the same time they leased the Vernon theatre to J. F. Luft and W. S. Pletcher. Mr. Luft will remain as manager of the Grand and Mr. Pletcher of the Vernon. Both leases will run for a period of four years and both become operative Sunday, May 5.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Cleveland "Over the Top"

Newspapers and a Big Share of the Theatres Show What Can Be Done When Everyone Has the Will

THIS is the first of a series of two, or possibly three, articles on the co-operation of newspapers and theatres in Cleveland. The reason for the extended comment is that the splendid work that is being done by the Cleveland papers as a whole gives us the opportunity to get some things "off our chest" that we have been wanting to say for some time and to illustrate what newspapers and theatres generally can do for their common good.

Writing recently in THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Fred Warren, vice-president of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, ranked Cleveland among the first three cities of the country in advertising efficiency. Mr. Warren is right, and one of the reasons for this efficiency is the willingness that the newspapers of Cleveland have shown to give the theatres space and at the same time to print matter that will interest the reader and thereby stimulate patronage.

So far as, at least, the Sunday papers are concerned, we believe that there are more theatres in Cleveland that advertise "up to the notch" than any other city in the country. We say this because in the case of Cleveland we find that we are not dealing merely with the first-run houses, but we find the neighborhood exhibitors using space in just the way that we would recommend that the average neighborhood house everywhere should.

This article will consider mainly the Saturday and Sunday advertising, but let us say right here that one thing that commends the Cleveland theatres, both the bigger houses and the neighborhood, is that they advertise EVERY DAY in the week—the only theory of good advertising, so far as the motion picture house is concerned.

Let's look at the situation in Cleveland. In the first place, the census gives it a population of 750,000, but it is much larger now. There is one morning paper and two afternoons, while one of the afternoon papers also publishes a Sunday morning edition under a different name, the morning week-day edition having been discontinued last year. The small number of daily papers is a fortunate thing for the exhibitor, since it means that he may cover the field by using a small number of papers. Here are the dailies in Cleveland:

Leader, Sunday edition of the News.
News, afternoon daily.
Plain Dealer, morning and Sunday.
Press, afternoon daily.

In other words, there are but two morning papers and one afternoon paper which the exhibitors have to use Saturday to get the whole field, for the News need not be considered as to Saturday displays on account of the fact that the Leader takes this in the Sunday issue.

There are one hundred and sixty motion picture houses in Cleveland. Of these eight are first-run—the Stillman, Standard, Mall, Alhambra, Knickerbocker, Metropolitan, Strand and Orpheum. A rather peculiar condition exists in case of the Mall and Alhambra, as they are in the same building and use the same pictures, one starting the program with the comedy first and the other with the feature.

Of these first-run houses three are neighborhood houses of the first class—Metropolitan, Knickerbocker and Alhambra. There is a total of eighteen downtown houses, fourteen neighborhood houses of the first class, and one hundred and thirty-eight of the smaller neighborhood houses.

Of these hundred and sixty houses fifty advertise regularly, both daily and Sunday—a mighty good record. As many as seventy-two theatres use the Friday and Saturday afternoon papers.

On the top row of the page opposite we have reproduced three pages from the Sunday Leader photoplay department and on the middle row an equal number from the Sunday Plain Dealer. While these reproductions are too small to really afford a careful study of the advertising, they are large enough to show you that every one of these larger houses really plans its advertising. It is not a case of simply "writing something" and letting the matter go to the printer and appear in the paper any old way.

Every one of these seven (Mall and Alhambra in one) advertisements shows that the exhibitor has really planned something—that he is advertising with a purpose. These seven first-run advertisements are all GOOD displays. They follow various rules, but they all hold to the one flexible rule of not crowding the space up with a lot of unnecessary matter. A little later we are going to tell you something more about these seven houses and their displays.

Just a moment ago we mentioned that the newspapers themselves had a great deal to do with the good advertising, because of the example they set, because of the spirit that they infused into the proprietors of the houses. The newspapers of Cleveland are conducting real photoplay departments, they have real photoplay editors, and this is not merely a temporary passion with them, for they have been doing it for years. Cleveland exhibitors have had the advantage of having the newspapers working with and for them, and that it is a great deal to encourage the showman to get more out of his displays. In fact, in a live city where the newspapers are wide awake and offering increased opportunity and where the better houses are advertising, the man who wants to score a real success MUST be up to date in his advertising; he must think and try to lead.

Both the Leader and the Plain Dealer run their photoplay pages in an editorial and dramatic section. The only complaint that might be possible is that the legitimate and vaudeville houses are given first place, but that amounts to little, for the photoplay department is kept separate and both of them are so interestingly edited that it's a pretty good bet that they are well read.

Then the Leader tries to get some NEWS into the reading matter about the first-run attractions. The lead story had a two-column head, "Why, There's Charlie in the Parlor," and there's an interesting story about the actor and the initial "million dollar comedy." Then follow stories for each of the first-run houses with separate headings. This matter is far superior to the average "bunk" that is handed out as reading notices. It's worth reading and doubtless is read. This runs over to the second page.

Here appear cuts for each of the eleven smaller houses that use the Leader in a four-column layout. The Plain Dealer carries thirty-eight of these smaller advertisements in the issues that we have before us.

At the left of this page there is a Los Angeles news letter, and at the right a two-column head, "Off Screen Moments," carries short items about the players. The main part of the rest of the page is devoted to "Kwery Kolumn." Now all of this is REAL NEWS MATTER. We have mentioned before that the average exhibitor doesn't think that he is getting any benefit out of motion picture matter unless the name of his theatre is mentioned in every paragraph. And this is just where he is wrong. Although the interesting reading notices that the Cleveland news-

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

SYMPHONIES of cheerfulness might describe the bills at the Rialto and Rivoli this week—ideal bills for these times of war and sacrifice when the public as a whole wants to look at the bright side of life; and there are thrills, too.

Rothapfel himself is "Somewhere in America," but we predicted last week that the bill would go over just the same, because every person in the organization has the Rothapfel spirit and they work even the harder when he is away. Dr. Reisenfeld, musical director of the two houses, Joe La Rose, the production manager, and all the rest of them were right up on their toes and the result is two perfectly blended bills.

"Semirade" is the brilliant overture at the Rialto this week, and it is followed by a double scenic number, "Spain, the Land of Enchantment," a Beacon film, for which the music is "Spanish Rhapsodie" and a beautiful Pathe picture, "Small Birds of Warm Climates" and here suites two and three from "Salambo" are used. Using the Byzantine setting Miss Annie Rosner sings "My Dreams" with splendid effect. The lighting is all in blue.

There is another one of those marvelous Animated at the Rialto this week, and the length of it would make it tiresome were it not for the care with which all the numbers were selected, the blending of them and the music that accompanies them. It really affords a study in the arrangement of a news weekly, and although most exhibitors are not allowed to cut these news weeklies, there is also a lesson for the editors of the producing organization in it.

The opening is a big crashing one with "Bombardment." These are Universal pictures of the New York Liberty Loan parade and the various sections of it all get a big hand. The same music continues through the Hearst-Pathe cartoon of "Casey at the Bat," which shows McAdoo putting the Kaiser out of business with the third strike, the third Liberty Loan. Then come Gaumont pictures of weighing 15,000 babies at Cambridge, Mass., and for this the music is "La Source No. 1." The same music continues through Universal pictures of the new Linotype machine and Gaumont scenes from the Buenos Aires cattle show. Then come Gaumont pictures showing the explosion of 1,000 tons of dynamite at Bound Brook, N. J., and from the same source the wreckage left by the California earthquake, and then Pathe pictures of the Vindall shore off the Jersey coast. For the first of these three pictures there is an organ and tympani rumble and then specially arranged organ music continues through the two others until the Gaumont pictures of Italian warplanes bombarding Baltimore for the Liberty Loan are shown, and here the music is "Ringmaster." Now note a case of welding. Next follow H-P pictures of aviators flying from New York to Washington and back, and during this number the music changes to a galop. Then Universal shows the leading French "aces" and there is thunderous applause for each of these as the orchestra plays the brilliant "Somme et Meuse."

Three pictures of air work, from three different sources, have here been combined and one remembers these almost as a feature of the program. The same music continues through Universal pictures of removing art treasures from the Rheims Cathedral. Here the roll of the distant artillery is heard from the tympani effect. Then follow H-P pictures of protecting Paris buildings from bombardment, again a case of blending subjects. The same music continues through all of these numbers, now soft and not low, played with an expression that almost convinces one that the air has changed. It is a case of "playing pictures" even when you have a special selection for them. There is a great deal to the interpretation.

Now, you have had the weekly start off with a big punch, you have been interested in the news events, and you have been shown scenes that show the desolation and ruin wrought by the Huns, and you are prepared for the greatest enthusiasm for the men who are going to drive them back to Berlin.

Gaumont presents pictures of the new Japanese envoy at Washington. It is peculiar to note the way these pictures of Japs are received at various theatres. At times there is quite a burst of applause; at other times there is not a hand. It seems to be the case of every one hesitating to start it. The music here is "Japan." Now for the punch. Pathe pictures of the Anzacs in New York are used and here the music is "Tommy Atkins." The enthusiasm of the audiences is great, and it grows when the "Blue Devils" appear and the music switches to "Salute Comrades" and the roof is about to come off. But we looked up and expected to see the sky above when Gaumont pictures of the fifty American veterans came on the screen for the big audience voiced its enthusiasm in hearty roars that drowned mere handclapping and the music of "El Capitan" march. There is plenty of chance for the continued enthusiasm for these pictures include shots of the men who won war crosses and the man who fired the first American shot. The Animated really ends with a Hy Mayer cartoon, "The Chain," showing France, Great Britain and America," with the sub-title, "You may bend it, but it never will break."

Yes, the Animated really ended there, but to lead into the next musical number an Indian war dance scene, titled "The Moon Drops Low," is used, and then the curtains at the display panels part showing at one side waterfalls and at the other an Indian tepee in the wilderness, while the singer, Riccardo Bonelli, in Indian garb, can barely be seen at one side, the whole house bathed in dark blue. He sings "The Moon Drops Low" in a moving manner.

Then comes the feature, Charles Ray in "Playing the Game," a delightful picture, except that it looks like some one insists that Charlie must get drunk in each of the features these days. The music is light throughout including such numbers as "He's a Jolly, Good Fellow," "There's a Long, Long Trail" and "Chin, Chin Chinaman."

With the full gold lights on the orchestra then plays Chopin's "Polonaise in A Flat," and then follows a highly original Mutt and Jeff cartoon which is entitled, "A Fisherless Cartoon." It shows the two characters producing their own work, and it affords some sidelights on the manner in which these are made, and at the same time giving a series of hearty laughs. "Watch Your Step," "Honey Moon" and "It Wasn't My Fault" supply the music.

Rivoli's overture is Grieg's "In Autumn," and then comes one of the splendid Robert Bruce educational scenics, "What the Ice Age Left." At first an animated map shows the spread of the ice waves thousands of years ago, then its recession and its result. During this three animated characters, the dog, the camera man and the pack mules get many laughs. Then follow a series of wonderful shots, including one that shows two lakes a half mile apart and one a thousand feet above the other. At first the music is "Rondo Capriccio," and then it turns to "Leonora," a considerable part of it being carried on the French horn during the scenes of desolation. Then Miss Jeanne Gordon sings "Pauline's Romance," by Tschaikowsky. The lighting effects of the entire house are in blue, the same beautiful stage setting as was used last week being employed, but an entirely different effect given by the change in lighting. Now this number is made unusually effective by the way it is staged. As the curtain parts one observes a harpist in the dim light, and behind him one can see the girl. First a few bars on the harp and then she begins to sing, and one is not robbed of the charm to the end when the curtains slowly drop with the melody still in the air.

Rivoli Animated opens with Gaumont pictures of the sailors' drill and dance at Goat Island, Cal.; and here "Rainbow" march is used. Hearst-Pathe pictures show the great national dance at Stockholm with "Ekko Fra Norden" played. Then follows one of the greatest series of laughs that we have ever experienced. It is furnished by the Katzenjammer Kids cartoon, "Der Black Mit," released by Educational. The captain is introduced trying to figure out his income tax, the blanks asking such questions as, "Is a Bolshevik a habit or a mouth wash?" showing the wheels in the captain's head, getting a dozen laughs out of a couple of gold fish, and a lot more foolishness that delighted the audience. For this, "Oh, Papa, Papa" is played once through, and then ragtime violin music and a gallop. The trap drummer gets in with all his

MARY PICKFORD is at her best this week at the Strand in "M'liss," a picture which gives her a chance to show all of her charms and to do some real acting. Managing Director Harold Edel has given the picture a musical setting that adds a great deal to the charm. "Rock-a-bye Baby in the Tree Top" and "Afraid to Go Home in the Dark" are a couple of familiar airs that are brought in and through the whole of it there are a number of well known selections. And there are lots of laughs, too.

Lehar's "Gypsy Love" is the overture and for this the drop showing the Greek temple on an island is used. Strand Topical opens with the Pathe cartoon "Casey Bill at the Bat" and during this "Yankee Doodle" is counterpointed in the march used. Then follow from the same source pictures of the airplane flight to Washington and of the Barnegat shipwreck. Paramount-Bray furnished an interesting series of views of building Victory ships and the titles add much to the punch. Then come H-P pictures of the national dances of Sweden and then Paramount-Bray affords one of the most interesting novelties of the season in a new invention for loading trains while moving at full speed.

Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature" is "Adaptations" and show how the screech owl and the Secretary bird adapt themselves to the dangers that they have to meet, the owl catching mice and the bird killing and eating a siake. Hearst-Pathe shows the Jap ambassador at Washington and then comes the big punch—one admirably achieved. These are Hearst Pictures.

First we are shown the Anzacs and then the "Blue Devils" and both of them in parade. These pictures have been skilfully arranged so as to let the audiences get a view of the American veterans first without any title and the audience recognize them at once and fairly drown out the music and when the title comes "Three Cheers for the Veterans" they are given with a will, and at the end when the waving flag is shown the cheers break out again.

Then follows one of the Outing-Chester scenics, this being "An Ex-Cannibal Ball." The titles add a great deal to this and cause the audience to break into rear after roar of laughter. The story is of the man who goes to hunt pictures of the cannibals and finds them turned into civilized people. At the end there are a series of the dance movements of the natives, one showing the women seated going through the movements of their arms and bodies and here there are cleverly introduced a few strains of "Every Little Movement," to the delight of the audience, and then follow dances of Samoan girls which are cut in with a title "Oh, look what the censors have done. Goodnight" and brings it to an end with a big laugh.

More laughs are added to this delightful bill with the James Montgomery Flagg comedy, "The Good Sport."

The musical numbers this week are Miss Irene Audrey singing "The Wind's in the South" and Miss Rosa Lind and Ralph Errolle in the duet from "Romeo and Juliet."

In this latter there is a real novelty for the stage scene is presented in silhouete. It is remarkably effective and is an idea that will probably be adopted generally.

excellent effects, that added to the amusement.

Follows Universal pictures of the Jap ambassador with the Japanese national hymn used, and then comes a punch similar to that at the Rialto—but manifestly the only proper way to arrange such subjects. First there are used Gaumont pictures of the Anzacs, and here "Sons of Britain" is used, which changes to "Miss Liberty," counter-pointed with the "Marseillaise" as the French and the American veterans are shown at the City Hall and in review.

With all the lights in red, only a piano on the stage, Lieut. B. C. Hilliam, of the Canadian army, appears and sings two songs of his own composition, one "Knocking the K Out of "Kaiser," and another to the music of "Keep the Home Fire Burning." Lieutenant Hilliam is not any wonder as a singer, but the audience appreciated his little talk, and didn't want him to quit when he did.

Jack Pickford is particularly delightful in "Mile a Minute Kendall," and again the cleverly arranged musical score adds much to the enjoyment. Included in this are, "He's a Devil," "The Old Town Pump," "He Won't Get Home," "You're in Love" and "Give Me All," all light, pleasing music that keeps the audience mentally on tiptoe of enjoyment.

Then the audience hums as the orchestra plays selections from "The Merry Widow," another of revivals that are so delighting patrons of the two theatres this week, and the bill which has been pleasant throughout breaks into wild mirth with the Mack Sennett-Paramount comedy, "His Smothered Love."

Now one might say that there is nothing lavish about either of these bills. There are no big choral effects, and practically no new settings were built for the week, yet the result has been perfect bills. It shows that real things can be done if you know how to do them and give attention to each little point, and weld the little things into each other to make perfection of pleasure. It shows how these aids of Rothapfel have done it. You can do it, you can take the rough edges off and weave from a group of individual things a symphony of showmanship that will make your house call to the heart of every patron in your territory.

Branham Scores Poor Exploitation Aid

THREE interesting angles on "What Is the Matter With Pictures?" are given this week by members of the Advisory Board. The various answers to this question are rapidly rounding out all the faults with present-day productions, and this symposium has been read with careful attention by the most progressive of the producers. Results promise to be seen in forthcoming features.

Charles G. Branham, a staunch advocate of the open market, makes a strong attack on methods of exploitation. He declares that there are plenty of good pictures, but that the exhibitor is not given a fair opportunity to get the most out of them because of the poor material furnished him on which to base his publicity campaigns. He also takes a strong rap at program bookings.

E. Mandlebaum declares that the story is of prime importance in pictures and that the production itself cannot be good unless there is a strong story behind it. He points out the inconsistencies in many pictures, asserting that evidently the directors are not familiar with the actions that they are trying to show on the screen. Another evil he finds is the failure to value films as merchandise. He declares that a big drive should be made to impress on all the employes the necessity in handling this material properly.

Eugene H. Roth declares that there are not too many good pictures, but too many that are merely pictures. He He declares that the public does not want costume plays, fairy stories and children's pictures and that the best of religious and and allegorical pictures, and suggests such productions as one with Douglas Fairbanks playing opposite W. S. Hart. He declares that the money that would come to the exhibitor would justify the expense.

Read all these opinions. They will give you some new thought.

CHARLES G. BRANHAM, manager of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, runs his theatre on the open market plan and he is opposed to program methods. He has some very striking criticisms to make of pictures and of methods of selling them. He is particularly strong in his statements about the class of exploitation material. He declares that very few of them are backed up by the right sort of publicity

"What's the matter with pictures?"

Who started this argument, anyhow?

One would think that the whole movie business had gone to the bow-bows because of the lack of good shows.

And reports from practically every section of the country indicate that there is "more business than usual."

Bet the first howl didn't come from an "open market" man. Not on your life! Nor did it come from the boys who are spending a little time each day looking for pictures. It unquestionably came from the fellow who lets the man down the street or in the next town, who is a little gamer than he, take the gamble so that thirty or sixty days later he may run the show and take advantage of the game bird's advertising.

Or the yip may have come from the fellow who has hitched his shirt tail to the regular program policy and is being yanked backward into oblivion. No wonder he thinks the pictures are ailing.

The man who is so situated that he can pick his pictures and does not have to play the selections of some individual or outfit whose vision extends no further than little old Broadway is fortunate and is bound to make more money today than he did yesterday. And this exhibitor, if he really is looking for good pictures, will not be found among those most anxious to find fault with the present stock of productions.

Why, right in the exchanges of Minneapolis today there are a score of good pictures that are not being shown, principally because the only independent theatre downtown is booked up, and the theatres that are using the programs have to play or pay and can't afford to take on a bigger load. Many of the programs have productions that easily could be cut out and featured big, but these never will get a respectable showing under the present conditions.

No, the pictures themselves are not all to blame, not by a long shot. Many of them are branded as failures, however, because of the poor material the exhibitor is given to work with. Very, very few pictures are backed up with the right kind of publicity. It seems strange that with the thousands and thousands of dollars put into productions so little attention is paid to the exploitation end of the business. The picture that usually is accompanied by any kind of press matter is woefully lacking in stills for the newspapers and stuff for the lobby, and vice versa. Practically no attention seems to be given to the fact that stills of some of the best scenes in the plays, the beautiful women in nifty gowns, etc., would make wonderful lobby and press photographs.

This is a day of shopping. The movie fan in the big town goes from one theatre to the other and buys his ticket where the lobby display attracts him most.

Much of the press matter now sent out from New York is vile. The cuts are too fine screen for use in the daily papers; nearly all of the advertising cuts lack the punch necessary to put over the picture, and it is really up to the exhibitor to arrange a complete new publicity campaign for the show.

It is the first-run theatres throughout the country—and this means outside of New York—that really "make" the pictures for their respective territories, and in so doing they are going to a big expense in addition to the big rental usually demanded for the productions.

However, these first-run boys are becoming more alert every day in their search for attractions—not merely pictures—and they are demanding the pick of the pack, for therein lies the success of their business.

It surely is a day of attractions, and these attractions won't be handed down to one on a silver platter. They may be found only by combing the "open market," and by arranging with the program exchange, so one may have a little word to say occasionally about what he shows in his theatre.

Don't blame the poor old pictures too much. Give them what they deserve and they'll usually do the rest.

E. MANDLEBAUM, head of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Company, of Ohio, uses the editorial "We" in giving his opinion of the faults with pictures today. He would have the improvement start at the very beginning—in the scenario department—and then go down the line until perfection in all the details is reached. He points out forcefully the reason for loss in picture manufacturing:

It is more or less difficult for one not actively engaged at the moment in producing pictures to suggest any methods by which pictures could be improved. Production is an art—as thoroughly so as is the work of the great masters of centuries past, who have given us the world's choicest treasures in painting, sculpture, music or literature. The writer is not an artist at producing pictures. Whatever ability we might have at presenting does not necessarily imply that we have a similar ability for producing.

Therefore, while we do not feel that it is within our experience to make any direct suggestions as to the actual means of improving the production of pictures, we feel competent to suggest some ideals toward which producers may aim.

Of prime importance is the story, or scenario. When all is said and done, a picture is only another form of writing. The producer uses a series of pictures to tell a story—the writer uses a series of words. We do not hold any production good unless it tells a story, and tells it well.

The first improvement, then, which we would suggest would be in the way of the scenario department. We are of the opinion that this department is way out of balance with other departments of production and feel that the industry in general would be benefited largely if the scenario departments were put on a par with other producing departments, even to the point of salaries.

Much has been said and written about the necessity for perfection in detail. There has been a need of everything that has been said or done with a view toward attaining perfection in production detail. There is still room for improvement.

For instance, the writer saw one of our famous stars guiding a plow drawn by a team of horses. The poor fellow had the lines up around his neck so tight that he was wearing a callous on his breast bone against the plow handles. Tell any farmer that our great directors never miss a detail in a production, and if he should happen to be looking at this picture it is easy to see what he would think of the alleged perfection in producing detail.

However, error in detail is a lesser evil than the lack of a story. A certain company, which probably keeps near to the standard of perfection in detail, has turned out a great many pictures which are entirely lacking in the qualities necessary to enthuse or even entertain an audience.

There is one thing more, which, although it does not have to do with production, is deeply as vital to the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor—this is the matter of film handling.

An inspection of any exchange or operating room will disclose conditions that are alarming. All this can be summed up under one heading. Namely, that of indifferent carelessness.

The one big reason for this is the failure of the owners of film to create within those who handle it a feeling of respect for the value and quality of films as merchandise. The writer has seen $35,000 worth of film left unprotected in a dark alley in a large city as though the load of valuable films might have been a load of garbage.

When one realizes that a load of film represents raw stock with a certain intrinsic value, as well as the huge values represented by that film when it is thrown on the screen as retail merchandise, and considers the actual loss if the film is stolen, lost or even misplaced for a few hours, he is appalled at the carelessness and of the indifference employes who handle film display towards it.

Every intelligent person in the film industry should consider the above facts or similar ones and begin an unceasing drive to establish in the minds of employes who handle films a wholesome respect for the value of these films and an appreciation of the necessity for handling that merchandise accordingly.

The writer trusts that the above will not be out of order and wishes to thank THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the opportunity of setting forth our ideas in these lines.

EUGENE H. ROTH, manager of the California theatre, San Francisco, wants the executives of film companies to raise the standard of pictures through their inspection of the product, and by having those portions of features which do not come up to the mark remade until the hundred per cent result is accomplished. He declares that there is over-production of mere "pictures."

The exhibitors from one end of the country to the other experience approximately the same conditions in the exploitation of moving pictures. In my recent visit East I made a great many stops, interviewed a great number of exhibitors, and I find the above statement to be true. The public demand today favors a high-class melodrama, produced in a splendid manner, with popular stars and a good supporting cast, the story preferably from some popular novel instead of a rehashed scenario with the "dyed-in-the-wool" situations with just a little different angle.

The past year the market has been flooded with a great many pictures that were merely pictures, with perhaps one little punch, and that punch so heavily advertised that some of the exhibitors "fell" for it, and their receipts "fell" with them, which means, of course, that their profits were "tripped" as well. Am quite sure that the public does not want the costume pictures, fairy stories, or children pictures, nor can the best religious or allegorical pictures "get over" at all.

I think the time has arrived when the producers can combine two or three stars in their productions that will not only add to the box-office receipts, but will satisfy the public taste. For instance, if Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark, Elsie Ferguson and Pauline Frederick, Douglas Fairbanks in a good story opposite Hart, or some happy combination as described above, is making progress in the development of the industry, there is no reason why it should not be done, as on the legitimate stage today we are seeing more than just one star. I will admit that it adds to the cost of production, but at the prices some of us are paying we feel justified in making this demand.

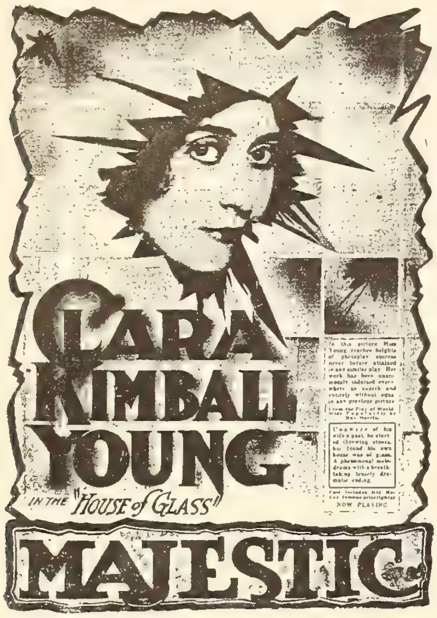
I do feel, in fairness to the producing concerns, that they are entitled to a higher rental for their pictures from the second-run exhibitors. This increase from the second and third-runs would more than offset the original cost of the double-star production and give the public and exhibitors more satisfying results.

I do not think that enough attention and consideration is given by the executives of the various companies in releasing their products. In other words, I have seen in the last year several very good pictures whose values have been destroyed because those passing final judgment were lax in correcting what they must have known to be the weakness of the picture. In other words, if the first or second reels of the picture is good and the third does not sustain the interest by reason of poor direction, and the picture in the fourth and fifth reels picks up to the standard of the first and second reels, this picture should have been sent back to the studio with the suggestions of the executive offices, or those responsible for the final pre-view, demanding that these scenes be retaken, so that the entire picture becomes a 100 per cent. production instead of an 80 per cent. production. If this were done a much higher standard would be obtained, and the "survival of the fittest" would enjoy a 100 per cent. of the true earnings of their efforts.

There is not an overproduction of good pictures, but there is an overproduction of pictures. I have recently had assurances from some of the producers that some of the suggestions contained herein are going to be adhered to.

Your Idea and Ours

DON'T yield to the temptation of putting "something more" into the display. Some one who had something to do with the Majestic theatre, Portland, Oreg., did. At the start he had a splendid idea for the display of "The House of Glass." He furnished the glass effect and then had the head of Clara Kimball Young breaking through it. He featured her name and used the title in smaller letters because the design of the advertisement itself carried out his idea.



CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG
IN THE "HOUSE of GLASS"

In this picture Miss Young reaches heights of photoplay success never before attained in any similar play. Her work has been unanimously indorsed everywhere as superb and entirely without equal in any previous picture.

From the Play of World-wide Popularity by Max Marcin.

Unaware of his wife's past, he started throwing stones, but found his own house was of glass. A phenomenal melodrama with a breath-taking tensely dramatic ending.

NOW PLAYING

MAJESTIC

Then "something else" occurred to him, and he made a mortise in the cut and used small type to say something about the picture. Most of the matter is mere superlative and means something. There is one good expression: "Unaware of his wife's past, he started throwing stones, but found that his own house was of glass." If this had been lettered into a broken place in the window it would have been effective. As it is used it weakens a splendid display. It is four columns wide and twelve inches deep.

"Maybe" is too long a substitute for IS.

MANY designers of advertising fail to realize that their own style ought to be governed considerably by the surroundings that the display will have. If the other theatres, whose displays are placed around you are using heavy borders and black type, naturally the most effective thing for you to do is to get the contrast.

Now we have commented several times that Cincinnati newspaper advertising is generally very poor work. The advertising writer for a group of three of the houses has accepted a great deal of our advice and is setting a new mark for the theatres in that section. Other theatres have rarely gotten away from the heavy type effect, but the Walnut, and the affiliated houses are doing so. For instance, here is a splendid display on "Parentage." It is a combination of black and white and half-tone effect, and mightly well done. The heart with the figure of mother and child bursting from it and the silhouette of the village at the bottom give the atmosphere. The gray background gives it individuality. And with all of this we are glad to see that the Walnut retains its "name plate." It's a good rule never to discard that for any "design."

You know what chance the proverbial snowball had. Don't let your business "roll along."

OLD MILL THEATRE, Dallas, Texas, used a unique advertisement on the new Chaplin picture during the week, and he got a striking and convincing effect without even employing the name of the star to attract attention. In fact, he did not even use the pictures of Chaplin, and his queer feet, with which the public is so familiar, but employed a two-column scene cut with the small lettering under it giving the name of the star and the title.

It attracted attention because it was unique. This advertisement appeared alongside of a lot of others that used big, heavy type, and by the very contrast this one stood out. Like many other specimens of advertising on which we have commented, we would not recommend the use of this style as a regular thing, but it is good once in a while because it is so different. One should know his subject and the style of the advertising of the other theatres before he undertakes to use the more or less freakish.

THE NEW Garrick

NEW GARRICK THEATRE, Minneapolis, contributes one of the most striking advertisements that we have seen on "Revelation." We are mighty partial to the use of large half-tone, where you have sufficient space to set them off and don't have to crowd up the rest of your display. The Garrick used twenty inches (which would have been a full column in most papers) across four columns. And the designer of the display has said less than most managers are tempted to say in three inches double column. His whole effect is a good deal closer to the Seattle type of advertising than anything that we have noticed recently west of the Rockies.

The designer of this display has a fine sense of values. He has kept his various statements away from each other by the use of white space, and not, thank heavens, by a lot of rules that are so much abused. The only rule he has used is around the local comedy photoplay, just as he should have done. It's mighty good work, without a flaw.

A clear head often means a crowded theatre; and a clear theatre often means that nothing had brushed the cobwebs out of the brain.

VITAGRAPH is using a good idea in connection with its press sheets on "The Fight for Millions," the new serial which will be released on July 15. Press sheets on two of the episodes have been issued. These will cover any degree of exploitation from the largest theatre down, where newspaper and program cooperation can be secured.

But here the novelty of this press sheet comes in. There are lots of neighborhood houses and small town theatres that are unable to use newspapers, or at least to get considerable advertising space there, and the reverse side of the press matter forms a one sheet that may be posted in front of the theatre. This matter is so written that it is calculated to excite much interest.

Are you looking for the meat in the nuts that wise men crack?

REGENT THEATRE, Toronto, is issuing one of the most attractive house organs that has come to our attention. The Regent runs its pictures for a week and therefore the greater part of the space is devoted to the current attraction. In the case of the issue that we have before us it was "Mother." The cover is given over to the announcement and the leading article tells the story of the picture.

The program is 6¾ by 10 inches and printed on a good grade of white plate paper. There are sixteen pages, about one-third of which is devoted to advertising. One solid page gives the program for the week and there are stories that bear on coming productions. The management realizes where the interests of the fans rests for it is running a series, "Who's Who in Screenland," telling the birthplace and date of the various players, and whether they are married. This is the sort of "inside dope" that makes the patron take the program home and talk about it to others.

Of course, it's what's in the can that sells the soup, but the attractive label makes you use the can opener.

KEEP away from the rules unless you know exactly what to do with them. This is a warning that we have repeated week after week, yet the average designer of advertising concludes that he has to use box effects to bring out his points. It takes a mighty good advertising writer to use them and get away with it. A couple of weeks ago we thought that we had written a mighty good page ad, but the moment that we showed it to a few others they jumped all over it because there was a single box effect in it. And they were right.

Here is about as bad an example of that as anything else. Certainly everyone will agree that the point in advertising is to sell what you have first. Rex theatre, Duluth, Minn., used six inches double column. There was certainly enough room to display the Kerrigan picture and at the same time give some mention to the bill for the last half of the bill. But the writer deliberately twins the two features. At first glance one would think that they were on the same bill. He has a nice "balance" effect, but everything else in the display is lost. As a matter of fact, it is not a display at all—a mere use of space. There is nothing about it that stands out except the heavy, ugly black rules.

And while we are saying to keep away from rules, we'll also add: Keep away from Gothic type unless you want to make your theatre resemble a bargain sale.

Ice is going to be high this year. Don't put your ideas in cold storage. Use them while there's the ambition of spring in the air.

RECENTLY we printed a display showing how an exhibitor had changed the title of one of the Fairbanks pictures because he wanted to avoid letting any of the public think that it was a costume picture. In certain cases, we said then, this might be allowed, but we were opposed to it as a rule because it is misleading. It may not lead any people into a first run house to see a picture that they have seen under another name, but it is likely to have the same effect in causing a person who first sees the picture under the changed title to later see the same thing at another house under its real title.

In this case "Powder Nose Annie" was the working title for the Madge Kennedy picture and the manager of the Liberty, Fresno, Cal., evidently thought that it was a better title, for he used it in his advertising. But he avoided any chance of misleading the public by using the second and actual title as well.

He has achieved a good advertisement and he has a good line in "The Woman Fairbanks," which would have been more effective in lower case and in a lighter type. Space is three columns by 11 inches.

O'Hara Takes Failure and Scores Big Success With "Second Runs" in Des Moines

THIS is the story of a man who has made a success out of a theatre that had always been a failure and of a man who has made his theatre stand out until it is one of the most-talked-about institutions in his city. The man is William O'Hara, the theatre the Majestic, and the city, Des Moines, Iowa.

Nearly eighteen months ago the Majestic theatre had proven itself to be a lemon. On Eighth street, off of "movie row" and too far west of the main section of the business district, the Majestic had wabbled from burlesque, to vaudeville of several grades, from plain photoplays to big features. Eighteen months ago Abe Frankel as the acting manager of a body of men who operate the Casino theatre, opened the Majestic for big features. Several house managers took a try at the house. Big features continued to wabble, smaller features went in until seven months ago a thoroughly inexperienced young man took the management. William O'Hara had been acting as salesman for the local Laemmle Film Company for a number of years, and his experience as a manager of a house rested solely on observation.

Mr. O'Hara had three hobbies on running a picture house—he still has them, proven hobbies that work. First Mr. O'Hara inaugurated a policy of second-run productions. There is not a picture presented at the Majestic that has not been shown in the city and proven itself worth while. His offerings are consistently strong, always, since he personally sees all his pictures before he books them. Second, Mr. O'Hara believes in appropriate music. When he took up the management of the Majestic he secured the services of Gale Wood, a talented young man, who has traveled all over the country giving imitations of musical artists, and known as the "boy wonder." He plays by ear anything and everything. Mr. Wood and Mr. O'Hara run the picture for the day off as soon as it arrives at the theatre, together they work out their score and the result is steadily building up the Majestic's business.

Third. O'Hara believes in proper atmosphere for the picture. First of all the general atmosphere of the house, its decorations, the service, everything must be quiet, refined and "homelike." To further this end Manager O'Hara has resorted to girl ushers, and with Edith Gutch, a cheerful little black-eyed epitome of neatness at the head of four equally cheerful and neat young ladies, the town is talking of the manner in which they are received at the Majestic. The girls have been told to look upon the patrons of the theatre quite as they would their own guests at a party or entertainment carried on in their own home. "Make the patrons feel welcome and at ease, above all smile" is their order.

To continue this general atmosphere, Cleo Weddle, in the box office, sells her tickets in a manner all her own. Unassuming, reserved, pleasant and even tempered, Miss Weddle is always on the job. "Dad" is at the door. His nickname reveals his genial character.

It wasn't until the last three weeks that Manager O'Hara secured the finishing touches to his "general atmosphere." In that time the Majestic has been thoroughly redecorated in the interior. The walls have been tinted in a warm rose color, and the only decoration is an unobtrusive rose stencil in dark green and deeper rose. The Majestic contains a big balcony, extending around the sides and rear of the house. This has been finished in ivory and a touch of gold leaf with a row of close set electric lights in dull blue globes running clear around. The ceiling has been paneled off, finished with the ivory and gold, the paneling outlined with rows of lights. The boxes on each side are also finished in ivory with dainty white chairs monogrammed. Along the walls the electric fixtures represent candles, with dull blue silk shades. Dull blue velvet hangings in the rear and in the boxes give the whole a touch of elegance.

The Majestic boasts of a deep stage from the vaudeville and burlesque days, and Manager O'Hara is seizing upon this advantage over any other house in the city. He has secured the services of P. Speicher, formerly employed at Culver City by Thomas Ince, to arrange a series of stage settings to be used in conjunction with all of his productions. Up to date Mr. Speicher has constructed a number of sets, that although necessarily simple and not costly are surprisingly effective. A representation of the New York harbor, with the statue of Liberty in the foreground and Manhattan Island in the distance, a western desert, and an Egyptian desert scene, a couple of exquisite garden sets, a Blue Ridge Mountain and a Rocky Mountain scene, and a Japanese garden set complete the seven already completed. This is the first time that any undertaking of this sort has been done in Des Moines.

While three of the other downtown houses are charging fifteen cents admission and war tax, one changing the price with the quality of productions, the other straight five cents, the Majestic stands steadily at ten cents and war tax. In the advertising, and all over the house, the name of the Majestic and ten cents admission are joined. The Majestic at once suggests second run and ten cents through consistent and clever advertising. Manager O'Hara is working on the design for a huge new electric sign in which the policy, admission and name will be fantastically intermingled.

The receipts for the Majestic are just five times today what they were when Manager O'Hara took the house over seven months ago. On his scale of receipts and expenses, the latter stands while the receipts have gone bounding.

papers give the theatres are most valuable, this additional reading matter is equally valuable, and every exhibitor in Cleveland should show that he appreciates this by buying space in the newspapers that do so much for them.

On the third of these pages there is a two column heading, "Week's Film Programs," giving the list of pictures for the week at each theatre that uses space.

The Plain Dealer isn't very much different. In fact, both of these papers have so fully realized the BEST in motion picture matter that there is not very much room for them to differ. Here, on the first of the pages, the Plain Dealer gives a layout on the first run attractions and stories of the pictures. On the second page there is a New York letter, "The Question Box" and "Notes of the Screen," all bright, interesting stuff. The third page is largely devoted to the bills at the various houses, including those for the week at the thirty-eight smaller houses.

There is just one suggestion that we would make to these two papers and that is that they adopt the "chart" system, to which we have so often referred here. We believe that this is an especially good circulation feature, although it is more trouble to handle. The Sunday papers do give this information in another form, but we believe that they could increase the business from the smaller houses and make the feature the more interesting to a great number by the "chart" plan.

The pages from the Saturday Press, which we reproduce, shows a total of seventy-two theatres advertising, yet beyond a few paragraphs that we have indicated, there is no motion picture news matter in this issue. But the Press does boost motion pictures during the week, and this is a point that we are going to cover in the next article. The week-day cooperation of the newspapers and the theatres and the number of houses that advertise regularly are things that stand out in the Cleveland situation.

This is a thought that we want to leave with you, as the ministers say, in reviewing the Cleveland situation so far as we have gone. While the theatres do not use as large space as do some of the houses in Portland, Seattle and a few other cities, they advertise consistently every day. They don't give the patrons a possible chance to pass their house by for lack of knowledge as to what they are showing.

What we like about Cleveland especially is that the neighborhood houses are not content with printing their bill for the whole week in the Sunday issue and letting newspaper readers forget them. This means that the Cleveland theatres have learned the lesson of advertising their NOW attraction. There are many other cities where the advertising as a whole is good, but where the theatres insist that they must put their whole week's offering before the public in the Sunday paper and invite the public to chose WHICH attraction they will see.

Most of the big houses in Cleveland run their bills for a week, but the Strand and the Knickerbocker make a mid-week change. Look at the displays of these two houses as reproduced on these pages and you will see that they do not even mention the bill that they will have the latter part of the week. We are not opposed to giving a small line at the bottom to the coming attraction, but we do believe that the far better way is to sell the current offering and let later days in the week take care of the later offering. Of course this cannot be done by houses that advertise only on Sunday, but Cleveland knows better than to confine its exploitation to one issue.

And Cleveland newspapers know that the readers of the newspapers are interested in pictures EVERY DAY, and so they devote space to pictures every day, not merely reading notices, but stuff that the people will read. Cleveland newspapers have come mighty close to realizing the appeal of the "movie" to the general public.

Next week we will tell you something about what these papers do during the week, and why we put Cleveland newspapers in the very first rank, and Cleveland as a whole at the very top of motion picture cities.

ROTHAPFEL QUERIES

Answers Must Be Postponed While He Serves Uncle Sam

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, is on a three weeks' tour of the principal marine corps stations on behalf of the Government. Probably all of you know that he is a lieutenant in the U. S. Marine Corps and that he is doing splendid work in patriotic propaganda.

He has already made two pictures for the Government, and during this tour will make a number of others. They will be released through the established news service. Watch for them.

But the point of this announcement is that we will not be able to continue Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors during his absence. They will be resumed on his return, and you may send your inquiries in now and have them get his first attention.

Theatre in City of 50,000 Puts Over Week's Run on "The Kaiser" to Capacity Business

ONE of the best constructive campaigns that we have seen put over on any picture has been supplied by the Plaza theatre, San Diego, Cal. In the course of the many stories that we have printed about the way that leading managers have handled productions, we have repeatedly had letters in criticism saying that this or that theatre was located in one of the larger cities, and that he had an almost unlimited number to which to make his appeal. Now San Diego is a city of only 48,000, yet "The Kaiser" went over for a week to crowded houses and record attendance. Of course the picture itself had a lot to do with it, but the campaign that the manager of the Plaza used was remarkable for its intelligence and its excellent execution.

This picture lends itself to all sorts of exploitation. Now the Plaza knew that it was going to be up against the competition of a big circus and that for a part of the run a picture made by a noted star and using the word "kaiser" in the title would be shown. So the Plaza decided to prove this picture to the public and the advertising, consequently, was along the line of endorsements. Certainly the manager was wise, considering the circus competition, to keep away from the use of adjectives and high-flown language.

By C. M. S.

After a wild scramble of theatrical managers, the Plaza Theatre announces that "The Kaiser," the sensational picture which was previewed Tuesday last at the Chamber of Commerce has been booked, and will open at the Plaza next Sunday.

For every strenuous period, or striking change in political history, there is a corresponding change in literature and art. For every big crisis there is a representative book, or picture, or figure of speech which sways the multitude, which molds public opinion. Formerly, there were no motion pictures. Patrick Henry said "Give me Liberty, or give me Death!" and his words echo the sentiment of the entire American populace. "Remember the Maine," the war cry of the Spanish-American war, is fresh in our memories. And now the screen, so recently become such a powerful medium of public influence has produced a work which will show in such vital, gripping, maddening fashion the evils of Kultur that not one will see it without becoming aroused by a feeling of righteous indignation at the insane vanity-induced work of the power crazed war lord of the German people.

It is made by the Jewel Film Company. But it doesn't matter who made it. The theme is there and it is well handled. Rupert Julian plays the kaiser. It is an unheroic role—a debasing role—a role which must make an American's soul writhe within him as he plays the part. And yet Rupert Julian never once departs from the character. His make-up is enough like William of Hohenzollern to be the real Beast of Berlin. His withered left arm never slips from the affected posture. His crime seared face never once relaxes. His overbearing, pompous insolent Prussian manner never once softens, until it cringes in cowardly terror at the fate which awaits it in the final scenes.

What Some Representative People Say About

"The Kaiser---the Beast of Berlin"

COMING NEXT SUNDAY TO THE PLAZA

Advertisement used week before opening of "The Kaiser"

There was a preview showing of this picture and on the Sunday a week before the presentation the Plaza used a space eleven inches deep across three columns, giving a story of the production and then quoting some of the opinions of those who had seen it. During the week the same advertisement was repeated in some of the other papers. There was a large amount of advance publicity and the people of the city began to talk. In the San Diego Sun there was run a series of articles dealing on the Hun ruler's propaganda in this country and the "runover" portions of these stories fell with the theatre's advertising—of course quite by accident.

Now note that this advertising campaign was started a full week before the picture was to open. As a general rule this would disagree with the proper rules of advertising, that of failing to sell the NOW picture first, but here was a case when the theatre was breaking its policy and starting long runs. In such cases it is a most laudable method of exploitation. The same Sunday that the first of the advertising on "The Kaiser" was used the theatre also used three columns, ten inches deep, on its attraction for that Sunday, so in that case the present attraction did not suffer.

On the Sunday that the picture opened the Plaza used a space eighteen inches deep across five columns. This was largely devoted to small print matter — a form of advertising that is generally very bad, but which in this case was just the thing that should have been done. After the familiar cartoon of the Hun Thing the greater portion of the space was devoted to "What the American Press Says From New York to San Diego." Opinions from the New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles papers were used. This form of advertising was continued largely during the run of the picture.

This campaign not only attracted the patrons, but it drew attention from the press. "The Kaiser" was the subject of editorial comment and the news stories that it drew were frequent. The result was that it was one great success for the entire week, although the Plaza raised the prices for the engagement.

HAVE YOU DONE IT?

When You Put Over an Unusual Run on a Picture Let's Hear About It

WE believe that the day of the longer run is coming rapidly.

We are printing here week after week accounts of the manner in which various exhibitors have put over pictures for unusual engagements and to exceptional receipts. Probably you yourself have done so. If you have, let us hear about it and give us an account of the plan that you pursued.

There has been a lot of discussion for the past year or more about longer runs for pictures. Much of it has been theory. Now, here and there all over the country, it is being demonstrated that it can be done.

But it cannot be done by exaggeration or faking. It must be accomplished by selling the picture that you have. The method of exploitation has a vast amount to do with your success. If we can help you in planning your campaigns we will be mighty glad to do it.

And those of you who have made good, let others know of your methods and your results.

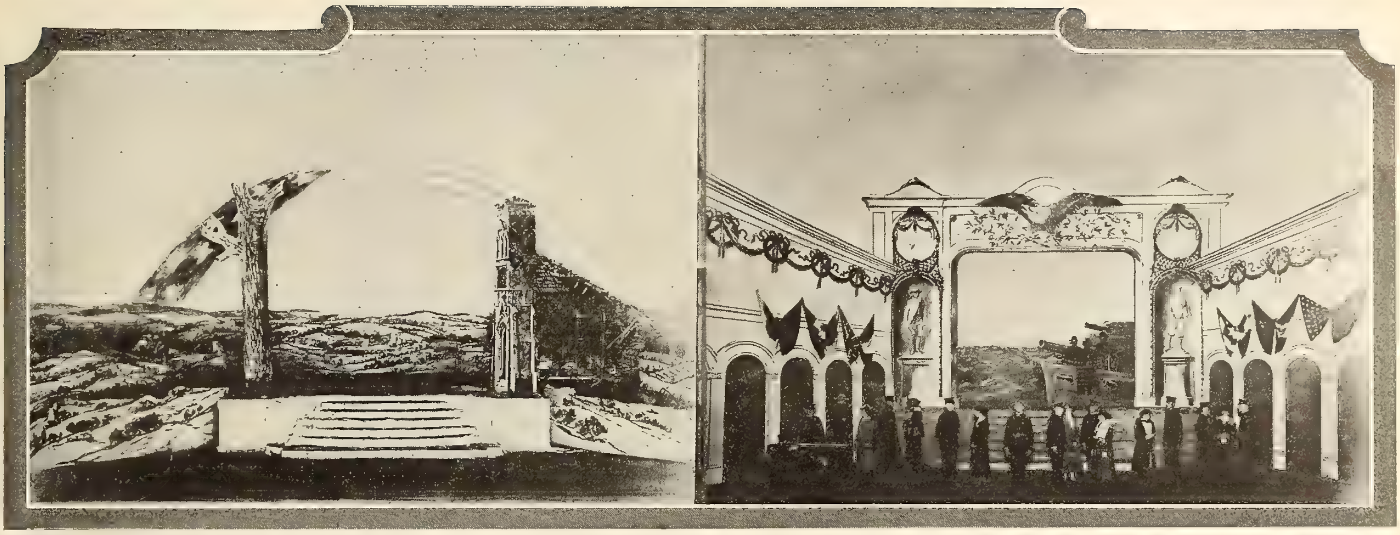
Success of the Plaza proves that the smaller cities CAN put over pictures for longer runs if the manager will first make sure that he has the goods and will then dig down in his pocket and spend two or three times what he has ever spent before on exploitation.

San Diego has shown that the long run is not confined to the biggest cities. What other city of 48,000 can show a week run to capacity business? We hope that we will soon hear of many of them.

"Blue Bird" Shown Free to 4,000 Children

Through co-operation of the Strand theatre and the New Orleans Item a free preview showing of "The Blue Bird" for the children of the city. Two runs of the picture were made, the first at nine a. m. Saturday, and the second at 10.30. More than four thousand children saw the picture during the morning.

Publicity Manager D. L. Cornelius followed the plan originated by J. A. Partington, San Francisco, in advertising in the newspapers for the public to tell him how to exploit "The Blue Bird."



Two stage settings used in the lavish presentation of "The Unbeliever," at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis

2 Big Stage Spectacles Employed in Presenting "The Unbeliever" in Indianapolis

PRESENTATION of "The Unbeliever" at the Circle, Indianapolis, was embellished by S. Barret McCormick with two big stage spectacles, a chorus of twenty voices, a company of U. S. Marines and a series of stage effects that might be envied by "The Passing Show" or Ziegfeld's Follies as spectacular stage achievements.

"The Unbeliever" was presented for the week of March 31 and marked the appearance of the Circle's exclusive contract policy in which that theatre buys the sole exhibition rights for a certain picture for the city of Indianapolis.

The opening scene represented an idealized port of embarkation or "The Court of Justice," as the stage picture was called. Its long line of arches that stretched from proscenium arch to back wall symbolized the hall of the Allies, while over the center arch of triumph a huge golden eagle with wings spread typified America; the columns on either side were of carved statues of soldier and sailor. Through the arch one saw the waters of the sea and a gunboat lay at anchor.

The curtain rose after a patriotic overture upon the scene showing the Marines bidding farewell to their sweethearts, and as Old Glory was hoisted to the topmost mast and "the soldiers of the sea" came to attention as the Stars and Stripes floated out on the breeze the soloist sang the inspiring patriotic number "Flag of My Heart." Then bugle sounded, there were quick farewells, machine guns dismounted, and those who are always "First to Fight" climbed aboard the ship as orchestra swung into the strains of the Marine Hymn, "From the Halls of Montezuma," and the boat with its load of fighting men moved away from the pier and slipped from sight as the screen rose from beneath the stage and the first scenes of the screen play flashed to view, blending stage spectacle and silent drama into one.

It was, however, in the picturesque spectacle that closed the play that the heights of realism and impressiveness were gained. As the last scene of the film faded from view and the screen sunk below the stage a faint light crept up over the scene, against the huge blue cyclorama that formed the background and the eyes of the audience beheld Belgium, the Belgium of today, o'er which the vandals of Prussianism had passed. As far as the eye could see on all sides lay waste, the ruins and ashes of a fair land. On one side a cathedral, almost in ruins, bravely reared its crumbling steeple into the skies. Opposite a huge tree shattered by shell stood like a grim sentinel that marked the path of the Hun. Then as the blue light crept higher an awe inspiring, soul stirring scene came to view. On all sides a marching army came to view. It was the "Yanks" going over the top to avenge the rape of Belgium. While shells exploded in their midst, they were seen to charge triumphantly in great khaki colored waves, on and on, out of the trenches and over the hills. Then as though the Great Spirit had illuminated the ruined church, a pale green light shone from within and one beheld a spirit choir in black vestments, and as their voices lifted in a hymn of righteous battle the inspiring words of "Onward Christian Soldiers" floated out over the scene; then the skies became strangely illuminated and above the dim of battle, above the smoke and clouds of war, a glorious rainbow came into the skies, a rainbow of red, white and blue, studded with brilliant stars—the symbol of freedom, the rainbow in the skies for the people of the devastated lands.

The entire production was made under the direction of Mr. McCormick, the scenery painted in the studios maintained by the theatre, and the electrical and mechanical effects invented and produced by Mr. McCormick and his production staff.

The illusion of the endless army charging over the top was the object of mystery even to old producers of theatrical sensations, for it had brought a striking new effect to the stage. The rainbow was likewise an innovation, with its spread of colors over a space of nearly one hundred feet, and the effect of bursting shell as the troops charged the enemy trenches gave the scene a realism seldom attained in stage spectacles.

Through the co-operation of Capt. Thomas Lyons, in charge of the Marine Recruiting Station, Mr. McCormick was enabled to further add to the realism of the stage scenes with real troops.

A YEAR'S WORK

That Was What a Letter from the Service Bureau Was Worth

GAYLE BURLINGAME, manager of the Columbia Opera House, Columbia, Pa., sent us a copy of his program for criticism. We wrote him frankly what we thought about it. He replies:

"Your criticism of my program has done more good with my printers than I have been able for one year to do."

Cedar Rapids Manager Makes His Own "Locals"

Arthur G. Stolte, manager of the Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has made a big hit by adding a local chapter to his Topical Weekly each week. When we first heard the news that he was putting on this feature, we inquired whether he found that it paid for the expense of employing a camera man, and so the mystery was solved when there came back the answer: "I myself am that person."

Mr. Stolte first bought a good camera and studied it carefully and practised before he fared forth to make pictures. He has up to date made over 5,000 feet of local film, practically all of it in instalments of about 200 feet and there has been practically none of it that he could not use.

Each week his Topical contains pictorial portrayal of some local event.

Ready-Made Ad Talks

Earle Williams and Grace Desmond in “Seal of Silence”—Story of Heredity

(Vitagraph—Five-Reel Production)

Are you interested in the subject of heredity? Do you believe that the “sins of the parents descend upon the children” or do you believe that the children reflect the character of the parents by their mannerisms. William Addison Lathrop has written a story which has been adapted to the screen by Vitagraph, dealing with the subject of heredity. It is titled “The Seal of Silence.” Earle Williams and Grace Darmond have the leading roles. Mr. Williams is casted for the role of the Doctor. In the supporting cast are, Miss Kirkman, Martin Best, Colin Kenny and Kate Price. An eminent surgeon and student of the traits of heredity, Dr. Hugh Loring (Earle Williams), holds the theory that in some manner the child reveals the parent. But he fails to recognize his own son and unjustly convicts the woman he loves, the keeper of the secret, the doctor’s wife and the child’s mother had carried to the grave. Mrs. Loring had an admirer and together they would frequent a fashionable gambling resort. Hugh warns his wife against her practice of appearing in public with her admirer, but she persists in remaining away from home and appears indifferent to his appeal. He suspects his wife and on one occassion follows her to the gambling resort and orders her home. She is humiliated and leaves him going to the home of her old nurse where she gives birth to a child. Ruth Garden (Grace Darmond) had been Mrs. Loring’s companion and had lived with her and the doctor. Ruth goes to her and remains away from the Doctor’s home for sometime. The mother dies and Ruth takes the child back to the home of the Doctor without explaining. The Doctor accuses her of infidelity. It is then that the theory that the Doctor had held was disproven—that the child reflects the parent—for he did not recognize his own son. The secret comes out and he and Ruth whom he had secretly loved are united,

Rhea Mitchell in “Honor’s Cross,” A Girl’s Fight for Honor and Respect

(Goldwyn Release—Six Reels)

Rhea Mitchell who was seen in leading roles opposite William S. Hart in many of his first five reel features, returns to the screen as a star in Selexart’s six reel production, “Honor’s Cross,” released on the Goldwyn program. Miss Mitchell is a real artist and in this late screen offering she shines in the stellar role. She has in support an all-star cast of capable screen artists including Herschel Mayall, whose character work in William S. Hart’s first productions was commendable; Edward Coxen, who is seen opposite Bessie Barriscale in her latest Paralta play; Joseph J. Dowling, famous for his character roles; Roy Laidlaw and Adele Farrington. The story was written by H. B. Daniel and produced under the direction of Wallace Worsley with L. Guy Wilky at the camera. Jane Cabot is one of the city’s thousands of working girls. Her mother does her bit toward the support of the home by singing in a cheap dance hall. The father does nothing at all. The girl dreams of the time when she shall be freed from the sordid surroundings The Hon. Thomas Dolan, political boss of the district in which Jane lives, has wealth and an evil reputation. To Jane he is only a name. Lee Stevens, son of a guide and trapper in the mountains, longs to try his fortune in the big city. He carries a letter of recommendation to the Hon. Thomas Nolan and when he arrives in the city is given an easy job by the boss politician. Jane’s mother is taken ill and Jane begs to take her place in the dance hall. Dolan takes Lee to the dance hall on a sight-seeing trip. Dolan summons the girl and makes the usual advances. She hurls a glass of wine in his face and is upbraided by the manager. Then begins Dolan’s machinations to bring the girl to him. Lee is attracted by the girl’s fresh beauty. He knows nothing of Dolan’s plans to ruin her.

“Honor’s Cross” will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

“Moonshiners” Is “Fatty” Arbuckle’s Latest Bunch of Laughs—Alice Lake in Support

(Paramount—Two-Reel Comedy)

“Moonshine” is “Fatty” Arbuckle’s latest bunch of laughs. It is a Paramount release and is in two reels. Its a scream—take it from the manager of the ——— theatre where it will be seen on ——— of ——— week. “Fatty” has in support Buster Keaton, Al St. John, Charles Dudley and Alice Lake. Feuds, love and revenue hold the boards in this comedy production and if you don’t get a laugh out of every scene of the two reels, there is something wrong with your laughter. “Fatty” is a revenue officer and his assistant, Buster Keaton, are sent into the Blue Ridge mountains of Kentucky to put a stop to illegal traffic in moonshining, Al St. John and his father are the offenders. Charles Dudley has the reputation of being the most daring feudist and moonshiner in the Blue Ridge country. He is a desperate man but this fact does not dampen the spirit of “Fatty” and his valiant assistant Buster. They have a mission to perform and come what may, the trick must be turned. The appearance of the officers in the neighborhood of the moonshiners causes a sensation and plans are immediately set on foot to stamp out the audacious ones who would dare to enter upon the sacred grounds of the moonshiners. The plotters get the upper hand at the start but the tricky officers turn the tables and the outlook takes a different hue. Alice Lake the ragged mountain flower casts a spell over “Fatty” and the “small” comedian makes violent love to her, forgetting for the time that he was sent to bring the moonshiners to justice, not to make love. Al St. John, a primitive lover, enters the lists for the hand of Alice, but “Fatty” finds means not alone to defeat the moonshiners but to win the hand of the mountain flower.

A laugh every foot of the two reels of “Fatty” Arbuckle’s latest comedy “Moonshiners,” when it is shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

“Snakeville’s New Waitress,” Featuring Margaret Joslin—A Scream From the Start

(General One-Reel Release—Comedy)

“Snakeville’s New Waitress,” with Margaret Joslin, Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Buf Jerome, demonstrates how this bunch of screen comedians can put a hotel on “the blink” if they so desire. It all happened when Sophie, the new waitress, came to town. Sophie Clutts secures a position at the Snakeville hotel as waitress. The men forget their food for Sophie’s soothing talk and winning manner, until she finally puts the hotel on the blink. The way the men try to win her is delightfully comical. You can’t miss this one if you like the real wholesome humor.

Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin in “Slippery Slim and His Tombstone”

(General Release in One Reel)

There is a laugh every minute of the fifteen that “Slippery Slim and His Tombstone” is on the screen. One reel of side-splitting laughs. Slippery Slim takes out some life insurance. Shortly after he decides to see something of the world and sallies forth. Mustang Pete, his rival for the hand of Sophie, immediately begins to press suit, and when Slim returns, he finds Sophie and Mustang mourning at his tombstone, which they bought with his insurance money. Thinking Slim a ghost, they flee, with Slippery Slim in hot pursuit. Slim never hesitates until he proves that he is really alive, thus defeating the wily Mustang Pete and his evident intention of taking over the comely widow, Sophie Clutts.

Ivan Mozukin, Russia’s Greatest Dramatic Exponent in “The Dagger Woman”

(Pathe Release—Five Reels)

Ivan Mozukin, the greatest of Russian actors and Olga Zovska, popular actress on the Russian stage, have the principal roles in the late Russian art Film Corporation’s production to be released on the Pathe program. It is in five reels, and was produced in Russia under the direction of M. O. Sudokoff. The story is by L. Andrieff. The story as revealed on the screen is a true account of the happenings in real life during the days prior to and including the Russian revolution. Centuries of oppression and suffering of the Russian people held in bondage and slavery before the autocratic rulers were removed by the recent uprising of these people have given the Russian people a certain depth of emotion which places them in a distinctive class among the nations of the earth. In this picture this trait of the Russian people is brought out by the author and visualized on the screen by Russia’s most capable dramatic impersonators. Olga Kartoff (Olga Zovska) is the daughter of wealth, and she is sheltered from the outside world by the strict hand of her father. She knows little of the outside world, but in her own set she is a leader by virtue of her magnetic personality and beauty. Ivan Savonsky (Ivan Mozukin) is the most popular and talented young artist in Moscow. Olga, in the company of her friends, visits Ivan’s studio for the purpose of getting local color for a society tableau which she and her friends are about to stage. Ivan has been searching for a model to fit his idea for a painting entitled “The Dagger Woman,” but his search has been in vain until he sees Olga. He begs her to pose for him. She is fascinated by his aggressiveness and consents. Olga manages to elude her watchful parent for a few hours each day while she is posing for Ivan’s masterpiece. Ivan becomes engrossed in his work and pays little attention to his model. She resents his indifference and coolness. After the completion of the picture and its exhibition at the annual art exhibit, Ivan is awarded the honorary prize. Then it is that news of his daughter’s intimacy with the artist reaches Olga’s father.

Francis Ford’s First Independent Production, “Berlin Via America”—War Drama

(Fordart Six-Reel Production)

Francis Ford, whose work as leading man in countless Universal feature productions placed him in the rank with the leading male stars of the screen, has formed his own producing company, and the first offering presents “Berlin via America,” a thriller of the war species of drama. It was written by Elsie Van Name. Mr. Ford is seen in the leading role, and the picture was produced under his personal direction. In the supporting cast are seen: Edna Emerson, Jack Newton, George Henry, Ed Dorhan, George Jones, Lois Scott, Francis Feeney, William Willis, William Canfield and Emma Warren. Mr. Ford has the role of Phil Kelly, a veteran of the Spanish-American War and a member of the U. S. Secret Service. Shortly after the outbreak of the great world war that is now waging, he is sent for by the chief and sent on a dangerous mission. He is instructed to stop at nothing to accomplish his mission. His first sacrifice is an assumed disloyalty to his mother, who urges him to enlist. He is forced to resign from the club, because his patriotism is questionable. Two visitors at the club, Harris and Shamme, under suspicion, are not aware that Kelly is playing for them. Playing into their hands, Kelly is invited to attend one of their meetings. The story of his degradation at the club reaches his sweetheart. Rose Lockley, but she sympathizes with him because she believes that Phil must have a good reason for acting as he did. At a meeting of the German agents, Kelly learns of their plans to sink transports. He notifies his chief and saves the transports. With Harris, Phil is smuggled aboard a German submarine, which sets out for Germany. On the western front, Kelly who is now an aviator in the German army is known as No. 54, and is called by the American troops “The Dove.” He learns the plans for the big German offensive. With this information the Americans are enabled to out-maneuver the Huns. After the battle he is free to tell his secret, and he is received as a hero by the ones who condemned him.

George Walsh, Athletic Star, Does New Stunts in “Brave and Bold”

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

George Walsh, athletic star of William Fox productions, comes to the ——— Theatre on ——— in “Brave and Bold.” Despite the fact that he suffered serious injuries during the filming of a recent picture, made prior to the filming of his present starring vehicle, they can scarcely be said to have slowed him up any, for in “Brave and Bold” jumping from the roof of a house to another slanting roof, hanging by his finger nails to a window sill, kicking his enemies down a flight of stairs, and dropping from a second-story window with a girl clinging to his legs are only a few of the stunts he pulls. The story is an adaptation of "Four-Forty at Fort Penn," by Perley Poore Sheehan, one of the best of the present-day writers of fiction. Robert Booth (George Walsh) is associated with the firm of Wilson & Co., which seeks a billion dollar contract with a foreign government. A rival firm, Firkins & Firkins, is also after it. Through the treachery of one of Wilson & Co.'s employees the rival firm is furnished with a copy of the specifications and bid. Booth is to meet the man who is to award the contract at 4.40 on Friday at Pittsburgh, and starts for that city, having already arranged to marry Hope Hunneywell there on the same day. On the train he is the victim of a frame-up engineered by one of the Firkins firm, and is taken to prison. Garbed in queer clothes he escapes, and hurries to the hotel in Pittsburgh. As he reaches the hotel he sees his fiancee, who has been intercepted by Firkins' agents, being taken away in an automobile. After a chase Booth finally rescues her, and, hurrying to the hotel, finds that the foreign representative is about to close the deal with Firkins & Firkins. Booth, however, has learned of an attempt about to be made on the foreigner's life, and at the moment of his arrival, he finds that the plot is under way. He seizes the prince and carries him to safety. The contract is his, and the wedding goes on, too.

"The Biggest Show on Earth" Is Story of Life Under the "Big Top"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Enid Bennett, the charming young Australian actress, makes her third appearance as a star of Thomas H. Ince-Paramount picture plays in "The Biggest Show on Earth," which promises to be no less successful than its predecessors. In this absorbing story of life under the "big top," Miss Bennett will be seen at the ———— theatre on ————. The author is Florence Vincent, and her story throbs with strong dramatic action, thrilling situations and undoubted heart appeal. Miss Bennett is splendidly supported in this production, probably the most notable figure in the cast being Melbourne MacDowell, who for many years appeared with his wife, Fanny Davenport, in the famous plays of Victorien Sardou. Earl Rodney, one of the most popular of leading men, plays opposite Miss Bennett, and other capable players in the cast are: Ethel Lynn, Bliss Chevalier and Carl Stockdale. In fact, few present-day motion pictures present a list of such excellent screen players in support of a star. Miss Bennett's role is that of a young girl who tames lions and performs daily in a cage filled with lions in her father's circus. She is sent to school, and there meets a young man belonging to an aristocratic family, and whom she learns to love. One day when the circus comes to town she saves it from wreck at the hand of rioters, when she takes the place of a woman lion tamer, who is filled with superstitious terror, and does the act at the risk of her life. She is recognized by the mother of her sweetheart, who scorns her until her own husband admits that he himself is part owner of the circus, and insists that his aristocratic wife's scorn of circus folk is unjustified. Through his support the circus girl and her fiance ultimately find happiness. The production was directed under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, by Jerome Storm, and is artistic down to the most minor detail.

Hayakawa Offers Strong Character Study in "The Bravest Way"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Sessue Hayakawa, the popular Japanese star in Paramount pictures, has a brilliant and appealing role in "The Bravest Way," in which he offers one of the finest character studies that even he, sterling artist that he is, has ever presented. As Tamura, a Japanese gardener, living in an American West Coast city, he will be seen in "The Bravest Way" at the ———— theatre on ————. The story is by Edith Kennedy, one of the most brilliant and promising of American scenario writers, whose ability was manifested with conspicuous success in many well-known picture productions. The picture was directed by George Melford, who has been responsible for many of Hayakawa's greatest successes. Mr. Melford is exceptionally clever in directing children in motion pictures, and in "The Bravest Way" he has secured unusually effective work from a bevy of Japanese youngsters who appear in the cast. The star is excellently supported in this production, chief among the players being his wife, Tsuru Aoki, whose pathetic portrayal is extremely artistic. Playing opposite Hayakawa is Florence Vidor, who has supported him in numerous previous productions, while others in the cast are: Jane Wolff, Winter Hall, Josephine Crowell, Clarence Goldart, Guy Oliver, U. Aoyana, Tom Kurahaha and Gore Kine. The story concerns an ambitious Japanese gardener, who sacrifices his love on the altar of loyalty to the memory of a murdered friend, marrying the latter's widow in order to protect her and her little children, although he loves another devotedly. His sweetheart becomes a singer of reputation, and when she returns to the city where the man she loves abides he saves her from the advances of a scoundrel, and takes her to the bedside of his dying wife, who pays him a tribute of respect for his sacrifice and devotion. The lovers are reunited at this woman's death, and made happy in their mutual love.

"The Bravest Way," with Sessue Hayakawa, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

No One Is Looking for That; They Want to See the Picture

WHEN you read in these pages of a big exhibitor in a big city selling THE picture don't merely pass it by with the observation that it doesn't apply to you. The time is coming, sooner or later, when you must recognize that you must sell each picture, get the most out of every one, if you are going to stay in business.

Don't be content with merely letting the public have a chance to see "a picture" at your theatre; anybody can open a grocery store and trust to chance.

You want to sell your picture for the day, whether you are a big manager in a big city aiming at a record run or whether you are changing your bill every day. But you first have to know about the picture yourself, and then let the public know. These Ad Talks are prepared for this double purpose.

Read them, and then USE THEM.

"How Could You, Caroline?" Features Little Bessie Love

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Charming little Bessie Love comes to the screen of the ———— theatre, on ———— in a new Pathe play, which bears the unusual and interest-provoking title, "How Could You, Caroline?" The story is by Izola Forrester, and to Agnes C. Johnston fell the task of preparing the scenario. The picture was produced under the direction of Frederick Thompson, well-known master of stagecraft. Conspicuous in support of Miss Love, who, by the way, is found to be admirably suited to the role of the unsophisticated young lady which she plays, are James Morrison, Dudley Hawley, Henry Hallam, Edna Earl and Amelia Summerville. Miss Love plays the part of Caroline Rogers, a romantic boarding school girl. Caroline returns to her home to attend her sister's wedding, and in the chaos of preparations for the wedding it is found that one of the ushers cannot be present. To Caroline is given the task of securing a substitute. Handed an address book she chooses the most romantic name, Reginald Van Allen, who turns out to be a married chauffeur. In Reginald Caroline believes she has found her affinity, and Bob, an old playmate, who loves her, doesn't like it at all. On the day of the wedding Bob takes Caroline to the golf club, just to get her out of the way, but she eludes him and speeds away in a taxi with Reginald. The taxi meets with an accident, and Caroline is finally found, the wedding, meanwhile, having been greatly delayed. For the rest of her visit an attempt is made to keep her under lock and key, but she manages to escape, eloping with Reginald, only to find at the minister's house that he is married. Her romance "busted," she tragically drinks a bottle of cologne, but is safely returned to her home. At the end of her school days she becomes engaged to Bob. Desiring to "get something on Bob" she attends his bachelor dinner disguised as a dancer. Bob is urged to rehearse his wedding ceremony, and Caroline is chosen to help out. The serivce is duly performed. The next day Caroline taunts Bob with her knowledge of the affair, but the joke is on her after all, for Bob knew her all the time she was masquerading at his dinner and the "fake" wedding was a real one.

Bessie Barriscale in "Blindfolded" Thrilling Crook Play—Strong Cast

(Paralta—Five-Reel Production)

"Blindfolded" is the title of the late picture in which Bessie Barriscale makes her bow to the picture-going public. "Blindfolded" was written by E. Richard Schayer, and produced by Paralta under the direction of Raymond B. West. Miss Barriscale is supported by a capable cast of screen players, including Joseph J. Dowling, Patrick Calhoun, David Kirby, Jay Morley, Edward Coxen, Helen Dunbar and H. M. O'Connor. Clyde De Vinna photographed. "Blindfolded" presents the brand of drama found in the melodramatic "crook" plays, and affords entertainment to meet the demands of the most varied audience. There is plenty of action, a good sound plot and a surprise in the climax that is really a surprise. Miss Barriscale has the part of Peggy, daughter of Pat Mildoon, a crook known as "The Ear." He has reared his daughter in the belief that stealing from the rich is perfectly right, and instructs her in the art of "breaking" safes. The Ear is taken sick and a doctor is summoned. He uses the stethoscope, and Muldoon gets the idea that it would be an excellent instrument for Peggy in detecting the combination on a safe. He experiments with it and Peggy becomes adept in its use. "The Mask," another notorious crook who has eluded the police for years, sends to "The Ear" for the assistance of Peggy in staging a big robbery. The Ear consents to let Peggy go. While she is getting the combination, the police break in and the burglars are arrested. Peggy is sent to a reform school for a period of years. At the expiration of her term, a Mrs. Benton, whose son is wayward, adopts her and goes with her to California to visit Mrs. Benton's son. The son falls in love with Peggy and they are married. The crooks who assisted Peggy in the robbery for which she served a sentence, are driven from New York, and catch a freight to the Coast. One of them sees Peggy and threatens to tell her husband of her past unless she assists them in robbing the local bank, of which her husband is assistant cashier. A detective has traced the crook to the Coast and catches him in the act of persuading Peggy to assist him. The crook has come to her home and recognizes her husband as "The Mask," the notorious crook who has reformed.

William Desmond in "An Honest Man"—Wholesome Story, Well Acted

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

William Desmond, Triangle screen star, comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of week, in "An Honest Man." The story is by Henry P. Dowst and is a thoroughly clean and wholesome one. In support of Mr. Desmond is seen a small but capable cast, including among others of note, Graham Pette, who by his performance in the character of an old farmer, stamps himself as one of the screen's best character actors. His delineation is not in the least overdrawn, and it is promised that it will linger long in the memory of all who witness it. Desmond takes the part of a smiling young vagabond, loving booze as he abhors work. After being rejected at a recruiting office he arrives at the farm of Old Cushing, and, being hungry, asks for a little work, as is his custom. Finding the old man in a bad way for help he agrees to stay awhile to help him out. The second day the old man is stricken while at work, and, believing that he is about to die, he tells Benny to go down behind the cider barrel and there he will find an envelope which he is to deliver to his runaway daughter, who is somewhere in the big city. Leaving Cushing for dead, Benny sets out on his quest, laden with $50,000 for Ruby Cushing, and heartened by the old farmer's faith in his honesty. One day in protecting a girl from the advances of a city fop, Benny gets into a fight and is arrested. Brought to trial, he is freed when the girl he has protected unexpectedly appears and tells her story as a witness. A friendship springs up betwen them and later she takes him to the home of a poor and sick actress, Nanine La Rose. He tells the latter of the trust imposed on him, and is startled when the sick girl reveals herself to him as the missing Ruby Cushing. At length Ruby recovers and Benny takes the two girls to Ruby's old home in the country. There they are astounded to find old Cushing alive and quite well, sitting on the porch. The love of Benny and Ruby is plighted then and there, the marriage to take place when Benny returns from fighting for his country.

Live News from the Producers

Three Select Plays This Month

Productions Featuring Constance Talmadge, Norma Talmadge and Alice Brady in Dramatic Roles Set for May

THREE productions featuring Select stars are announced for release by the Select Corporation during the month of May. These pictures are "The Lesson," with Constance Talmadge; "De Luxe Annie," with Norma Talmadge, and "The Ordeal of Rosetta," with Alice Brady. These three pictures, together with Clara Kimball Young's latest Select, "The Reason Why," which was ready for distribution the last day of April, will furnish the new Select productions during the coming thirty days.

"The Lesson," in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Constance Talmadge, is from an original story by Virginia Terhune Van de Water and is calculated to show on the screen in dramatic form the reason why many spirited women feel compelled to leave their husbands and carve careers for themselves. Charles Giblyn directed the picture and included in the cast are Tom Moore, Walter Hiers, Herbert Heyes and Dorothy Green.

Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie" reaches the picture fans of the country during the same theatrical season that the well-known stage play of the same name by Edward Clark is still being shown on tour in the prominent cities. Miss Talmadge is presented in this, as in all her productions, by Joseph M. Schenck. In the cast are Eugene O'Brien, who is again seen as the star's leading man; Frank Mills, Edward Davis and Edna Hunter. Paul West prepared the scenario from Mr. Clark's play, which in turn was based on a story by Seammon Lockwood which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Roland West directed this crook play of a most unusual type.

Clara Kimball Young, Select Star, and Her "Littlest" Leading Man, Eldean Stewart

Alice Brady is seen in a dual role in "The Ordeal of Rosetta," in which she was directed by Emile Chautard. The story is from the pen of Edmund Goulding and relates the fortunes of a girl of gentle breeding who, born in Italy, is brought to New York by her father after an earthquake has destroyed her Sicilian home and presumably killed her sister. As Rosetta, Miss Brady is seen first as a stout hearted stenographer determinedly fighting to support herself and her invalid father. Being employed in an agency where the manuscripts of dramatic works are prepared, she becomes acquainted with a prominent writer, a romance resulting.

Judge Brown Stories Scoring Big Success

GENERAL FILM declares that the reception which has been accorded the Judge Brown Stories by exhibitors in all parts of the country indicate a complete success for these two-reel subjects. Scores of prominent exhibitors have booked the entire Boy City Film Series on the popularity won by the first releases and are giving the various subjects prominence on their programs, General Film says.

One of the most recent tributes paid the Judge Brown Stories comes from G. H. Berry of the Bijou theatre of Holyoke, Mass., who booked the entire series after showing the first three releases. Mr. Berry has the following to say in a letter to J. D. Levine, Boston manager for General Film:

"I consider them the best two-reel subjects that I have ever had the pleasure of witnessing. The Judge Brown Stories are the kind that make our patrons go our talking. They have plenty of good clean comedy, a whole lot of sentiment and are most certainly true to life. The three that we have already played, namely, 'Bud's Recruit,' 'The Lost Lie' and 'Tad's Swimming Hole,' have as much real material in them as the average so-called five and six-reel features."

Douglass Color Pictures Through Hodkinson

The Douglass Natural Color Pictures are to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and are now ready for booking throughout the United States.

Leon F. Douglass, the inventor, is also one of the patentees of the Victor talking machine. His perfecting of a process of photographing color is in line with his phonograph inventions in that in each case he was striving to re-create.

Mr. Hodkinson, who prolonged his stay in Los Angeles to witness the first public showing of these firms at the Kinema Theatre, is said to be elated over the hearty reception accorded them by the public and press.

Ruth Roland Engaged for Another Pathe Serial

Ruth Roland has been engaged to play the leading feminine part and George Chesebro to play the hero in the new Pathe serial, "Hands Up," according to an announcement by the Pathe home office.

Miss Roland was featured in the serials, "Who Pays?" and "The Red Circle." She was co-starred with Frank Mayo in "The Price of Folly," and added to her laurels by her portrayal of the character of Margaret Warner in "The Neglected Wife," the Pathe serial from Mabel Urner's novel. Miss Roland also appeared in "Comrade John," with William Elliot, and "A Matrimonial Martyr," two five-reel features.

"The Kaiser" Brings Big Receipts

On April 15, according to Jewel Productions, Inc., played "The Kaiser," in his picture house in La Salle, Colo., which had a population by the last census of about 300. Mr. Miller says his day's receipts were $301. He charged $1 admission, has reordered the print, and says he will charge $1 the next time.

Jake Rosenthal, of the Majestic, Dubuque, Iowa, says Jewel canceled his vaudeville bookings in order to present "The Kaiser" for a week. The first day it rained, but he played to $501.75, and expects to average $700 on the week.

Monte Blue Is in Cast of Sequel to "Tarzan"

Monte Blue has been engaged by the National Film Corporation to play the heavy role in the feature which will be a sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes." Mr. Blue has just completed an engagement with Edith Storey in a Metro feature.

It Is Said Mme. Olga Petrova Has Several Surprises In Store, to Be Sprung When "Tempered Steel" Is Released Through First National. These "Stills" Lend the Impression It Will Be Another Petrova Success.

"A Soul for Sale" Next Jewel

The next special attraction to be released by Jewel Productions, Inc., is "A Soul for Sale," featuring Dorothy Phillips. It is an adaptation from Evelyn Campbell's magazine story, "Barter," the scenario having been prepared by Elliott J. Clawson. Allen Holubar directed.

In support of Miss Phillips are Albert Roscoe, William Buress, Katherine Kirkwood, Harry Dunkison, Joseph Girard and others.

The feature is in six reels and will be released the first week of June. It will have a pre-release showing at the Broadway theatre, New York, beginning Sunday, May 19.

Kaj Gynt in Metro's "The House of Mirth"

Kaj Gynt, the Swedish actress who supported Ethel Barrymore in "The Eternal Mother," returns to Metro in the All-Star Series production of Edith Wharton's novel, "The House of Mirth." Miss Gynt played leading roles for three years in plays by Strindberg, Shakespeare and Ibsen at the Royal Dramatic theatre in Stockholm. Her motion picture debut was made with the Swedish Film Company.

Emily Stevens Is Ending a Broadway Season to Return to Metro Photoplays

Petrova Plans Trip to West Coast Soon

MADAME OLGA PETROVA will at the completion of "Patience Sparhawk," the fifth Petrova Picture, temporaily cease her producing activities because of considerable trouble with her eyes. Her physician has advised an absolute rest, and her chances for a speedy recovery are good.

Negotiations are now under way whereby Madame Petrova will make a personal appearance at all of the more important theatres controlled by the First National Exhibitors Circuit, which organization distributes the Petrova Pictures, and in addition to delivering a little war talk will give a brief program of her own original songs, poems, monologues and stories. Simultaneous with these personal appearances Petrova Pictures will of course be the offerings in all of the theatres where she gives the film fans the opportunity to see her in the flesh.

A novel suggestion made by Olga Petrova, which has met with the approval of all the First National men and their managers thus far approached, is that instead of raising the prices of these houses where Madame appears and the double program of her pictures and her own unique little entertainment in addition to her war talk is given, each purchaser of an orchestra seat will be required to buy one twenty-five cent war stamp and the same rule will apply to every pair of balcony seats.

It is expected that the Gertrude Atherton story, "Patience Sparhawk," will be finished by Friday of this week.

Pathe Advertises "Yellow Ticket" Widely

"THE YELLOW TICKET," the photoplay starring Fannie Ward, to be released June 2 by Pathe, as already announced, will be nationally advertised and the copy in the Saturday Evening Post of May 25, it is learned, will contain a coupon which will no doubt make the advertising of real box-office value wherever this big publication is circulated, according to Pathe.

Advance views of the production of A. H. Woods' story indicate that "The Yellow Ticket" is probably the most important drawing card among the summer attractions, in Pathe's opinion.

The coupon referred to above is to be clipped and signed by Saturday Evening Post readers. Those sending in this coupon will receive an illustrated book telling the story of "The Yellow Ticket" and giving details of the film production. Each of these inquiries will, quite naturally, become a prospect for the exhibitors. The names will be sent to the branches for the appropriate territory and these will be turned over to the interested exhibitor showing the picture. It is reasonable to estimate that from 50,000 to 100,000 inquiries will thus be brought into Pathe exchange offices.

General Has New Natural History Subject

General Film is now releasing a single reel product of Progressive Films, titled "On a Fox Farm." It is presented as a natural history subject combining entertainment and educational value. It shows the method of rearing blue and silver foxes in captivity for their fur.

Kenneth Webb Becomes a Vitagraph Director

Kenneth Webb, until last week an assistant to Tom Terriss, director of Alice Joyce, has been made a Vitagraph director. Mr. Webb formerly was on the legitimate stage and recently was offered an opportunity to return in an important part in a Broadway production.

Artcraft Asserts Exhibitors Await Expectantly Mary Pickford's Newest Production, " M'liss," Which Is Scheduled For Release May 13

May Brings New Artcraft Films

Mary Pickford Subject Is First, Followed by " Old Wives for New " —William Hart Film Is Third

THREE Artcraft offerings are on the May schedule of releases announced by Walter E. Greene, managing director of department of distribution of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, two presenting Mary Pickford and Wm. S. Hart in new vehicles and the third being another of the series of super-pictures produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

"The first in the order of release is 'Little Mary' in 'M'Liss,' " said Mr. Greene, "in which she will be seen in a typical Pickfordian role as the heroine of the famous Bret Harte novel. From the box office standpoint this picture has everything in its favor.

"Another adaptation from a novel is the Cecil B. De Mille production of 'Old Wives for New,' released on May 20. The author of this book is the late David Graham Phillips, one of the most widely read of contemporary writers in the United States. The story won instant popularity because of its fidelity to life and its pitiless exposition of the frailties of mankind as well as the follies of modern society. Its vital theme, sympathetic as well as cynical, made it an exceptional subject for picturization, and that it will be one of the most successful pictures of the year is a safe prediction.

"A new character is created by Wm. S. Hart, in the Thomas H. Ince production for Artcraft, released May 20, entitled 'Selfish Yates.' The role is that of an egotistical and brutal dive-keeper in an Arizona mining camp. Debased by his sordid surroundings, he exhibits no manly qualities until the germ of love, planted in his soul by an innocent, brave and charming woman, blossoms forth in consuming flame.

"The picture was directed by Hart himself, as were his other recent photoplays, in which he has disclosed that he is as capable a director as he is a player. As usual, the star is supported by a capable cast, his leading woman being Jane Novak, who played opposite him in 'The Tiger Man.' Among the others are Harry Dunkinson, B. Sprott, Ernest Butterworth and Thelma Salter."

Four Metro Stars Busy at Hollywood

WITH four stars working simultaneously and each needing a share of the big stage all the time, Metro's West Coast studios at Hollywood are at the high tide of production activity. The stars aligned in the Spring drive are Edith Storey, Viola Dana, Bert Lytell and Harold Lockwood. The stage is filled with massive sets and the Metro directors are said to be crowding each other as they guide their respective stars in the big scenes.

What makes heavy demands on the large producing force at the studio is the fact that the four pictures in the making are widely different in locale and atmosphere. As to geography, they range from Algeria and Corsica to Lower California; from the haunts of New York society to the Mexican border.

But the work of production is said to be going on with a snap that attests to the efficiency of George D. Baker, manager of productions—who is also directing Miss Storey—and of Clifford Butler, studio manager, who is receiving invaluable aid from H. C. Godfrey, director of technics.

Metro, elsewhere in this issue, tells of the switching of two feminine stars.

Famous Players Adds a Cartoonist

In order to provide special service for newspapers and magazines, the West Coast Publicity Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has installed a cartoonist. This is not only to make special cartoons of each star and production but to prepare layouts and drawings as they are requested from newspapers and other publications.

Don Marq Hix, former cartoonist on the Cox papers in Ohio, has been engaged for this week. Hix is familiar with the needs in the artists' line of the newspaper game and it is expected that his work will be in constant demand.

The Publicity Department of the West Coast Studios under the supervision of Kenneth McGaffey, now consists of Adam Hull Shirk, Walter Vodges, writers; three photographers; musical composer, who supervises the incidental musical scores; cartoonist and the necessary stenographic force.

Theda Bara Is Popular in Foreign Lands

With the film trade in foreign countries thrown into chaos by the almost complete cessation of French and Italian productions, the office of William Fox states that foreign exhibitors seem to have concentrated on Theda Bara as the one best qualified by name and fame to fill the international bill.

Priscilla Dean at the Broadway

" The Two-Soul Woman," with Priscilla Dean playing in the dual role, opened at the Broadway theatre, New York, on Sunday, April 28, following a two weeks' presentation of " The Doctor and the Woman." In " The Two-Soul Woman," which is a Universal special production, Miss Dean enacts a dual personality.

Lawrence Windom Signs to Direct for World

Lawrence C. Windom, the well-known director, has placed his signature to a long-term contract with World Pictures and has commenced the production of a picture starring June Elvidge. Mr. Windom has had a wide and varied theatrical experience previous to his entrance into the motion picture. He was associated with Charles Frohman, Henry B. Harris, Richard Mansfield, William Faversham, Elsie Ferguson and a number of other prominent theatrical folk.

Mr. Windom's motion picture activities have been with Pathe and Essanay for which companies he directed such pictures as "Blind Justice," "The Chimney Sweep," and "The Way of Patience." Productions directed by Mr. Windom recently are the Taylor Holmes comedies, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "Fools for Luck," and "Ruggles of Red Gap."

The first World Picture of Mr. Windom is "The Power and the Glory," from the famous novel of Grace MacGowan Cooke, and June Elvidge will create the leading role.

First Diamond Production Completed

General Film Company announces that the first production of the Diamond Film Company of New Orleans has been finished and will soon be ready for release through General Film. The title is "Way Up in Society," and Diana Allen, formerly of the Ziegfeld Follies; Lou Marks, Oom Paul and Irving Browning are the featured comedians. Plans for the production of these Diamond comedies are being worked out far in advance.

Busy Al Christie

Director Al Christie's quota of work at the Christie Comedy plant during the past week included his writing of two stories, his direction of one, and his completion of the story which Director Henry Otto left only partly made owing to his sudden illness.

Jewels Make for Longer Runs

Executives Point to Success of "The Kaiser" and "The Doctor and the Woman" as Spelling End of Daily Change

THE executives of Jewel Productions, Inc., as a result of their success in booking "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" and "The Doctor and the Woman," the two latest Jewel releases, deduce that the daily change of program in the motion picture houses of the United States appears to be doomed and that the long runs are about to come into their own.

"The only thing necessary to establish the long run and do away with the daily changes," said General Manager H. M. Berman, "is to give the exhibitors good pictures upon which accumulative advertising will bring business to the theatre. My experience with 'The Kaiser' especially demonstrates that the exhibitors want long runs."

In order to prove that long runs of "The Kaiser" were the rule rather than the exception, Jewel Productions, Inc., has opened its books. Not only is the booking sheet produced, but substantiative evidence as Jewel sees it, is shown to prove that exhibitors who had booked the picture for one, two or three days asked for more extended bookings. Moreover in a list of thirty-five cities the records show runs ranging from a minimum of seven days to thirty-five each at the Broadway, New York, and the Globe, Boston.

The Jewel Productions executives also declare that "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" has been more heavily advertised in newspaper columns throughout the country than any other picture ever produced, not excepting "The Birth of a Nation." And all of the advertising was placed by the exhibitors direct usually from advertising copy furnished by the New York advertising department of the company.

Exhibitors who heretofore have confined their promotion activities to short space in the amusement department of daily newspapers seeing the possibilities in "The Kaiser," purchased pages and half pages in their daily newspapers and also used billboard space liberally. Another result of this extensive advertising showed in the heavy publicity, even in editorial columns, given to the production.

Theda Bara Starts on Another

Fox Star Begins Work in California on Romance of the Philippines by George Scarborough — J. Gordon Edwards Directs

AFTER a brief rest from the camera, following long weeks spent in the filming of "Salome," Theda Bara has begun the production of another big picture in California, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. The story, which is by the playwright and author, George Scarborough, is said to be swift and stirring and is an account of an episode in the Philippines following the American occupation. Its original title was "Maria of the Roses," but Mr. Fox says this will probably be changed.

In a statement regarding the new production, William Fox says: "The role of Maria Valverde, the heroine of the subject now in work, provides Miss Bara with a background practically fresh to the screen which is to portray the daughter of an American civil engineer stationed at La Trinidad on the Island of Luzon. The young woman is wilful, romantic and capricious; artful, yet artless, and she stands out sharply from the military personages that help make this a colorful production.

"It is at a great fete—the first ball under American auspices to be held at the governor's palace in Manila—that the adventurous and saucy disposition of Maria is revealed. She has become saturated with the exotic views of life of the children of the Pacific and she creates a romance for herself that has some extremely dramatic complications, in which the American forces are gravely concerned.

"Miss Bara has in the production many of the greatest acting moments of her career. She is induced to lend herself to a ruse designed to make her sweetheart betray the weakness or strength of a besieged garrison of United States troops—part of a soldiery that went to the Aguinaldo country in Funston's time to teach the Filipinos the virtues and glories of self-government and left their bones bleaching in the shadows of the dunes and palms, where they were ambushed.

Miss Bara's newest film is her fifth at the Fox West Coast studios. Last year she made her first trip to the California plant to produce "Cleopatra." After this photo-spectacle was finished, she starred in "Du Barry" and "The Rose of Blood" and then returned to the East. Miss Bara left again for the Pacific in the middle of the Winter to do "Salome."

"Uncle Tom" in the Films

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Springs Surprise on Trade—Marguerite Clark Featured—Soon to Be Released

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has sprung a surprise on the trade by announcing that it has filmed "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and that it will be scheduled for early release as a Paramount picture, with Marguerite Clark as the featured player. This story by Harriet Beecher Stowe, declared by some historians to have precipitated the Civil War in this country, is regarded as one of the masterpieces of American literature.

On the speaking stage this play has probably been the most successful attraction in the history of American drama, and innumerable companies have toured the country for more than forty years, reaping a golden harvest from its presentation. There is hardly an individual in the United States who is not familiar with the story, and the various characters are household words from coast to coast.

According to Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of productions, the motion picture version has been produced on a stupendous scale, with great ensembles of people and a cast of well-known players in the principal roles. No expense has been spared in securing reproductions of the localities mentioned in the book, and the company has traveled thousands of miles in this connection.

"For the first time this subject has been visualized in a manner befitting its great dramatic value and the magnitude of the theme," says Mr. Lasky, "for the biggest scenes and the most exciting incidents suggested by the book could not be shown upon the stage, and have proved difficult and costly to place upon the screen.

"The photoplay follows the ideas of the author rather than the various stage adaptations which have been made. This elaborate version of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' will unquestionably prove of historical and educational worth, aside from its dramatic possibilities, for when Mrs. Stowe wrote her famous book she had passed eighteen years in Cincinnati under conditions which constantly thrust the problem of human slavery upon her attention. A river only separated Ohio from a slave-holding community, and slaves were continually escaping from their masters and were harbored, on their way to Canada, by the circle in which Mrs. Stowe lived."

J. Searle Dawley directed the production and prominent in the cast are J. W. Johnston, Florence Carpenter, Frank Losee, Phil Riley, Harry Lee, Walter Lewis, Augusta Anderson, Ruby Hoffman, Susanne Willis, Mrs. Priestley Morrison, Thomas Carnahan, Jr., and Jere Austin.

Exhibitors Frame Their Goldwyn Checks

THE fact that hundreds of Goldwyn exhibitors were using at least one of their monthly interest checks for office decoration was brought to light when the home office comptroller discovered that many of them had not passed through the bank, says an announcement from the Goldwyn office. The statement continues: "He notified the managers of the various Goldwyn branches throughout the country and upon investigation they found that many exhibitors preferred to frame the checks as curios and as a fitting mark of respect to one of the few large film distributing companies that pay interest on deposits.

"J. S. Roman of the Rex theatre, Virginia, Minn., returned the first interest check sent him last month. 'There must be some mistake,' he wrote. 'I can't understand it. It's the first check of its kind that I have ever received and I've been in the motion picture business nine years. If it is really intended for me, return it and I will hang it in my office.'

"Goldwyn Pictures have done so well for three Florida exhibitors that they, too, have framed their first interest checks. 'What's the idea?' the manager of the Crystal theatre, Daytona, Fla., wrote Goldwyn. 'Here I've been doing a clean-up business with your productions and then I get some money from you in the bargain.' The first interest check sent to the Monroe theatre, Key West, Fla., was another which never went through the bank."

Christie Schedules Five New Comedies

The Christie Comedy Company has scheduled five new comedies for release as follows: May 6, "A Regular Patsy," with Billy Mason and Eleanor Field; May 13, "Love and a Gold Brick," with Bobbie Vernon, Eleanor Field and Ethel Lynne; May 20, "Their Breezy Affair," with Billy Mason and Dorothy Dane; May 27, "Their Honeymoon Baby," with Jay Belasco and Ethel Lynne; June 3, "Petticoats," with Bobby Vernon and Eleanor Field.

Doug Seen in His Greatest Stage Success

After months of negotiation with A. H. Woods, John Fairbanks, business manager for Douglas Fairbanks, announces the acquisition of the motion picture rights of "He Comes Up Smiling," generally regarded as Fairbanks' greatest stage success. The amount paid is reported to be $10,000.

Although the production date of "He Comes Up Smiling" is not yet settled, it is certain that it will be directed by Allan Dwan and will be released as an Artcraft.

Pathe Keeps Busy on the Coast

Everybody is busy these days at the West Coast studios making pictures for Pathe.

Astra has gone in strong for horses and is buying some fine blooded steeds for use in "Hands Up," the new serial that is being made under the personal supervision of Louis J. Gasner, Astra's chief executive. The cost of exterior sets for "Hands Up" will amount to a larger sum of money than has ever been spent on a serial, it is said by Astra officials.

Frank Keenan, Pathe star, is finding a lot of real enjoyment in making his new picture, "The Sierra Sixties," at the Paralta studio, for the character and the atmosphere remind him of his work in "The Girl of the Golden West," the Belasco play in which he scored his greatest triumph on the speaking stage.

Raymond West is directing the comedian and has made a hit with his snappy work so far.

They are using snow stuff in Bessie Love's new Pathe feature "Carolyn of the Corners," in spite of the heat of the California sun. An extra force of technical experts are supplying the beautiful white.

Another Toto

Toto, the former New York Hippodrome comedian, has captured "Fire the Cook" for release by Pathe, June 23. Clarine Seymour again acts as foil for Toto in this comedy feature, which follows "The Junkman," released May 26.

W. P. S. Earle with World

Uncle Sam's Horses in Current Events

That Uncle Sam has a powerful ally in the horse is illustrated in Universal Current Events No. 50, which presents pictures from the remount depot at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C. Some of the best bronco busters in the country are employed in breaking these animals, fresh from Western ranches. Other Wadsworth scenes show pack-mule instruction, the use of the Browning automatic rifle, a military wedding and other camp scenes.

"As the Sun Went Down" for Edith Storey

As Edith Storey's next starring subject on the Metro program, following "The Demon," George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, has selected a screen adaptation of "As the Sun Went Down," a drama written by Mr. Baker and with which the theatre-going public has been familiar for some fifteen years.

"The Demon," adapted by Mr. Baker from the novel of that name by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, is in its final stages of production at the Metro plant in Hollywood.

First Ward Comedy Ready for Takers

Ernest H. Mayer, of the Corona Film Corporation, announces that the first Ward Comedy, directed by and featuring Gus Alexander, has been finished. Mr. Alexander formerly was with the Biograph, Christie and David Horsley companies. The title is "Matrimonial Adventures of Gus," and in the cast are Eugenie Dingens, Louise Alexander, Doris Doscher and Harry Wise.

The second comedy, title to be announced later, is in the course of production. In it Mr. Alexander has the support of Geraldine Sloane.

"Four Years" Gets Big Dates

First National Books Gerard Film in K. & E. and Keith Theatres—Picture Going Toward West

MANY important contracts in connection with the showing of "My Four Years in Germany" in the leading cities of the United States have been signed by Warner Brothers and the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit during the past week, it has been announced.

Efforts to secure the largest high-class houses in each city have proven successful in practically every instance, and an imposing list of Klaw & Erlanger and B. F. Keith theatres are now booked to show Ambassador Gerard's screen revelations of his diplomatic work. Top prices average slightly more than $1.00.

On April 29, the picture opened at the Nixon theatre, Pittsburgh, for an indefinite run, and also got off to a prosperous start at the two Metropolitan theatres in St. Paul and Minneapolis, respectively. In Denver an auspicious opening was also reported at the Broadway, one of the best known legitimate houses in the West, on May 5.

The people of Omaha will be given the opportunity of witnessing a local premiere at the Brandeis theatre on May 12. Elaborate preparations are being made for the Philadelphia opening at the Forrest theatre on the same date, as well as at the Davidson theatre in Milwaukee. Baltimore will see the film at the Academy of Music on the day following. May 19 is the date decided upon for the opening of the Cleveland run at the Opera House, and the extensive advance work that has already been done in that city is expected to result in big business from the first day. Arrangements have also been made to show the picture at the Park theatre in Youngstown and the Hartman theatre in Columbus one week earlier.

In both Toledo and Dayton the Gerard production will open at the B. F. Keith houses on May 20, and will play Keith's Colonial at Akron, beginning May 26.

Bookings are also announced for the Keith theatres in Portland, Me., Lowell, Mass., and Manchester, N. H.

Throughout Indiana the picture will be shown at the leading legitimate houses in Terre Haute, Green Castle, Franklin, Linton, Munice, Elwood and Washington.

Norma Talmadge Plays via Select Only

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, who presents Norma Talmadge in all of her screen productions, has issued the following statement denying rumors which have gained currency affecting the distribution of pictures presenting Norma Talmadge as their star:

"I wish to deny emphatically rumors which have been spread to the effect that Norma Talmadge's pictures are to be released by the First National Exhibitors' Association. It is absolutely untrue that Miss Talmadge's pictures are to be released by this association or by any distributing organization other than the Select Pictures Corporation, who are, have been, and will be sole distributors of Norma Talmadge's picture productions.

"Some of the rumors to which I refer have crept into print, and publications of this nature are not only embarrassing to the distributors of Select Pictures, but are also calculated to mislead exhibitors whose booking arrangements may be affected by the false information thus disseminated.

"The most cordial relationship exists between the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, which produces pictures in which Norma Talmadge is starred, and the Select Pictures Corporation, which markets these productions. Also, a cordial friendship is entertained for the Select officials by both Miss Talmadge and myself. Therefore, in the interest of truth and in justice to both parties concerned, I wish both the motion picture industry and Miss Talmadge's numberless friends among the picture fans to know that Norma Talmadge's pictures will be issued by Select, and only by that company.

"(Signed) JOSEPH M. SCHENCK."

De Mille Begins New Artcraft Special

CECIL B. DE MILLE began work last week at the Hollywood studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on "We Can't Have Everything," a new picture from a well-known and widely read novel by Rupert Hughes, the scenario of which is by his brother, Wm. C. De Mille. In order to keep up with the continuity work it was necessary to divide the work in this fashion so that while Mr. De Mille is working on this picture, Jeanie Macpherson can be employed on writing his next Artcraft special.

"We Can't Have Everything" follows "Old Wives for New," which was completed last week and which will be released shortly, via Artcraft. Full details of the cast, etc., of the new picture will be announced shortly. It is said that the picture will be distinctly different from any of the previous De Mille productions and yet partake of their characteristics to the extent that it will carry to even greater lengths the famous director's ideas of films which embody thought as well as action. As usual elaborate preparations are being made for the production as to sets, costuming and so on.

Vivian Martin will begin work within a short time on a new production at the Morosco studios for Paramount. While the title is as yet unannounced, it is said that the picture will deal with the experiences of a young girl of the social set—quite young in fact, and deliciously ingenuous and vivacious, just the sort of girl that pretty Vivian Martin can so ably portray. James Young will probably direct.

Fox Films Popular in Britain

Careful Selection of Subjects Enables People to Forget the War—Prompt Distribution Also a Factor in Success

THAT in spite of the stress and excitement of the great German drive in Flanders the picture theatres of Great Britain are prospering wonderfully and that Fox films are particularly popular, is the encouraging report which General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan has just received from Ernest Reed, managing director of the Fox exchanges in England. This popularity of Fox subjects is attributed by Mr. Sheehan to careful selection of suitable pictures—since the British public and the soldiers at home on furlough go to the cinema to forget the war—but also to prompt distribution and attractive advertising.

Mr. Reed states that the patrons of the English cinemas demand domestic dramas, Westerns, society comedies and plenty of laugh-provokers, and that for that reason the Fox Sunshine Comedies are always listed among the best sellers in Great Britain. In fact, the British people, especially the returned soldiers, want to get as far away from the war and its memories as they can.

Fox stars are just as popular abroad as at home, and such subjects as "Cleopatra" and "The Soul of Buddha" appeal especially to Englishmen who have sojourned in Egypt and India. Peggy Hyland, with her typical English manner, is naturally a home favorite, while Gladys Brockwell, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice and the Lee children are prime favorites with British film fans, says Mr. Sheehan. George Walsh and Tom Mix win the Tommies with their American dash and go, while the London Cinema pays this tribute to Fox's premier male star:

"It is, of course, needless to expatiate upon the perfect artistry of William Farnum. His characterizations have set a moral standard of manhood which we have never seen excelled on either screen or stage."

Duncan May Set New Serial Speed Record

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH, of Vitagraph, believes that William Duncan, star and director, will establish a new record for speed in the production of "A Fight for Millions," the next Vitagraph serial. Although he only started working about eight weeks ago, he is already at work on the ninth episode of this fifteen-chapter play, which was written by Mr. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

Duncan seems to be one of those rare individuals who can work fast without sacrificing any of the detail or artistic value necessary to a perfect production, as was shown in the photography and lightings in "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance — and the Woman," "Dead Shot Baker," and "The Tenderfoot." All of these productions, exhibitors testify, were notable for their swiftness of action and tensity of climax, and it may be that Duncan's very speed in production is responsible for the fast tempo of his pictures. His keeping the actors "on their toes" in the matter of work probably is responsible for their screen speed, all of which redounds to the benefit of the story.

From the Vitagraph president's office some illuminating statistics on Duncan's methods were obtained, the figures showing a most remarkable record of accomplishment for the Vitagraph strong man.

"The Fighting Trail," which established a new standard in serials, was finished in twenty-five weeks, from the day work was started, despite the fact that production was held up for some time during the rainy season in California last year. It was released in 32 reels, although considerable extra footage was filmed.

"Vengeance—and the Woman," its successor, was made in thirty-reels, and was produced in 27 weeks.

In between the two serials, during a period of forty days, Duncan produced "Dead Shot Baker" and "The Tenderfoot," each of which was released in five reels.

Wanted: A Female Chaplin

Carl Laemmle has cast out his lines for a female Charlie Chaplin. Instructions have been issued by Universal's president to the directors of the L-KO, Nestor and Century comedies that their main effort in life henceforth is to find, rope and keep a female who will be known as the "funny woman of the screen" for some years to come. "With the women working in your companies," President Laemmle informed Abe and Julius Stern, who are responsible for the three comedy brands, "you certainly should have some woman capable of development."

Goldwyn Announces Two More Leading Men

For the reason that Tom Moore, Goldwyn's premier supporting actor, cannot be seen with all the stars simultaneously, two new leading men are about to make their first appearance in Goldwyn productions.

In Mabel Normand's newest production, directed by Clarence G. Badger, Rodrique LaRoque appears as leading man. Though long known in photoplays, Mr. LaRoque is now working for the first time in the East with the Goldwyn organization.

In Madge Kennedy's newest photodrama, as yet unnamed, Clarence Oliver has the role opposite the star.

Other players, new to Goldwyn pictures, who are at work at the Fort Lee studios, are Jules Cowles, who will be in the support of Mae Marsh in a forthcoming production, and Maude Turner Gordon, who will appear in the new Madge Kennedy picture. Mabel Ballin, who was seen in "The Spreading Dawn" and "The Danger Game," will be seen with Mae Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure."

Lord Reading Witnesses "Masks and Faces"

Lord Reading, British Ambassador to the United States, former Chief Justice of England, together with his staff and their families, were present at a private showing of "Masks and Faces," given for them by World Pictures at the British Embassy, Monday evening.

"Masks and Faces" is released by World Pictures on the regular World program May 6.

Emmy Wehlen Begins a New Metro Picture

Emmy Wehlen, who has just returned from a tour in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan in which she disposed of $5,000,000 in bonds, has begun the first scenes of a new Metro All-Star Series picture which was written for her by Katharine Kavanaugh. June Mathis prepared the scenario and Edwin Carewe is directing.

Miss Wehlen will play the role of a society girl and during the course of the action the star will wear some gowns which are said to surpass anything that she has ever worn before the motion picture camera.

Paramount Plans to Alternate Stars

Owing to the fact that Ince productions for Paramount are well ahead of schedule, the plan has been adopted at the western studio of the organization to alternate Ray and Dalton pictures for the time being and later go back to a parallel arrangement. In other words, while Charles Ray is working, as at present, on a picture, Miss Dalton will take a brief rest and immediately on completion of the film, she will start work while Ray takes it easy for a time. Another advantage of this, according to the belief of Thomas H. Ince, is that the stars in the time allotted them for a rest can study their parts for the next picture thoroughly and also get the physical and mental relaxation that will fit them to resume work in a fresh and enthusiastic state of mind and body. And in addition to this, they will have a chance to visit relatives and friends and mingle a bit with the outside world.

Marie Dressler Plans More Comedies

Marie Dressler, the comedienne, is not permitting her Liberty Loan itinerary to interfere with her work of making comedies for release by World Pictures.

Miss Dressler, who has been meeting with success in the sale of the third Liberty Loan, will return to New York City on May 10 to begin the making of the comedies which World Pictures will release. After the conclusion of her long trip—which Miss Dressler volunteered to make and on which she paid her own expenses—she will enjoy a short vacation, then start work before the camera.

Picks a Minter Play

After a personal review of "A Bit of Jade," the recent American-Mutual release starring Mary Miles Minter, Sidney Grauman booked it for first run in Los Angeles for Grauman's new million dollar picture palace.

"Over the Top" Breaks Records

Irwin Announces Remarkable Bookings on Empey Picture—Syracuse Theatre Runs It Two Weeks to Big Success

"OVER THE TOP," Vitagraph's production in which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, author of the book, appears as the star, has shattered all booking records in the history of the motion picture industry, Vitagraph claims. Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, makes the announcement that within a period of ten working days contracts have been closed whereby "Over the Top" is to be shown in 250 theatres with total bookings of more than 2,500 days, all to be played within a forty-day period.

Syracuse, N. Y., was the first city outside of New York to view the picture, and it played to such a good business at the Hippodrome of that city that it was forced into a second week. So far as the records show, no picture has ever approached, in the same period of time, the mark set by "Over the Top," and the accomplishment will no doubt stand for a long time to come as one of the greatest tributes to a product and one of the greatest distributing achievements known to the motion picture industry.

The figures given by Mr. Irwin apply only to definite bookings, and do not take into consideration a number of indefinite runs to be inaugurated in centers like Pittsburgh, Boston, Atlantic City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., and Denver.

Thus far the bookings on "Over the Top" have been confined exclusively to first runs, and out of fifty-seven cities in the United States with a population of 100,000 or more, forty-nine have been closed. Negotiations are under way in the remaining eight and it is expected that they will be concluded within a few days. Virtually all of the big Eastern circuits have booked the picture solid and in New York and environs it is scheduled to be shown in forty theatres on first run.

Mr. Irwin was in personal charge of the campaign which has put "Over the Top" in its history-making position, and for the ten days that he engaged in approving contracts he had little time to devote to anything else.

Brandt Back from Middle West

Universal's Assistant Treasurer Returns from Tour of Exchanges—Reports Big Boom for the News Weeklies

JOE BRANDT, Assistant Treasurer of the Universal Film Company, has just returned from a tour of the Universal exchanges in the Middle West. Mr. Brandt expressed amazement at the optimism displayed by exhibitors, especially in the territories served by the Chicago, Minneapolis Omaha and Des Moines offices, over the prospects for summer business.

"The war," said Mr. Brandt, "appears to have whetted the appetites of the motion picture patrons for all of the news weekly material it is possible for us to gather. By 'us' I mean not only Universal but every other company that issues a news weekly.

"Many of the exhibitors are taking every service in this branch of the business. Some of them are showing as many as five split reels at each show. They appear especially anxious to obtain parades of troops from the localities in which their theatres are located. The reason for this is the patronage drawn from the relatives of soldiers. These relatives attend the theatres as often as six times a week hoping they may see their soldier-relatives on the screen in one of the parades.

"The fact that the short reel end of the industry is booming is best evidenced by the fact that exhibitors who cancelled our service several months ago now are offering twice as much film rental to get it back. These offers are not exceptional. On the contrary they are very frequent."

In discussing film rental prices Mr. Brandt declared that in his opinion the charges for the split reel news weeklies heretofore have been far too low and that, if the exhibitors are doing a thriving business as a result of the news weeklies, prices should be adjusted along a higher level. However, Mr. Brandt declared, if prices are to be adjusted along a higher level the adjustment should be made with some thought for the exhibiting end of the business and should not be an arbitrary increase.

Dan Lederman, of Des Moines, has been appointed travelling representative of the exchange department of the Universal Film Company and has started on his first tour over the entire country. The appointment was made by Mr. Brandt on his recent trip. Lederman, who has worked for President Laemmle for several years, was appointed at the combined suggestion of Messrs. Laemmle and Brandt.

An Intimate Glimpse of W. S. Hart, Ince-Artcraft Star

New Mutuals in the Making

Feature Productions Starring Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell Are Now in the Making

MARY MILES MINTER, Margarita Fisher and William Russell are starred in feature productions now in course of preparation at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., for release on the Mutual schedule.

Mary Miles Minter's next picture, now in course of preparation, is "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," a picturization of a story by Josephine Dodge Bacon which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It chronicles the amusing and interesting adventures of a young American girl returned after living abroad, who cannot find her wealthy relatives and, to be self-supporting, takes charge of the home of a fashionable American woman who is never at home in the daytime and who never sees her thoroughly competent charwoman. The rich woman's brother runs across Rosy and falls in love with her. There is scandal galore until Rosy's identity is discovered and she turns out to have better social standing and more money than her suitor.

Margarita Fisher has finished her latest picture, "A Square Deal," at the Santa Barbara studios and is resting up for a few weeks before beginning her next, which will be titled "Impossible Susan." The latter story was written by Josephine Franklin Poland and was adapted for the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney. The plot involves Miss Fisher in a series of tomboy adventures.

The next William Russell offering will be "Up Romance Road," which was written especially for Mr. Russell by Stephen Fox. The story is an original comedy drama and it keeps Russell on the jump from beginning to end. Mr. Fox also wrote "The Frameup," "High Play" and "Shackles of Truth," all well-known Russell successes; "Souls in Pawn," a Gail Kane picture; "The Japanese Nightingale" with Fanny Ward, and "More Trouble" with Frank Keenan.

Mary Miles Minter As She Appears In "Social Briars," An American-Mutual Picture

Lois Weber Starts "The Forbidden Box"

LOIS WEBER has started work at her Hollywood studios on the production of "The Forbidden Box," described as "a forceful photodrama of the uncharted seas of life." It is from the pen of E. V. Durling, Los Angeles representative of the New York Morning Telegraph.

In this story of a modern Pandora the leading role has been entrusted to Mildred Harris, whose portrayals of Sydney Page in "The Doctor and the Woman" and Linnie, the department store heroine of "The Price of a Good Time," are of recent memory. Harry Woodward, formerly with Griffith productions, will have the masculine lead. Priscilla Dean, whose Universal special production, "The Two-Soul Woman," was recently released, has been borrowed from Universal City for this one Lois Weber feature, while Kate Toncray of the Lasky forces has been engaged for an important part.

"The Forbidden Box" is a tale of a city man, sickened of the glare of the bright lights, who seeks to find rest in the love of a country maiden. But the rural lass is tired of the green grass, the chores of the farmhouse, the lowing of the cattle and the cackling of the hens, and would lead the man she loves back to the flare and blare of the metropolis. The adjusting of these two radically different Utopias in the minds of the lovers is being woven by "the Belasco of the screen" into a drama said to be more dynamic in its indictments, and more universal in its message, than any of her previous successes.

Morey Begins Work on "Tangled Lives"

Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe as his leading woman, has started work in "Tangled Lives," a story by James Oliver Curwood, to be made into a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, under direction of Paul Scardon. This is said to be one of Mr. Curwood's strongest stories and gives the author the distinction of having two of his stories under production by Vitagraph practically at the same time. "Baree, Son of Kazan," a Blue Ribbon Feature, with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman in the featured roles, was completed last week at Vitagraph's Hollywood studios.

"The One Woman" Is Dixon Masterpiece

Thomas Dixon, Jr., author of "The Birth of a Nation," has returned to New York from Los Angeles, where he has been for the past few months attending to the details of production connected with the filming of his book, "The One Woman," which is now being produced at the Paralta studios by the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation.

Mr. Dixon spent a number of weeks at the Coast conferring with the executives there in reference to the writing of the screen version of the story and the many details necessary before starting the actual filming of the story. In speaking of "The One Woman" as a film production, Mr. Dixon stated that he expects that it will be ready for release within a reasonably short time.

Stage Play Adapted for Alice Joyce

Vitagraph announces another stage play by Edith Ellis, author of "Mary Jane's Pa," with Alice Joyce as the star. The play was presented in New York several years ago under the title of "My Man," and comes to the screen titled "The Triumph of the Weak." It is scheduled for release the week of May 13. Tom Terriss directed the production and in the cast supporting Miss Joyce are Walter McGrail, Adele De Garde, Bernard Seigel, Eulalie Jensen and Templar Saxe.

In some respects the play is said to recall "Within the Law," with the action just as thrilling but with the underlying theme totally different. Miss Joyce has a role which gives her many opportunities similar to those she had in "Within the Law," and she is said to have made the most of them. It is described as abounding in pathos.

Harold Lloyd Comedies Speeding Along

Harold Lloyd is speeding along at Los Angeles these days with Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard in the production of Pathe-Rolin comedies for the Pathe program. The next five are: "Kicked Out," May 5; "The Non-Stop Kid," May 12; "Two-Gun Gussie," May 19; "Fireman, Save My Child," May 26; "The City Slicker," June 2.

Alice Brady, in Select Pictures

Margarita Fisher, American-Mutual Star

Cold Weather Keeps Alice Brady in South

Alice Brady, Director Alan Croslin and a large number of her company, including her leading man, H. E. Herbert, recently went to Asheville, N. C., to make some exterior scenes for Miss Brady's next Select picture following "The Ordeal of Rosetta," but instead of finding balmy weather they ran into all kinds of wintry blasts, hail storms, blankety mists, etc., with the result that little or no filming has been done so far.

Meanwhile, "The Ordeal of Rosetta" has been cut and titled and is now ready for release, as originally planned, some time in May.

Miss Brady and her company are hoping to be able to return from the South before another week passes.

Elaborate Set in "Old Wives for New"

What is said to be the most elaborate interior set ever erected and furnished at the Famous Players-Lasky studios at Hollywood has been prepared for "Old Wives for New," Cecil B. De Mille's new special Artcraft picture, adapted by Jeanie Macpherson from the novel by David Graham Phillips.

The set represents the interior of "Dangerfield's," a modiste's palace in New York. The scene required dozens of beautiful and gorgeously gowned young women who appear in creations selected by Alpharetta Hoffman on her recent visit to the metropolis.

Mr. De Mille is said to be devoting much time to the numerous intimate and effective scenes in this picture.

Pauline Frederick's Role Intensely Emotional

As Katusha, the central character in Count Leo Tolstoi's story, "The Resurrection," which is released May 6 as a Paramount picture, Pauline Frederick interprets a role said to exceed that of her last starring vehicle, "La Tosca," in emotional intensity. The story is an arraignment of the double standard of morals as well as an expose of the oppression of the lower classes in Russia.

About New Pictures

George Moss, who DeLuxe Pictures, Inc., says is probably the oldest actor on screen or stage, has a part in "The Street of the Seven Stars," in which Doris Kenyon is the star.

William Fox advises that the ambition of Francis Carpenter, the tow-headed starlet, has been gratified in "True Blue," the production that Wm. Farnum has made as a Standard Picture. He played "Bill" as a child.

Another surprise has been sprung at the Petrova studio, says the press agent. Frederick Truesdale was engaged for a part in "Patience Sparhawk," and he later turned out to be a portrait painter.

"Moral Suicide," the production made by Graphic Film Corporation, is to be released through Pathe, the latter company announced this week. John Mason and Leah Baird are prominent in the cast.

News came from out the press precinct of Metro this week that Director Leonce Perret had much trouble in filming "The Million Dollar Dollies" because the Dolly Sisters look so much alike.

Marshall Neilan has completed "Hit the Trail Holliday," the Artcraft picture starring George M. Cohan. It was adapted from the Cohan play by Anita Loos and John Emerson.

Mary Miles Minter is said to have achieved another triumph in "Social Briars," a new American production for Mutual release. The story is of a country girl who goes to the city.

The interior scenes of Harold Lockwood's "Lend Me Your Name," for Metro, have been completed, and exterior work is now under way. Many artistic shots are promised, with California as the background.

Director Oscar Apfel has started work on a new World production called "Merely Players," the scenario of which is by Mrs. L. Case Russell. Kitty Gordon has the star role, with Irving Cummings opposite.

Hot off the wire comes the news that during the filming of a Mack Sennett Paramount comedy, two of the company almost lost their lives in the Pacific Ocean. Teddy, the Sennett dog, scurried to the rescue.

Cesare Gravina, who is introduced by Pathe as an Italian comedian, has a role in "The Mysterious Client," starring Irene Castle and set for release on May 19. It is said American audiences have never seen him.

Mae Marsh is the busy little good Samaritan these days, says the Goldwyn press department. Since her return from Georgia, where "The Glorious Adventure" was filmed, she has been sending the pickanninies presents.

California had best beware! Universal may expose it in "The Guilt of Silence" May 13, as the picture shows a blizzard and tons of snow, which is unusual for the sunshine state. Scenes were shot April 2.

The Clover Comedy Trio, Bud Duncan, Dot Farley and Kewpie Morgan, are said to present a riot of fun in "The Paper Hanger's Revenge," fifth of the series released by General.

In "Mile-a-Minute Kendall," Paramount Picture, Jack Pickford was called upon to use his knowledge in driving a racing car. The scenario called for a smash-up, and the press agent says that's what it got.

While work was in progress for Paralta's "An Alien Enemy," in which Louise Glaum is the star, the strong studio lights got in some deadly work, with the result that Miss Glaum has been trying to regain her eyesight.

William Russell, who now has his own company in operation at the American Film Company studios on the West Coast, has finished "Hearts and Diamonds," taken from the William Hamilton Osborne story.

Fiction's traditional ship, the Flying Dutchman, has been reproduced on the screen in the William Fox feature, "Queen of the Sea," starring Annette Kellermann. This marks the debut of the "vision" in pictures.

Pathe asserted emphatically last week that every woman in these broad United States will enthuse over Bessie Love in her Pathe Play, "How Could You Caroline?", released May 4. Does this let the men out?

Director Emile Chautard is working on interiors of "Prince Zilah," a Paramount picture starring Pauline Frederick.

Emmy Wehlen, Metro Star, Has Started a New Picture

"No Man's Land," Lytell's Next Picture

Bert Lytell's next picture, his second as a Metro star, is "No Man's Land" and is a picturization of Louis Joseph Vance's novel of the same name. Mr. Lytell and Albert Shelby LeVina prepared the scenario at Metro's West Coast studio.

Notwithstanding its title, "No Man's Land" is not a war picture, the locale being a mysterious island rather than that stretch of shell-ruined terrain that lies between contending armies. The first scenes were photographed at Balboa less than a week after the star had finished "The Trail to Yesterday." In the new production he is directed by Will S. Davis, and Anna Q. Nilsson is his leading woman. Louis Joseph Vance, it will be recalled, wrote "The Lone Wolf," in which Mr. Lytell made his initial appearance on the screen.

Pathe "Tank" Special Ready for Screen

The fact that the Allies are relying upon the British tanks and Foch's reserve army to stem the tide of the Huns, gives added interest to the Pathe war special "Our Fighting Ally—the Tank" which is set for release May 5.

An interesting feature of the film is said to be the work of the farm tractors from which the tank was developed. This mighty industrial machine is shown at work in American fields where it is doing great work in supplying the food for soldiers and animals engaged in the fight for Democracy and its relationship to the tank is thus clearly shown.

Louise Glaum and Company Go to Del Mar

Louise Glaum, Director Wallace Worsley and a company of twenty-five players, including Lawson Butt, the noted English actor, recently went to the town of Del Mar, near San Diego, Cal., to fill some seaside scenes for "Shackled," Miss Glaum's second Paralta picture. After finishing the Del Mar scenes but little more of the picture remains to be taken. The story was written by Lawrence McCloskey, and the screen version was prepared by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton, of the Paralta staff.

Artist Now Metro Scenarioist

Mrs. Louise Rive-King Miller Boyer, Student of Art and Pageantry, Is Newest Acquisition to Metro Staff

METRO has added an artist and student of modern pageantry to its growing staff of scenario writers.

Louise Rive-King Miller Boyer is the latest acquisition. Mrs. Boyer, a graduate of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, has studied painting in Paris and pageantry in America, the latter under the tutelage of Thomas Wood Stevens, a recognized authority. She brings to the screen a sense of pictorial values developed in the arrangement of color, form and mass groupings in the art-processions she has directed. She has specialized in decorative design and her ability in this direction will be fully utilized in the making of Metro pictures.

The stage, the newspaper world, playwrighting, and civil engineering have contributed to Metro's scenario staff. Luther Reed is a civil engineer, having studied that branch at Columbia University. But he became interested in the course in journalism offered at the university, went through with it and became a valued reporter on the New York Herald. Before coming to Metro he served his apprenticeship in scenario writing with Paramount and Universal.

June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh who have been responsible for some of the greatest Metro successes, are recruits from the stage. Miss Mathis acted under the management of Cohan and Harris, A. H. Woods, the Shuberts and the Lieblers and her last stage appearance was as leading woman for Julian Eltinge. Miss Kavanaugh acted in vaudeville with Valerie Bergere, presenting a repertoire of one-act plays.

Albert Shelby Le Vino is a trained newspaper man. He has had more than fifteen years' experience on the Times, American and other leading New York dailies and is also a prolific writer of special articles and short stories. He has also had experience in motion picture publicity work.

Charles A. Taylor wrote the melodramatic stage success, "From Rags to Riches," besides numerous other well-known plays, and has put his experience in this line to good use in the writing of scenarios. Alice Solis has devoted all her time since completing her education to the writing of motion picture plays and technical work such as continuity, while Leighton Osmun, of Metro's West Coast studio, was a writer of fiction before beginning his screen career.

World Directors on New Feature Subjects

DIRECTOR TRAVERS VALE is accomplishing an ambidextrous feat at the World Studios at present. He is completing two pictures simultaneously which bear the titles of "The Judge" and "The Echo." His June Elvidge is featured in both productions and John Bowers also plays a double lead in the two productions. Only the smooth studio organization at the World Studio enables the various departments and the one company to change from one picture to another without a hitch. Especial care is being employed by Director Vale to maintain distinctness in characterization and clarity in the continuity of each story.

Director Nell Henderson at present is working upon a new photoplay, "By Hook or Crook," written by Harry O. Hoyt, who is a member of the World scenario department. The photoplay features Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley and has a prominent supporting cast.

Director William P. S. Earle, who has recently joined World Pictures, commenced the production work on "The Blood of the Trevors." Miss Barbara Castleton, Madge Evans, John Bowers and George MacQuarrie are the names to be featured. The story was written by Maravene Thompson, who is a well-known dramatist and short-story writer.

Lawrence C. Windom, directly after affixing his John Hancock to a World Pictures contract, departed for the South to make scenes for "The Power and the Glory." Miss Elvidge, who is scheduled to play the lead, will follow in a few days the conmpany, with Mr. Windom, which consists of Frank Mayo, Albert Hart, Clay Clement, Nora Cecil, and some others whose faces will be new to World Pictures.

Louise Huff Not to Renew Lasky Contract?

It is said to be quite likely that Louise Huff, who has appeared in several recent pictures with Jack Pickford and in other Paramount productions, will not renew her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Miss Huff, who has been working at the Hollywood studios of the Lasky Company, will leave the Coast for New York early in May and it is quite possible that she will close a contract with a certain producing concern to make pictures in its New York studios. At any rate, a definite announcement as to her new connections is expected soon.

Tom Moore Again Madge Kennedy's Leading Man

Tom Moore will again be seen as Madge Kennedy's leading man in her fifth Goldwyn production, "The Fair Pretender." Moore's performances have been a prominent feature of several Goldwyn productions, notably "The Danger Game," the previous Madge Kennedy picture. Other well-known players who lend their artistry to "The Fair Pretender" are Robert Walker, Paul Doucet, Florence Billings, Grace Stevens, Wilmer Walter, Emmett King and John Terry.

Peggy Hyland Is Starred In "Peg of the Pirates," a Fox Picture

Big V Companies "Own" Hollywood Plant

With all the other Western Vitagraph organizations absent on location the two Big V Comedy companies now have the big Hollywood plant of Vitagraph all to themselves. The Earle Williams company is housed in one of Los Angeles' finest residences, filming interiors; William Duncan and his company engaged in making Vitagraph's newest serial, "A Fight for Millions," is at work at Burbank, Cal.; Director Paul Hurst with Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon and others of the cast of "The Woman in the Web," are at San Fernando, while not far distant the Wolfville series company is busy filming scenes for its fifth picture.

"An Alien Enemy" Shown at Sing Sing

"An Alien Enemy," in which Miss Louise Glaum makes her debut as a star in Paralta Plays, was shown recently to an enthusiastic audience at Sing Sing prison. The production was proclaimed by the prison officials not only as one of the most splendid screen offerings which had been shown in that institution, but as the greatest propaganda picture they had ever seen.

A highly complimentary review of the production appeared in the current issue of the Star-Bulletin, published within the walls by the prisoners.

Recalls the Old Fashioned Press Agent

The title of Enid Bennett's current Thomas H. Ince-Paramount picture, "The Biggest Show on Earth," recalls the methods of the circus press agents of a couple of decades or more ago when every circus was, according to its P. A., the biggest or greatest show on earth.

A. L. Block, Indianapolis, Meets Mae Marsh

A. L. Block, Indianapolis merchant, who is president of the Circle theatre in that city, had never set foot in a motion picture studio until last week. Accompanied by Mrs. Block and by their friends, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Mann, of Albany, N. Y., the Indianapolis visitor put in an entire afternoon at the big Goldwyn plant in Fort Lee, saw Mae Marsh at work under the direction of Hobart Henley, and was photographed with her as a souvenir of the occasion.

During the visit Mr. Block took occasion to praise his powerful and popular business associate, Robert Lieber, of the Circle, who has just been made president of the First National, and to pay tribute to the skill and fine showmanship of S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle and member of the Motion Picture News Advisory Board.

A Boost from Uncle Sam

No less than 200,000 pictures of June Mathis, Metro scenario writer, are in the hands of United States soldiers at the battle front in France, and it is said that there will be a million of them there before long. Here's the answer: Miss Mathis appeared some six years ago in a musical comedy with Julian Eltinge, and her picture was entered in a beauty contest. The picture won first prize and was selected by a leading cigar manufacturer to adorn the cigar bands and box covers of a brand of cigars. By purchasing the output of this brand the Government has made Miss Mathis's likeness familiar to the hundreds of thousands of American soldiers abroad.

Yorke Company Occupies Former Studio

On May 1 the Yorke-Metro Company, which produces the Harold Lockwood features for Metro, reoccupied its former studio at 1329 Gordon street, Hollywood, Cal. Since its recent return to the West coast, after a seven months' season of picture-making in the East, the Yorke organization has been occupying space at Metro's Hollywood studios.

"A Square Deal" Finished by Margarita Fisher

Goldwyn Denies Kennedy Is to Quit

Despite report, Miss Kennedy is not to quit the screen next fall to become once more a dramatic star or to go under the management of David Belasco. This announcement comes jointly from Miss Kennedy and Goldwyn.

"I'm a Man" Is a Judge Brown-General Film Picture In Which Patriotism Is Uppermost. Martin Pendleton Is the Boy

Elsie Ferguson Goes West for New Scenes

ELSIE FERGUSON has finished "The Danger Mark," under the direction of Hugh Ford, and after filling a number of engagements for the Liberty Loan Committee, departed for Montana with Marshall Neilan, who will direct her next picture, to be photographed in the West. Many of the scenes will be taken in Yellowstone Park, and a ranch has been engaged near Browning, Mont., with the use of the cowboys, horses and stock.

The title of this picture is "Hearts of the Wild," and as the name would indicate, it is a story of frontier life, said to be teeming with sensational incidents, in which United States soliders play an important part. Attired in picturesque western costume, Paramount thinks the star should make a pleasing picture in her new subject.

This will be the biggest and most spectacular subject Miss Ferguson has done for Artcraft, and it is said that the ability displayed by Marshall Neilan in staging the big western ensembles in "M'liss," Mary Pickford's latest Artcraft picture, was an important and deciding factor in his selection as the producer of "Hearts of the Wild."

A large number of actors for the minor parts will join the Ferguson company at Browning, Mont., but the principal actors in the supporting roles were recruited in the east and accompanied the star. They include Thomas Meighan, Mat Moore, Lucela Squires, Charles O. Laughlin, Sidney D'Albrook and E. Fernandez. Albert Green is acting as assistant to Marshall Neilan, and Walter Stradling is in charge of the camera staff.

Filming of First Mastercraft Is Begun

AT the Paralta studios in Los Angeles one entire stage, divided into various settings, is now being devoted to the production of Thomas Dixon, Jr.'s, novel, "The One Woman," with which feature the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation makes its advent in the motion picture world.

F. Eugene Farnsworth, president of the Mastercraft company, is actually supervising the production, which is being staged under the direction of Reginald Barker. Ada Gleason and Clara Williams appear in leading roles, while the supporting cast is said to be one of unusual strength.

Mr. Barker worked for several days on scenes scattered throughout the scenario which did not demand the presence of the character of "Gordon," due to the fact that W. Lawson Butt, the English actor who has been selected to interpret that role, has been on location in Southern California taking some of the final scenes in a forthcoming Paralta play featuring Louise Glaum. Mr. Butt recently joined the Paralta Company and has been loaned to Mastercraft for this single production, upon the completion of which he will again appear in the regular Paralta output.

The screen version of "The One Woman" was written by Mr. Dixon himself in collaboration with Harry Chandlee. The scenario was prepared by Mr. Chandlee and E. Richard Schayer.

Mr. Farnsworth estimates that the negative of this picture will be completed in about five weeks. This, however, does not include the time allowed for laboratory work.

Coming Program Offerings

"U" Offers Mae Murray Special

"The Bride's Awakening," Feature for Week of May 20—Carter De Haven Starred in Nestor Comedy

UNIVERSAL heads its list of releases for the week of May 20 with "The Bride's Awakening," a Mae Murray Special Attraction in six reels. In this production Miss Murray plays the role of a young girl who marries a man with a past. After a few weeks the ghosts of the past return to mar the bride's future life. The big ghost in this case is a married woman infatuated with the bridegroom.

The ten-reel Boy Scout serial, "Boy Scouts to the Rescue," reaches its fifth and final episode. Universal reports that requests for this serial are being received from schools, churches and other organizations throughout the country, but that up to the present it has refused to make any bookings outside of the regular motion picture theatres, feeling that the exhibitors should have the first call for the booking of the picture. So great has been the demand that arrangements have been made for another serial along similar lines in which Boy Scouts will be the actors.

The week's Nestor comedy offering is "The Bath House Scandal," featuring Carter De Haven. It is the story of the adventures of a young man at the beach who endeavors to get rid of his ancient female partner.

Little Zoe Rae Is Among the Best Liked Bluebird Stars

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear in another one-reel Lyons-Moran Star comedy, titled "The One Horse Show." These comedies, without slapstick, are said to be growing better and better with every release.

Kathleen O'Connor and Rube Miller, supported by the L-Ko beauty chorus, disport through 2,000 feet of film in an L-Ko Comedy, titled "Who's Zoo?"

The Eddie Polo serial, "The Bull's Eye," reaches its sixteenth episode, the title being "Running Wild," and Marie Walcamp appears in the eighth episode of "The Lion's Claws." The three split reel features, Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Current Events and Universal Screen Magazine, complete the program.

Marriage Drama and Border Play—Triangle

A MARRIAGE drama, "Her Decision," with J. Barney Sherry and Gloria Swanson as the featured players, and "Wolves of the Border," with Roy Stewart as the star, are Triangle's feature offerings for the week of May 12.

In "Her Decision," which was directed by Jack Conway, Gloria Swanson, former Keystone comedienne, has her second dramatic role. The story is one of sisterly sacrifice. The heroine enters into a loveless marriage to keep the secret of a sister's disgrace. She loves a man without character and marries a man with character who loves her. As a wife, she falls in love with her husband.

"Wolves of the Border," with Roy Stewart, is the second release of the week of the 12th. Alvin J. Neitz, who has scenarioized several recent Stewart productions, including "Faith Endurin'" and "Paying His Debt," wrote this play. The Mexican-United States frontier is the scene of the story, which depicts the conditions in that region as they exist today. With the march of progress over the prairies come new methods in cattle raising. A feud between the primitive cattlemen and the progressive newcomer is the result.

In support of M. Stewart are Jack Curtis, Josie Sedgwick, Frank McQuarrie and others. Cliff Smith directed the production.

The concluding release of the week of the 12th is a two-reel Keystone comedy, "Newspaper Clippings." Francis McDonald, Triangle dramatic player who was recently seen in the mystery story "The Hand at the Window," is a featured player in this production. Claire Anderson, former comedienne, who has appeared in several new Triangle feature plays, has the leading feminine role.

Mutual Changes Date

"Social Briars," Mary Minter's latest American production, originally scheduled for release May 6, will be released May 13, by Mutual.

The next Minter production now in course of production at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc., is "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor."

General Announces First Rancho Drama

General Film Company announces the release of "In the Shadow of the Rockies," the first of its series of Rancho Dramas. The story deals with the son of an Eastern millionaire who is sent West to earn his own living and who becomes involved in a series of unusual adventures.

A company of capable players has been selected for the work of filming the Rancho series, which will be released every other week, alternating with the Blue Ridge dramas produced by Ned Finley.

Following "In the Shadow of the Rockies" will come "Where the Sun Sets Red," and then "Poverty Gulch," each of which is designed to be a real story of the real West with real entertainment value.

Other subjects in the series are now being filmed at Denver and will be announced shortly.

Franklyn Farnum in May 20th Bluebird

The Bluebird production scheduled for release the week of May 20 is "Five Thousand Dollars Reward," featuring Franklyn Farnum. A large cast is presented in Farnum's support, its members including William Lloyd, J. Farrel McDonald, Wharton Jones, Mark Fenton, Gloria Hope, Frank Brownlee, Lule Warrenton and Grace McLean. The story is by Charles Wesley Sanders and first appeared in All Story Magazine. It was adapted for the screen by F. McGrew Willis, and the picture was directed by Douglas Gerrard.

In the story, Dick Arlington, the only relative of a crabbed old uncle, is accused of murdering the old man. Every circumstance points to his guilt and the picturized story is so well done that the audience is kept in doubt until the last few hundred feet of the film as to his guilt or innocence. The utter futility of circumstantial evidence, under certain conditions, is strikingly set forth.

Irene Castle Starred in Pathe Feature

"The Mysterious Client," with Irene Castle, starred episode No. 11 of the Pearl White serial, "The House of Hate," the second chapter of the "Britain's Bulwarks" series. Harold Lloyd, in "Two-Gun Gussie," and Hearst-Pathe News reels are included in the program releases of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the week of May 19.

"The Mysterious Client" is an Astra production in five reels and was directed by Fred Wright. Prominent in the support of the star are Milton Sills and Warner Oland.

In the 11th episode of "The House of Hate," titled "Haunts of Evil," Pearl White disguises herself as a woman of the underworld and camps on the trail of the Hooded Terror.

Part two of "Britain's Bulwarks" shows Messines and Wytschaete during the storming and capture by the North and South Irish regiments and the Canadians.

Jane Novak Is "Bill" Hart's Leading Woman In "Selfish Yates"

Arbuckle in a Burlesque on Melodrama

In "Fatty" Arbuckle's latest comedy, "Moonshine," set for Paramount release May 13, the mammoth comedian appears as a limb of the revenue law engaged in running down a gang of operators of illicit stills in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Kentucky. He and Buster Keaton, his fellow officer, are brave and resourceful but have a weakness for handsome women. In the production Arbuckle has followed the broadest of burlesque lines with exaggerated melodrama. It is said that from a laugh-making and photographic viewpoint this picture excels "Out West" or "The Bell Boy," generally conceded to be the best comedies ever produced by Arbuckle.

The picture was filmed in the San Gabriel Canyon of California, and picturesque backgrounds and light effects add to its attractiveness.

"The Interloper" Set for June 3

"The Interloper," starring Kitty Gordon, will be released by World Pictures June 3. This is the first World production to be directed by Oscar Apfel and also signalizes the advent of Sidney Cummings as leading man for Miss Gordon. In the supporting cast are Frank Mayo, George McQuarrie, Isabelle Berwin, June Blackman, Anthony Byrd and I. Quong.

"The Interloper" is the story of life on a Southern plantation at the present day. Miss Gordon in the role of Jane Cameron, portrays the emancipated modern girl of the South. She relegates the old prejudices to the rubbish heap and starts to develop her old homestead into a paying proposition.

Los Angeles People Crowd to See "M'liss"

Crowded houses are said to have been the rule at every performance at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, during the showing of "M'liss," Mary Pickford's new Artcraft picture.

Program Glances

In Mutual Screen Telegram released May 1, Secretary of War Baker, American war chief, confers with Gen. Foch, new commander of the Allied armies, on French soil during inspection of American overseas force.

A Tennessee mountain village went up in Rockland County, N. Y., for the staging of exteriors in "Cyclone Higgins, D. D.," a Metro All-Star Series picture, starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which will be released on May 13.

"Mile-a-Minute Kendall," Paramount story, which is released May 13, is said to show Jack Pickford at his best, while he is ably abetted in his labors to entertain by little Louise Huff.

Rex Beach's "The Auction Block," a Goldwyn production, was the opening attraction recently at the Regent in Bay City, Mich., and it packed the new theatre for three days following. The new Regent has contracted for Goldwyn's annual output.

"O'Garry Rides Alone," the second of the new O'Garry stories produced by Ned Finley in connection with his Blue Ridge dramas, will be released next week by General Film Company. This is another story of the Northwest Mounted Police trooper.

The Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy release of May 6, recites the love adventures of a street car conductor, and is entitled "His Smothered Love." The Sennett coterie of girls is seen to good advantage on the beach, attired in natty new suits.

The decoration of American troops for bravery under fire is shown in the current release of the "Hearst-Pathe News," No. 35. The United States soldiers are shown, lined up in full equipment, behind the battle lines as a French army official pins upon the breast of each a medal of honor.

The fifth Blue Ridge drama scheduled for release is "The Man from Nowhere." Reports from Bat Cave, N. C., where the Finley company is at work, indicate that excellent progress is being made on other subjects.

The next five Christie releases are as follows: From May 6, "A Regular Patsy," "Love and a Gold Brick," "Their Breezy Affairs," "Their Honeymoon Baby," and "Petticoats," with Bobby Vernon and Eleanor Field.

Lewis A. Stone is the star of "Inside the Lines," which World Pictures will release on its regular program in June. Mr. Stone is not only an actor, but a soldier; not only is he a soldier, but a cowpuncher. Still further, he is a moving picture performer.

Bryant Washburn, the Pathe star, is featured in a comedy of American life in "Kidder & Ko," which is set for release June 16. The cast includes Gertrude Selby.

"The Riders of the Purple Sage" will be the first William Fox release of the complete series of Zane Grey Western stories, which have been secured especially for William Farnum's film exploitation in Standard Pictures.

The one hundredth and seventeenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue on May 6 is a continuation of the Hawaiian series and shows the Philippine National Guard, which is a separate organization from the Philippine Scouts. The Scouts belong to and fight as a division of the Regular Army.

The next production from the studios of the American Film Company, Incc., on the schedule of the Mutual Film Corporation, starring Margarita Fisher, is "A Square Deal," for release May 27. Production has been virtually completed.

The second of the Rancho dramas, "Where the Sun Sets Red," a story of the Western mountains, released this week is said to provide a constant succession of thrills and surprises. General Film releases it.

Exclusive motion pictures of the first U-boat prisoners to arrive in the United States are presented in Universal Animated Weekly, No. 22. The Germans composed the crew of the U-58, which was captured by the U. S. Destroyer Fanning.

May 6 is the Paramount release date on "The Biggest Show on Eearth." Earl Rodney supports Enid Bennett, and in the cast are a number of well-known film players, including Ethel Lynn, Bliss Chevalier, Carl Stockdale and Melbourne MacDowell.

Anita Stewart Is Ready to Begin a Series of Specials for Vitagraph

Alice Joyce Leads Off for Vitagraph

The Vitagraph program of releases scheduled for the week of May 13 is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, as follows:

Blue Ribbon Feature, five parts, "The Triumph of the Weak," featuring Alice Joyce. Directed by Tom Terriss.

Serial, two parts, "Full Speed Ahead," episode 6 of "The Woman in the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big V Comedy, one part, "Spies and Spills," featuring Lawrence Semon. Written and directed by Lawrence Semon.

Vitagraph Drew Comedy, one part, "Fox Trot Finesse," featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

"The Bride's Awakening" at the Broadway

"The Bride's Awakening," a Mae Murray production released as a Universal Special Attraction, is being shown at the Broadway Theatre, New York, for one week, beginning Sunday, May 5.

The photoplay tells the story of a young girl who contracts a marriage to learn too late that the bridegroom has been mixed up in many affairs, any one of which was serious enough to prevent the wedding had the bride known the facts.

Manager Nathan, of the Broadway Theatre, anticipates such business on "The Bride's Awakening" that he has arranged to open the theatre at noon and make a steady grind instead of running just three shows a day as heretofore.

Castle Subject May 19

Irene Castle has the captivating role of a girl with a will of her own in the new Pathe play, "The Mysterious Client," which is set for release May 19. The picture is important since it has the trio in "Patria," Irene Castle, Warner Oland and Milton Sills, and is a swift-moving mystery story with thrills and many twists, according to Pathe.

Frank Zambreno

Chicago Buyer Makes Varied Purchase

Frank Zambreno, president of the Unity Photoplays Company, Chicago, during his stay in the city purchased the Illinois and Southern Wisconsin rights to Ivan Film Productions, Inc., "Sins of Ambition," "Married in Name Only" and "Life or Honor." Mr. Zambreno is one of the most prominent buyers in this territory and he reports that the other Ivan products, "Her Surrender," "Two Men and a Woman" and "Babbling Tongues," have met with success in his territory. He also purchased the rights to Triumph Film's "The Guilty Wife," five of the series of Bessie Barriscale re-issues, the series of twenty-six Sennett-produced comedies, and the same number of Charlie Chaplin re-issues, handled by the W. H. Productions.

Lynch Enterprises Offers "Carmen of Klondike"

S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., has purchased the domestic rights to "Carmen of the Klondike," and offers it for sale to buyers in the following territories: New England, covering Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut; Central, including Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Eastern Pennsylvania and District of Columbia; the State of Michigan and States of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

"Carmen of the Klondike" is a seven-reel picture starring Clara Williams. It was written by Monte M. Katterjohn and directed by Reginald Barker.

Seven Reel Semi-Educational

E. W. Hammons, Educational Film, to Produce Seven Reeler, Showing Operations in Coal Region —"Romance of Coal"

E. W. HAMMONS, Vice-President Educational Film Corporation, announces that he has engaged the services of Director Frederick A. Thomson to produce a seven-reel feature picture with a working title, "The Romance of Coal." This is the first attempt of Educational to produce feature pictures. Mr. Hammons said that he was prompted to produce this feature after he and Director Thomson had traveled over the Allegheny region looking for locations. The importance of the West Virginia coal fields with an annual capacity of one hundred million tons, appealed to Messrs. Hammons and Thomson as the basis for, not only a picturesque, but a highly dramatic screen subject.

In seeking the locations they were brought in touch with the coal operators of the district and later with the governor and members of the State Council of Defense of West Virginia. Mr. Hammons was asked to go to Charleston, W. Va., and meet the various interests concerned.

Mr. Hammons has engaged William Addison Lathrop to prepare a scenario dealing with the romance of coal, the scenes to be laid in the localities where the project had received such hearty encouragement. Mr. Lathrop submitted late in April a synopsis of the story which has been accepted. Mr. Lathrop will collaborate with Miss Caroline Gentry, a native of the coal regions.

Mr. Lathrop's primal idea is to use the West Virginia industry as the background of a human interest story. Director Thomson will picturize the story as entertainment, yet with the scenes and facts faithfully registered. Director Thomson, who is now selecting the cast, will go with his company to Charleston, W. Va., late this month, and with this as his headquarters will select the locations.

Prominent state officials of West Virginia who have endorsed the project, including Governor John J. Cornwell, are: U. S. Senator Howard Sutherland, F. S. Peabody, Chairman of the Federal Committee on Coal Production, Attorney General England, State Treasurer Johnson and Commissioner of Agriculture Stewart. The presidents of the various mining associations also endorsed the plan.

Two Smallest Theatres Book "Eagle's Eye"

WHAT are said to be the two smallest motion picture theatres in the United States have booked this serial. The two theatres have a combined seating capacity of but 475 and the combined population of the two towns in which they are situated is but 700. E. Whittaker, the manager and proprietor of both, says that he is satisfied he will make money with the serial because of the interest which has been evinced in it.

The theatres are the Opera House at Andes, N. Y., and the Opera House at Shaifferstown, N. Y. The first has a seating capacity of 175. The population of Andes is 450. Shaifferstown has but 250 population while the Opera House there can seat 300. Mr. Whittaker believes that the serial will increase his patronage by attracting the inhabitants of the rural districts around each of the towns. "The Eagle's Eye" will be run for twenty consecutive weeks at each of the theatres.

Plots against America, for which Franz Bopp, the former German Consul General at San Francisco, Ram Chandra and twenty-seven others were recently convicted in the Federal Court, are shown in detail in two of the episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," the twenty-episode serial story of German spies in America, by William J. Flynn. Bopp appears first in the thirteenth episode of the serial, and the entire eighteenth episode is given over to the plotting in America to cause a rebellion in East India for which the convictions were just returned.

Under the title of "The Reign of Terror," the thirteenth episode shows activities of the former Imperial German Consul at San Francisco.

The eighteenth episode of the serial, to be released under the title of "The Great Hindu Conspiracy," gives in detail the plot for which Bopp and Ram Chandra were convicted after a three months' trial in San Francisco.

Moody Has Pictures Taken After Earthquake

C. C. Moody, sales agent for The Pryer Pictures, Candler Building, New York, announces that he will have for release on or about May 1st, a series of scenics taken in Guatemala since the earthquake. Mr. Moody claims to be the only picture man to have a cameraman on the scene since the earthquake of last December. The series, which consist of scenes taken in and around Guatemala and of the volcano that caused the damage, will be released in single reels, weekly, beginning May 1st

Harold J. (Josh) Binney, Head of the Florida Film Company, Is Promising the World Some Mighty Funny Pictures, With Unusual Situations and Everything to Bring the Chuckles. Here Are Some of His Proofs of the Merit of His Films

Binney Pleased With Initial Returns

JOSH BINNEY and his associates of the Florida Film Corporation, who announced, recently, a series of Josh Binney Comedies for the independent market, report that Ernest Shipman, sales representative, has placed his signature to three contracts for the series and that inquiries are received daily, asking for details concerning the method of distribution and the available territory.

It is Mr. Binney's intention to produce a series of two-reel comedies a bit different from the slapstick variety. The straight and slapstick comedy will be combined and in the combination, Mr. Binney says that he has a variety affording a laugh for the most varied audience.

Mr. Binney has had a wide experience in the comedy field, having worked before the camera as a comedian and behind the camera as a director. The Josh Binney Comedies are produced at the Klutho Studios, Jacksonville, Florida. The first of the series are ready for release. Funny Fatty Filbert is the featured comedian. One two-reeler will be released each month. The entire series of twelve for the year, is available to the state rights buyers.

"Tarzan" Reported Doing Record Business

"TARZAN OF THE APES," National Film Corporation of America's independent production, released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is receiving a rousing reception, according to reports coming from exhibitors throughout the country who have run this feature. J. D. Williams, of the First National Circuit, reports that he has received a letter from Manager Leiber, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, which ran "Tarzan" for a week, in which Mr. Leiber says that "Tarzan" broke the record established the first day the theatre opened.

"Tarzan" broke all records at the Victoria Theatre, Philadelphia, during its two weeks' run. At the Isis Theatre, Denver, it played to the greatest business in the history of that house. At Swanson's American Theatre, Salt Lake City, and the Globe Theatre, New Orleans, it played to crowded houses. S. Z. Poli, in a statement sent the National Film Corporation, said it broke the daily and weekly record at his Worcester, Mass., house, and exceeded previous business at his Bridgeport, New Haven, Waterbury and Meriden theatres. Mr. Fabian, Paterson, N. J., wrote that "Tarzan" did a smashing business during its run at his house.

Other theatres reporting big successes with this feature are: Webb's Theatre, Newark; Turner and Dahnken's Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco; Strand Theatre, Minneapolis; Globe, Boston; Washington, Detroit; Colonial, Chicago; Kinema, Los Angeles; Nixon, Pittsburgh; Metropolitan, St. Paul; Rex, Winnipeg; Strand, Seattle, and the first-run houses in Canada.

Mr. Williams reports that more than five thousand days have been booked on this production.

Sally Crute in Graphic's "When Men Betray"

Sally Crute, who will be remembered for her work as the spy in Sidney Olcott's "The Belgian," and who has been seen in leading roles in many Metro productions, has the vampire role in Graphic Film Corporation's feature, "When Men Betray," now under production under the direction of Ivan Abramson. Miss Crute claims the distinction of being the only blonde vampire working before the camera.

Mode'Art to Start Producing May 15th

F. J. Kroulik, director general, Mode-'Art Comedies, announces that the company's studio and laboratory in Chicago will be prepared to commence on the making of the first of this new brand of comedies, not later than May 15th. The first two Mode'Art comedies will be ready for release about the first of June. Alice Mann is the featured comedienne, supported by a welll-known comedian.

"Moral Suicide" Proves Box-Office Attraction

"Moral Suicide," the Graphic Film Corporation's feature production, under the direction of Ivan Abramson, recently acquired for distribution by Pathe, is interpreted by a cast of popular screen artists including Leah Baird, Anne Luther, Hazel Washburn, Sidney Mason, Alan Hale, Jack McLean, Claire Whitney and William Lampe. John Mason, the popular stage star, has the leading role.

The feature has run to crowded houses in Greater New York and in Newark, New Jersey, it played for a two-week's run at the Goodwin theatre.

Western Buyer Successful with West Comedies

W. Wintroub, general manager, Fontenelle Feature Film Company, Omaha, Neb., writes that the Billy West-King-Bee Comedies are meeting with big success in his territory.

J. Stern, representing Fontenelle in the Iowa territory, reports that he has placed the Billy West comedies in every city he covered. On his way into Omaha, Mr. Stern stopped off in Des Moines and closed a contract with Abe Frankel for West comedies to be shown in his new Rialto theatre, there. The Rialto is said to be the largest and finest house in Iowa. Some of the leading houses running the Billy West comedies are: The Empress, Omaha; Colonial, Lincoln, Neb.; Rialto, Des Moines, Ia.; Palace, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Virginia, Boone, Ia.; Majestic, Council Bluffs, Ia. Le Deaux, manager of the Empress in Omaha, states that he knows of no other comedy that will go over as good and draw for him as much as Billy West.

The Fontenelle has also acquired the rights to the Gaumont Weeklies for Nebraska.

Good Sales Reported on McClure Features

A. Blaikie Dick, general sales manager, McClure Pictures, announces that this company has sold to Turner & Dahnken of San Francisco, the territorial rights to the McClure film "Mother" for Northern California and Nevada.

Mr. Dick also announces that McClure Pictures has closed a deal through the Piedmont Picture Corporation, whereby "Seven Deadly Sins" will be shown throughout the Dutch West Indies. Arrangements are also being made through the Piedmont Picture Corporation for a sale of the Cuban rights to "Seven Deadly Sins."

"The Warrior," starring Maciste, and "Mother," starring Elizabeth Risdon, have been successfully distributed by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc. With the exception of the above mentioned territories Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have placed these two state right productions in every section of the United States.

McLean and Holmes Seen in Graphic's Latest

Jack McLean, who is seen in the juvenile lead in Graphic Film Corporation's production, "Moral Suicide," has the leading juvenile role in "When Men Betray," now under production under the direction of Ivan Abramson, director general of Graphic. Gail Kane has the featured role and Stuart Holmes is cast as the villain.

"Who's Who" in Gaumont News

Late Gaumont News and Graphic Show Timely War Subjects—Medal Awarded by Uncle Sam, Shown

THE medals of honor which the United States, for the first time in history, have awarded "for superior acts of valor in the field of action," have their first showing to the American people in No. 6 of the independent news-reel, the Gaumont News. The new medals given by the United States, which were made from designs prepared by the most famous artists, comprise the Honor Medal of the United States Navy, the Medal of Honor awarded by Congress, and the Distinguished Service Cross.

To aid in the Third Liberty Loan campaign, General Pershing has sent from France sixty of his picked soldiers who have been fighting in the first-line trenches. All of these men, who are here to impress upon us just what our army is doing over the seas, and what we must do to back that army, won the French Croix de Guerre for exceptional bravery in action. Photographs of them are shown in this issue of the Gaumont News, including an intimate close-up of the "red-headed Corporal," O. W. de Varilla.

The other subjects illustrated in this number cover the current happenings in the United States and abroad. In the National Capital, President Wilson, his hand in a sling because of the accidental burn received during his ride in a British war tank, reviews the monster patriotic parade, celebrating "Liberty Day." In Baltimore, Captain Resnati, famous Italian aviator, bombards thousands of spectators with Liberty Loan pamphlets hurled from his giant Caproni biplane.

In New York City, 20,000 mothers, wives and sweethearts of soldiers are applauded in a spectacular parade for the Third Liberty Loan. In Lexington, a new record is set by "Bradley's Choice," in the first Blue Grass track meet of the season. Out in California, the bathing season opens with record crowds, and subjects showing the recent agricultural exposition in Buenos Aires. There are also scenes which show the destruction wrought by the recent earthquake which destroyed considerable property in Southern California.

The first pictures of Secretary of War Baker and Major General Leonard S. Wood on the battle front in France appear in Gaumont Graphic, No. 5. There are also shown among the war subjects in this issue of the popular independent news-reel, pictures of French General Foch, now in supreme command of the Allied forces, and French Premier Clemenceau, who recently visited the front in connection with the decorating of American soldiers with the French medal of honor.

Not only are they doing wonderful work in connection with the Third Liberty Loan campaign, but there is no let-up in the other wartime activities of the American women. In this number of the Gaumont Graphic is also shown the opening of the third encampment of a war service school in Washington, where many women are taking a six weeks' course in preparedness. Another subject demonstrates that the gasoline tractor has solved the farm problem.

Many other topics go to make this number of the Graphic one of compelling interest. In Washington, the President and the Cabinet attend the military funeral ceremonies held for Don Santiago Aldunate, late Ambassador from Chile. There are the usual scenes of war activities all over the United States.

Catherine Calvert and David Powell In "Marriage," the Second Keeney Production

"Marriage," Keeney's Production, by Bolton

Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation's second independent production, "Marriage," featuring Catherine Calvert, reveals a social evil continually cropping out as scandal in social circles. It tells of two women who form a partnership to obtain money by cheating at cards.

"Marriage" was written by Guy Bolton, playwright, who is one of the most successful writers for the American stage. James Kirkwood is directing. The picture will be ready for release some time in May.

Blanche Sweet's Production Nearly Completed

Harry I. Garson, personal manager of Clara Kimball Young, reports work is progressing rapidly on Blanche Sweet's production, "The Hushed Hour," which is being filmed at D. W. Griffith's Fine Arts studio in Hollywood. It will be completed within the next few days, it is announced.

Mr. Garson's next production will be the filming a screen version of Marah Ellis Ryan's novel "Told in the Hills," in which House Peters and Blanche Sweet will be co-starred. It is unofficially announced that both these pictures will be exploited on the independent market.

"Eagle's Eye" Executive Offices Moved

Offices of "The Eagle's Eye," were moved last week from the third floor of the Longacre Building to Suite 811 on the eighth floor of the Brokaw Building, 1457 Broadway. The move does not take "The Eagle's Eye" offices off the corner of Forty-second Street and Broadway. They are now on the southwest corner instead of the northeast.

Foursquare's Canadian Business on Jump

Activity on Foursquare Pictures product throughout Canada is progressing most satisfactorily under the direction of Superfeatures, Ltd., which is affiliated with Foursquare in its Canadian distribution, reports Foursquare.

Demands for bookings on two features—"The Bar Sinister" and "The Fringe of Society"—have been particularly gratifying the report reads. Canadian exhibitors pronounce both these photoplays to be of the sort which the public wants.

Business on the Wharton serial supreme, "The Eagle's Eye" has started with a rush. In eastern and middle West Canada the elaborate trade showings have aroused the patriotism of exhibitors to a high pitch, with the result that many theatres which do not make it their custom to show serials have broken their rule.

Charles L. Stevens, general manager of Superfeatures, Ltd., reports that Foursquare pictures and distribution methods are those which appeal to motion picture men. "Good pictures at prices which allow the exhibitor to make a profit, and which constitute the chief elements of appeal in Foursquare merchandise and methods, have already had their effect in our country," he said.

Pioneer Film Exploiting "Still Alarm"

Nathan Hirsh, Pioneer Film Corporation, is offering to independent buyers a screen version of Joseph Arthur's melodrama, "The Still Alarm." He reports the sale of the Northwest territory. (See Independent Field Ticker.)

Mr. Hirsh states that the Pioneer Film will distribute this feature in the New York and the New Jersey territory. All other territory, excepting the Northwest, is open.

Evans Designed Lobby Display for "Mickey"

NELSON EVANS, president of the Evans Studio of Los Angeles, Cal., said to be the largest photographic studio in the world, former exchange man and an authority on photographic values, has been requisitioned for governmental service for the duration of the war.

His last bit of work before leaving the film activities was the construction of a lobby display for "Mickey." In regard to "Mickey," and his work in connection with this comedy-drama, soon to be released by the Western Import Company, Mr. Evans says:

"Human nature is alike the whole world over. Humans live their lives in a chronological order. The events of life, both minor and major, dove-tail themselves to it in sequence consisting of both time and detail. The expectancy of this sequence has been a part of nature itself, and all things incident or depending upon it work in the same consistency. It is looked for everywhere, in everything, and further, is expected, and he who deals with the public must know that in order to get the best results he must cater to this great silent demand.

"In making my selection of panels for 'Mickey,' which I think is the greatest comedy drama that has ever been produced, I first studied the story and determined to cater to this demand for continuity, to perfect my lobby display, so that the story would be presented to the public pictorially and in chronological order, and further to combine with this phase the wonderful story which 'Mickey' possesses.

"My first purpose was to place before the public a series of panels which would pictorially represent the continuity of the story, and my selection of the panels gave me that element. They accentuate the story values and render the public in an expectant mood for what is to be shown.

"In the same category, a campaign book on 'Mickey' has been constructed. It contains descriptive matter, in word and picture, pertaining to every phase of this great photoplay. 'Mickey' will prove the greatest comedy-drama ever presented for the public's entertainment on the screen."

"Lost Chord" Hadley's Cinema-Symphony

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S song "The Lost Chord" is the subject of Hopp Hadley's first Cinema-Symphony. The feature is in five reels and Mr. Hadley claims that, even without the symphony, it is a powerful drama with a beautiful heart-interest story destined to be as popular as a regulation photodrama with an ordinary "cue-sheet" accompaniment.

"The only difference that I can see when the picture is run without the symphony," said Mr. Hadley, "is that the titles are in verse and are written in the same metre as the song. Of course the poem alone would not tell a complete story as there are only eighty titles in the whole picture.

But I intend, later, to make the poem complete in itself, writing in verse the parts of the story now told in pictures, to take the place of a "synopsis." There are, also, no letters or cards in the picture, verse taking their places in each instance. The eyes and ears of the audience are both made use of by the producer as direct roads to the mind and heart.

"The Lost Chord" was especially well adapted to the idea, as I realized that symphony in its true musical sense is not exactly cornbeef and cabbage to the tired business man, while its application in the story written around Arthur Sullivan's popular song is so simple that a child readily grasps the idea and is almost as much affected by the music as by the story. It is only a question of time, when music will receive full recognition as the real business partner of pictures."

News Notes from Canada

Ticket Tax Goes Into Effect on June 1

THE most important bit of news that has come out of the maritime provinces of Canada for some time is that from St. John about the tax which has been imposed upon the picture theatres of New Brunswick. The bill is called "the theatres and cinematographs act" and was passed in the provincial legislature on April 24.

The provisions are as follows: On all tickets ranging in price from 5 cents to 25 cents inclusive, a tax of one cent will be imposed; from 25 to 50 cents, two cents tax; from 51 cents to 75 cents, five cents tax; from 76 cents to one dollar, 10 cents tax; from $1.01 to $1.50, 15 cents tax; from $1.51 to $2.00, 20 cents tax. When admission prices are more than $2.00 the tax will be administered upon a flat ten per cent basis.

It is proposed to have the theatres buy these tax tickets of various denominations from the provincial government, and for the labor of selling them, and seeing that the law is carried out, the government will allow each theatre a small commission or rebate.

Every person attending a public house of entertainment after June 1 will come under this tax, pass holders not excepted. Children are exempted on Saturday afternoons, but pay the tax on all other days. All entertainments for wholly patriotic purposes will be exempt from the new tax.

Longer Subjects Become Canadian Necessity

Two houses in Hamilton, Ont., the Red Mill, owned by "Davy" Stewart, and the Princess, managed by George Swanwick, which have for a number of years played short program subjects, are launching into five-reel features. This change has been found necessary owing to the shortage of suitable two-reelers on the market at present.

Mr. Swanwick has returned from New York, where he made arrangements to show Vitagraph features. Mr. Stewart, of the Red Mill, was in Toronto last week also making arrangements for the change-over in his program. He has booked a number of Bluebirds from Canadian Universal. Mr. Stewart will start immediately on his new policy, while the Princess Theatre will not inaugurate the change until July 1.

General Takes Over Kleine Distribution

The General Film Co. (Canada, Limited, has arranged to take over the distribution of the George Kleine System, K. E. S. E., handling this company's pictures from the General Film offices in both Toronto and Montreal.

The new combination will be directed and managed by T. S. Cooper, who will act in the capacity of general manager for both concerns.

Following the policy which has proven successful in the United States for the General Film Company, the combination of these two companies and offices will lead to a much better and lessened operating expense, as well as a more concentrated service to Canadian exhibitors.

Exhibitors Lose First Round of Sunday Fight

The first round in the fight between the Lord's Day Alliance people and the exhibitors of Quebec province regarding Sunday closing has been won by the church people. A dispatch received from Sherbrooke, Quebec, in Toronto, last Saturday night, April 27, stated that by a judgment of the court given that day the picture houses in Sherbrooke will have to close on Sundays. Two exhibitors pleaded guilty, and were fined $20 each to a charge, which was laid by the Lord's Day Alliance.

B. L. Vallee, of the Princess Theatre, in Sherbrooke, has obtained the signatures of 3,500 citizens, protesting against Sunday closing. This was not, however, forwarded to Quebec City in time to forestall the action of the Lord's Day Alliance people.

New Regent in Hamilton Opens Doors

The Regent theatre, the latest addition to the picture houses of Hamilton, Ont., was opened to the public for the first time on April 22. The house, which seats about 700, is in spick and span condition. It was erected and is owned by McKay Bros.

The new house is situated in the southwest part of the city in a purely residential district. The opening went off with a bang, and the business has struck a wonderful gait, with every prospect of keeping it up.

Osborn to Get Another

Exhibitor Osborn, who operates the Star theatre in Kitchener, Ont., will take over the Regent theatre, Guelph, Ont., commencing June 1.

Seen and Heard in Canada

Contracts have been let for the re-decorating of the Beaver theatre in Toronto and the Regent theatre in Ottawa.

The head offices of the Famous Players Film Co., which are controlled by the Allen interests, have been moved from 12 Queen Street east, Toronto, to the New Allen theatre building.

Plans are out for a modern moving picture theatre for the city of Amherstburg, Ontario. It will be built by Clyde Curry, owner of the Favorite theatre, Windsor, Ont.

The Daylight Savings bill, which is molded upon similar lines as that now in force in the United States, has gone into effect.

The General Film Company (Canada), Limited, is enjoying some splendid business since T. S. Cooper took over the general managership of the Canadian business.

The Regent theatre, Toronto, has declined to combat the daylight evil that threatens the box-office by changing the time of their performance to commence at the old (sun time) time.

Al. J. Miville, formerly with Triangle in Milwaukee, Wis., and also of the Famous Players office in Chicago, is now at the Allen theatre, Toronto, in the capacity of assistant manager.

The under-sea spectacle, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," played at the Rialto theatre, Toronto, a full week to wonderful business.

The Canadian exhibitors have been doing some very important work for the Canadian Food Controller, and their efforts have been much appreciated by government officials at Ottawa.

Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" opened at the Imperial, the Francais, Loew's and the Midway in Montreal on April 28 to big business.

Mr. Horsfall, general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation in Montreal, was in Toronto visiting the local office. He reports Mutual business in Canada very good.

Jack Stewart of the Unique theatre, Hamilton, has purchased the Crystal theatre in Burlington, Ont., and will run it in connection with his Hamilton house.

I. Soskin, general manager of the Famous Players Film Co., was in St. John last week on his way back to Toronto after a tour of the Maritime provinces. It is likely that the St. John office of the Famous Players will be moved to Halifax.

Walter H. Golding, the prominent Eastern Canada exhibitor, who suffered a nervous breakdown some weeks ago, is much improved in health, and his friends are welcoming him back to his duties at the Imperial theatre in St. John, New Brunswick.

After an illness lasting some months, David M. Richards died in Fredericton on April 23. He was for many years manager of the Gem theatre in Fredericton.

Mr. Bizar, manager of the Metro office in St. John, N. B., made his farewell trip to Halifax last week, and is arranging his affairs to return to the States May 15.

Smythe Opens Screen Club

Johnny Smythe, of Regal Films office in Montreal, is opening a Screen Club shortly at 319 University Street, in that city, for the benefit of picture men, whether managers, owners, exchangemen or salesmen. It will also be a house of call for out-of-town exhibitors. It is understood that Mr. English will be the president.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

Admirers of Raymond Hatton will be glad to hear that he will soon be seen in "The Firefly of France," that thrilling story which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Leo Tolstoi's "The Resurrection" has been turned into a picture to be called "Katusha," in which Pauline Frederick will have the leading role.

Peggy Adams, the charming heroine of "The Spirit of the Red Cross," is now rehearsing for a new Elliott, Comstock and Gest play, "Loyalty." She has felt the lure of the pictures, however, and is contemplating offers from various film concerns.

Ben Turpin dreads a blow on the head more than most people. His crossed eyes, which he considers his biggest asset, were the result of such a crack in vaudeville. The attending doctor remarked that another one might jar them back into shape again. Wherefore the dread.

Dell Boone, the lovely blonde business manager and wife of Niles Welch, is extremely enthusiastic over a new Hudson limousine which she is about to purchase for the "firm."

William Russell starts off his first picture, "Hearts and Diamonds," for the Wm. Russell Productions, Inc., by having Charlotte Burton, who is his leading lady in real life, his leading lady on the screen.

A land variation of throwing pennies for urchins to dive after was inaugurated by Olive Thomas, out on location not long ago. She started the curious youngsters, who gathered around on roller-skates racing from the corner to where she stood. Pennies were thrown to the lucky winners.

Muriel Ostriche is undergoing tortures in the interest of science or, perhaps, we should say art. To portray realistically a Chinese girl in a new World picture she is using powerful astringents to draw her skin into the necessary lines.

A big tank has been built in the World Studio for scenes in "The Golden Wall," in which Carlyle Blackwell engages in an underwater fight. It is rather hard on Mr. Blackwell, as he has just recovered from an attack of pneumonia.

Again we are going to see William Desmond as the village blacksmith. His first appearance as this mighty man was in "The Sudden Gentleman," a Triangle Irish hit. His next appearance with the smithy's apron will be in "The Tree of Life."

Mother Mary Maurice is recuperating slowly at Port Carbon, Pa., from her serious illness. It is hoped that she will be able to appear on the screen again in a month or so.

Mabel Normand's Most Stunning Bathing Suit Is a Feature of a New Goldwyn Picture She Is Making

The combination of costumes designed by Lucile and story by Elinor Glyn should make the new Clara Kimball Young picture, "The Reason Why," something to be anticipated. Another fact realized by few is that this is really a collaboration between sisters, as Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon, is in real life the sister of Elinor Glyn.

Mollie Malone inadvertently named the third Billy Parsons picture. As she entered the studio one day she saw before her Smiling Bill ensconced in a large chair with a parrot on one shoulder and a tiny bulldog on the other—smilingly she remarked, "Birds of a Feather"—and the new picture was titled.

The manner of R. A. Walsh in directing several hundred extras in the Congress scene for the new Fox picture, "Enemies at Home," was truly masterful. He didn't for a moment sacrifice the big effect by too much attention to detail—but still seemed to have every man directly under his influence. He occupied the centre back of the enormous set and on a raised platform used his megaphone. His several assistants stationed in various places around the studio helped put his orders into effect.

The fact that the Dolly sisters wear forty-eight complete changes of costume in "The Million Dollar Dollies," their first Metro release, should make a special appeal to dressmakers, department store buyers, and all women who are interested in the latest thing in the fashion world.

Rosemary Theby, Billy West's leading lady, expects to break into the newspapers soon, with a series of articles entitled "Keep Away from the Movies."

Pauline Curley, now permanent leading lady for Harold Lockwood, is writing the most enthusiastic letters to New York friends about her garden on the West Coast. She says it is a big, beautiful adventure, as she has always lived in a city before.

Mabel Frenyear, well known on the legitimate stage, is returning to pictures in the new Bushman-Bayne production. She will be remembered as the young wife in Theda Bara's "A Fool There Was." As she was in the original cast of the stage play "The Mind the Paint Girl" and has one of the few souvenir programs left, Vitagraph has borrowed it for reference in filming this play for Anita Stewart.

Kaj Gynt, whose dark beauty belies her Swedish origin, plays the queen of the slaves in the slave market scene in "The House of Mirth." Miss Gynt has appeared on the continent in Ibsen and Strindberg plays.

Joseph Kilgour had to spend an hour or so trying on dozens of resplendent dressing gowns in order to find just the one to harmonize with the very beautiful breakfast room shown in one of the first scenes in the new Emmy Wehlen picture. Judging from Miss Wehlen's own negligee in the scene, the report that she is going to wear the most beautiful costumes she has ever worn on the screen is correct.

Harry Franklyn, Metro director, took the whole cast for the next May Allison picture, "The Winning of Beatrice," out to his country home on Long Island in order to take exteriors, and as a fitting climax for the finishing of the picture treated them all to a chicken and waffle luncheon.

Maurene Powers, a little girl with golden curls and the biggest eyes from which tears flow with really remarkable fluency and grace, came all the way from Terre Haute, Indiana, to enter filmdom. She has entered almost upon her arrival via Abramson's "When Man Betrays," a Metro's new war picture.

Lawrence Grant, who has impersonated the Kaiser for the last year or so on the legitimate stage, is being featured as "The Monster of Europe." In addition to writing plays and acting on the stage and screen, Mr. Grant is a photographer of some note. He spent several months recently in France, where he had permits to take a great many pictures with his motion picture camera.

Maude Hill has the effective part of the Mother Superior in this picture. Her calm face, her large eyes, her stately figure and manner make the part most impressive. It will be good to see her after her long illness.

Short Subjects in Review

by Clara DeLissa Berg

IN AND AROUND THE PACIFIC

"Tidbits of Travel" is aptly named. It conveys just that fleeting feeling of pleasure to be derived from the rotogravure section of a good Sunday paper and fits admirably into a program needing a light and entertaining short reel.

Japan offers a dainty little lady in a lovely garden, playing with goldfish so tame they jump from the water to eat from her hand. "The Street of Fragrant Breezes," where the travellers carried smelling salts in one hand and a perfumed handkerchief in the other, offers characteristic and interesting sidelights on life in modern China.

The scenes in Hawaii are particularly good. The annual fishing festival at Lau calls forth all the natives, as each shares in the catch. They are a fine, sturdy lot, and both men and women put their shoulder to the line when it is time to haul the great net ashore. A three-hundred pound turtle is one of the trophies and is made to carry one of his captors on his back.

Snapshots of natives cross-bred from the many races who seem to have drifted to these Pacific islands offer curious studies in types.

The reel is briskly titled and is entertaining throughout.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS

Every reel of film taken on the front seems to bring the war more intimately home to us. There is something in the cheery bearing of the battle-weary Britishers in this latest Pathe war picture that arouses both sympathy and confidence. The capture of Messines which forms the subject of the reel is one of the many brave victories of the British forces. Before the battle we have pictures of the sports and athletics indulged in by the men to keep them in condition. Then come shots of the signal corps at work in tiny, dangerous dugouts, of German shells bursting over a devastated land, of stretcher-bearers hastening over an exposed road, and wounded resting on their way back to the field hospital. Then come the troops, English and Irish, returning weary and dirty but victorious, a long drink of Dublin stout, a scrub in the pool, a German helmet, perhaps, and the sense of a hard duty well-done the reward of the day's work.

A "LADY" IN A FUR COAT

"Mamma" Katzenjammer was expecting a visit from a dear friend of her girlhood. Unfortunately, "Mamma" mentioned the fact that Katrinka was well provided with this world's goods. This was enough to arouse lively anticipations in the good "Captain" and his worthy friend the "Professor" and more than enough to start "der twins" on their evil career of plotting against their elders. A tame bear, a little camouflage of bonnet and wrap, and a certain near-sightedness on the part of the over-eager "Captain" proved the latter's undoing and enabled the "Professor" to act the part of gallant knight to the desirable Katrinka.

"LIBERTY BONDS" ADMINISTERS KNOCKOUT TO "IMPERIAL PARROT"

If C. T. Anderson, of Bray Studios, is to be believed, the Kaiser's Pet Parrot has a pretty little fight on his hands—claws, rather. While he is dutifully reproducing His Master's voice and confident predictions of victory, a bird of a different species is winging his way across the sea. This one is of the breed War Eagle and is christened Liberty Bonds. After he has paid his respects to the Imperial Parrot, there isn't even a feather to be seen.

So much for the humorous part of the current Bray Pictograph. Of serious interest are pictures showing the pains Uncle Sam is at to insure his sailor boys. A close-up of ten fountain pens automatically and simultaneously signing allotment cards is an interesting feature.

Professor Spaeth of Yale University continues to reveal the curious life forms that carry on their microscopic activities in a drop of water. Orange Growing in California affords many pleasing pictures.

AS ADAM DELVED AND EVE SPAN

Down in the sun-baked regions of Arizona and New Mexico are tribes of Indians, fast lessening in numbers, whose methods of living and working and even of dressing much resemble those of ancient Egypt.

E. M. Newman, whose Travels are now being regularly released by the Educational Films Corporation, has made a number of interesting studies of these people showing the various types of Indian, their diversions and occupations. Children are always pleasing on the film, and these little brown tots are particularly attractive, especially one midget who, in full regalia, solemnly dances the "Corn Dance" to the beat of a mighty tom-tom.

Introducing the second part of the reel, which is given over to the industries pursued by the Navajo Indians, is a beautiful picture of flocks of sheep herded under the mighty cliffs that characterize New Mexico. The carding and spinning of wool and weaving of the famous Navajo blankets, and the making of earthenware and fine baskets are shown in detail and are most interesting.

MOBILIZING THE FRANKFURTERS

This isn't a picture of a sausage factory. It's one of the funniest cartoons ever put on the screen, and remarkably good propaganda at that.

Uncle Sam in the guise of the Pied Piper summons the Great Army of the Food Supply. As his magic notes enter the home and shop, the coals leap from their beds, lumps of sugar hop out of the bowls, the wheat bundles itself off the field and the hams hasten from the butcher's. Even the sausages, forgetting their Teutonic origin, curl up on themselves and trundle merrily to join the throng.

The picture was made for the United States Food Administration and given by it for distribution to the Universal Weekly. It appears in Current Events released April 27.

UNIVERSAL ASKED TO COACH SIGNAL CORPS CAMERAMEN

Anyone visiting the Universal Weekly office a few days ago would have seen three husky young men in khaki modestly awaiting marching orders from Mr. Jack Cohn. They had just come down from the U. S. School of Military Cinematography at Columbia University, having been detailed to accompany the Universal Weekly photographers and learn what they could during the actual process of taking pictures.

This is one of several ways that the Universal Weekly is co-operating with the government in patriotic service.

CO-OPERATION OF PARENTS WITH EXHIBITOR BRINGS PROFIT

From the Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films comes the following pertinent and suggestive item:

The theatre of a certain small town in California could not afford to give weekly matinees especially for children. However, the manager gave an opportunity to the local Better Films Committee to look over the list of plays he had signed for, and those which they selected he ran on Thursday and Friday, giving a special performance for the children on Friday afternoons after school hours. A picture booked for only one day would mean a financial loss to the manager. Booked for two days, it has brought him a profit even with an admission of five cents.

The motto of the Affiliated Committee is "Co-operate with your Exhibitor."

NEWS WEEKLY AS PROPAGANDA

"But the real thing in propaganda is the News Weekly." Thus, or in similar words, did a well-known dramatic critic deliver a final opinion on a certain notable patriotic feature.

"No better than a News Weekly." Such the opinion of one of our editorial staff, in commenting on still another excellent and popular patriotic picture.

"They cheer the News Weekly," said a certain fine old priest of this city, who makes hundreds of children happy every Saturday morning with five-cent shows in his church.

"I don't like the fiction pictures, but I always enjoy the News Weeklies." We have heard this so often from the mouths of those superior persons who "don't care much for the movies" (but seem to go to them pretty often, none the less!) that we always mentally finish the sentence as soon as we hear the "but."

In this supreme crisis of history, the bare facts are so dramatic that nothing can surpass them in power to drive home the lesson of duty and service. Week after week the News reels bring to a focus the outstanding features of the war—our mobilization for field and shop, the enthusiasm and devotion at home, the devotion and sacrifice abroad.

Not to give your audiences an opportunity to share in this unequalled panorama of the world's mighty effort is to cheat them, your country, and yourself.

TURNING THE CRANK ON TEDDY

For its third "Animated Interview" the Universal Screen Magazine has secured a star performer—Colonel Roosevelt, no less. His theme is one of utmost importance—universal service. With his four sons and son-in-law in active service, Mr. Roosevelt can well speak from a full heart. The snapshots of him are unusually telling and characteristic.

If anything could increase one's appetite for strawberries it would be the picture taken in Warren County, Kentucky, where the berries are raised in large quantities. Perhaps the very fellows, big and rosy, that you floated with cream for breakfast came over the road from Dixieland in cars so well packed with ice that the exquisite flavor of the berry is perfectly preserved.

Quite a different industry is that dealing with the making of rubber boots, peerless product of American ingenuity.

Views of Sulgrave Manor, the English home of the Washington family, and some delightful pictures of the fashionable chow dog complete a very interesting reel.

"RUBE" GOLDBERG ON THE SCREEN

At last the long-promised "Mike and Ike" cartoons, by the famous "Rube" Goldberg, are ready for distribution, "The Artist's Model" leading the series.

The film runs nearly a reel in length, with a well-developed story in which the "twins" undertake the impossible and come a corresponding cropper. The "elaborate settings" provided for the background of their activities have all the appearance of "lavish expense," there is plenty of action, and more than one good laugh.

"Brave and Bold"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"BRAVE AND BOLD," adapted from a story by Perley Poore Sheehan, entitled "Four-Forty at Fort Penn," is stunt comedy at its best, and with the pleasing George Walsh in the stellar role makes an excellent feature. The writer is of the opinion that Director Carl Harbaugh may claim credit for much of the success of it. Of course, Walsh is a real athlete, and without the dash and spontaneity with which he accomplishes his feats of daring there would be a sad tale to tell. But what Harbaugh has done is something which has proven unattainable to many a director who attempts the stunt picture. It is the spirit of the picture which is so fetching. It is always one of optimism. And the action, all of it, is keyed to a lightning rapidity corresponding with the speed in which the thrills are executed. When a stunt is done, it is done, and the action immediately takes up the task of paving the way for the next, and it is not slow about it, either. That fascination of the perfect stunt picture is "Brave and Bold's." This is created by the utter disregard of the star for his amazing stunts. He takes them as a matter of course. This identical rule has long applied to farce. If the exponents of it laugh at themselves, the response of the audience is not so hearty as if they were in all seriousness. Walsh never stops to pat himself on the back after jumping a wall or scaling a building. If he did he would immediately lower himself to the level of the unbearable egotist. He is as calm and sincere in his work as a fireman in his.

There is capital comedy in the five reels and a seasoning touch of romance besides. To enumerate the stunts would be a difficult task. Suffice it to say that many of them are original and that the chase in the last reel is loaded with thrills, laughter and romance. Regina Quinn is the pretty girl and Francis X. Conlon the heavy. A. B. Conkwright's whiskers and bearing fit him well for the role of the Prince. Dan Mason and Mabel Bunyea complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

. Robert Booth (George Walsh) is commissioned by his firm to go to Pittsburgh and negotiate a billion-dollar war contract with a visiting prince (A B. Conkwright). He plans to meet his fiancee (Regina Quinn) in the city and marry her. Booth is trapped and landed in a den of thugs, while the business rival, Firkins (Francis X. Conlon), goes to his hotel assuming the name of Booth. Firkins believes himself in possession of both the contract and the girl until after many amazing adventures and escapes, Booth appears on the scene just in time. He lays bare the conspiracy of Firkins, saves the Prince from German treachery, lands the contract and wins the the girl.

"Joan of Plattburg"

(Goldwyn—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"JOAN OF PLATTSBURG," in which Mabel Normand appears as the little patriot of the training camp, is in its treatment very different from the general run of war pictures. The comparison which the author, Porter Emerson Browne, drew between the ignorant waif of an orphan asylum near the big training camp on Lake Champlain and France's Jeanne d'Arc gives it a certain touch, which, if not exactly spiritual, is far removed from the commonplace. Careful direction has made the many scenes in which the helpless Joan believes herself a second Joan of history possess a certain quality of combined pathos and fantasy that is charming. What Miss Normand lacks in depth and variance of expression is in part made up by this atmosphere. The fact that the title role in "Joan of Plattsburg" was not fitted to the star is only evident in a few scenes wherein she poses for a spiritual effect she cannot produce.

But the picture as a whole, presented with the proper music, an accessory which always adds much to the patriotic picture, is moving. The spy melodrama is logically evolved and furnishes the desired suspense. Then there are the scenes of drilling troops and parades, which send thrill after thrill coursing down the spine. In these days pictures are often made by just such scenes. An audience is ever ready to express its enthusiasm for the boys in uniform. There are also some excellent comedy touches with Miss Normand and the Plattsburg student officers at drill. When she is caught before a bayonet charge and again pelted with prop grenades the effect is amusing to say the least.

George Loane Tucker is credited with the direction of the picture, and in general the directorial work is meritorious. A better personality than that possessed by Robert Elliott might have been found for a hero. Edward Elkas and John Webb Dillon are an active pair of spies, while others in the cast are William Fredericks, Joseph Smiley, Willard Dashiell, Edith McAlpin and Isabel Vernon. The photographic work reflects credit on Oliver Marsh.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Joan (Mabel Normand), the drudge of an orphan asylum near the Plattsburg training camp, is an envious spectator of the officers at drill. One day while being cruelly handled by the head of the asylum, she is rescued by Major Lane (Robert Elliott), one of the camp's instructors. He tells her the story of Joan of France and the little waif is fired by a desire to duplicate her wonderful performance. And a little later from her retreat in the cellar of the asylum she hears "the voices." While these voices are not from Heaven, they give her an inkling of a German spy plot to steal a formulae of a new explosive on which an inventor is working near the camp. This she communicates to Major Lane, and as a consequence the spies are apprehended and the formulae saved. Later the Major sails for abroad, courageous because of the faith of Joan, and when he returns with a victorious American army it is Joan, changed into a fine young woman, who welcomes him with his mother.

"Journey's End"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

MARITAL complications, which the producers of World pictures are forever setting forth on the celluloid, are again contained in "Journey's End," an original story by Roy Sensebaugh, but the author has treated them lightly and humorously, and so they take original and more interesting form. Indeed, Mr. Sensebaugh's picture is by all odds the most refreshing of the recent releases of this company. Once he has established his characters and created about them the humorous situation which is the foundation of the many complications that follow, the film is never lacking in interest. It moves forward rapidly and has a number of humorous twists, which, according to all standards of comedy, should meet with appreciative, if not enthusiastic, response.

"Journey's End" is also something of a treat to the eye, as well as a mild stimulant to the senses. The main part of its action is staged at a beautiful seaside resort, abounding in scenes that form ideal backgrounds for the story. The photographic work serves to bring out their full beauty.

Ethel Clayton's performance in the stellar role of Aline is a delight, and John Bowers, Frank Mayo and Jack Drumier perform with distinction. Louise Vale is a good vampire, and Muriel Ostriche, though evidently sincere, is rather artificial in her attempts to express the commonest of emotions. Travers Vale directed, while Max Schneider was at the camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Aline (Ethel Clayton) and her husband, Phil Marsden (John Bowers), break up housekeeping, due solely to the fact that Phil believes himself infatuated with Bernice D'Armond (Louise Vale), a musical comedy star, and agree to live apart for three months, Aline assuming her maiden name. With Pop Moore (Jack Drumier), her guardian, and Jess Alden (Muriel Ostriche), her sister, Aline repairs to Palm Beach and enters upon a life of pleasure. They meet Annis (Frank Mayo), who falls in love with Jess. Phil learns soon enough that it is not so easy to get along without his wife, and he makes the journey to the resort. There, however, he finds Aline perfectly willing to receive him as a new acquaintance, but not as her husband. Matters are complicated by the arrival of Bernice. Phil makes comparisons and discovers his wife so far superior to Bernice that he is disgusted with himself. Pop presses Annis into the game, and as a result this gentleman conspires to arouse Phil's jealousy. This he is successful in doing by using Bernice as an implement. However, his own romance is seriously endangered, even though the trick worked to reconcile Aline and Phil, but explanations shortly follow and the journeys both conclude happily.

" Satan's Pawn "

(W. H. Productions-Barriscale Re-Issue—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

BESSIE BARRISCALE'S " Satan's Pawn," has been dusted off, re-edited, re-cut and made into a brand-new screen offering by W. H. Productions and is scheduled as the first of the series of the Bessie Barriscale re-issues by this company. The one big advertising possibility in this production and one that will stand up under a cavalcade of superlatives on the one, two and three sheets in the lobby, is the personnel of the cast interpreting " Satan's Pawn." Miss Barriscale leads off, with J. Barney Sherry, Rhea Mitchell, Edward J. Connelly and Arthur Maude playing a close second. Mr. Connelly's impersonation of the Devil, is a remarkable bit of characterization and the other members of the supporting cast are equally good in straight roles.

" Satan's Pawn " is adapted from " The Devil." It has been given a good title—appropriate to every scene in the picture—and it has a certain attraction that will arouse the curiosity and demand satisfaction. Nor will an audience be disappointed. The story has substance—a purpose behind its revelation. At several points in the reelage, the action hits the high spots of dramatics and the interest is kept whetted to a keen edge until the final fade-out. It is a subject of sound entertainment and one that will leave an audience in the right humor and with a desire to see Miss Barriscale the second and third times on the screen—not in the same portrayal but in others.

Thomas H. Ince produced " Satan's Pawn," and it is typical of the painstaking care in attention to detail, with which this creator of screen entertainment, handles his every production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Harry Lange (Arthur Maude), an artist, refuses to see Milli (Rhea Mitchell), his model and one-time sweetheart. He has become infatuated with Isabella (Bessie Barriscale), wife of a prominent business man. Rumor has it that Harry and Isabella are lovers, and to disprove the scandal Isabella's husband (J. Barney Sherry) insists that she sit for her painting by the artist. He takes her to his studio and arranges for the setting. When he has left the Devil (Edward J. Connelly) enters and persuades the two that they should forget convention and be frank in admitting their love for one another. The hour passes and the husband returns for Isabella. He notices that the artist has not started work on the painting, but the Devil convinces him that because he, the Devil, unexpectedly dropped in, the work was laid aside.

Later Isabella has a social reception and Harry is invited. The Devil also attends. He induces the artist and an old friend, Elsa (Clara Williams), to renew acquaintances. Isabella becomes jealous, but the Devil by a clever ruse arouses the jealousy of the artist in return.

The artist and Isabella become more frank in their love for one another and the Devil persuades her to write the artist a letter telling him of her love. She consents, but later, becoming frightened at her action, goes to the artist's home and tells him all. The Devil had not delivered the letter. Then the Devil forces Milli to reveal Harry's unfaithfulness to Elsa. Then it is shown that Harry and Isabella are but pawns in the hands of the Devil.

" With Hoops of Steel "

(Paralta—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AFTER doing pictures of politics and the small town for Paralta, Henry Walthall turns to the Western in " With Hoops of Steel," a story from the pen of Florence Finch Kelly. It deals with a prolonged quarrel between independent and corporation cattle men, and the character of Emerson Mead, carried by the star, is the leading light of the former aggregation. There is a love interest and several touches of human interest, but the rather dull squabble of the cowmen occupies the place of prominence. It is dull because the story was never meant for six reels, in the first place, and because the handling of it is poor, in the second place. The introduction of the characters is laborious, the plot is planted by fragments and with insufficient stress on its salient points, while it is developed loosely, with too many cutbacks and too much padding.

The great friendship of Mead and the two cowboys, constantly referred to and from which the picture derives its title, fails to impress because it is never put to the real test. The three join hands time and again and laud their friendship to the skies, but it takes more than mere words to prove such a bond. It is padding such as this which is often obvious. Time and again the characters talk on and on in the face of the camera, talk of many things, but never let deeds follow words.

Director Eliot Howe has made the mistake of permitting his people to play each scene, no matter whether big or small, in the same key. A man drumming on a bass note of a piano would not produce music. And Mr. Howe has not produced a photodrama. He has no range, no tones of light nor of shade.

Mr. Walthall's performance is not the powerful creation he is capable of. But then Emerson Mead was never meant for Walthall. Mary Charleson, opposite, is pleasing, and William DeVaull, Paul Hurst, Joseph Dowling, Howard Crampton and Roy Laidlaw are in support. The little boy, Jack Standing, Jr., is cute, but not clever. The picture has been given an excellent production. The entire street of the Western town and some magnificent shots of the Western cow country lend it realism.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Emerson Mead (Henry B. Walthall), champion of the cause of the independent cowmen against the corporation trying to oust them from the territory, is accused by Colonel Whittaker (Joseph J. Dowling), the corporation head, of murdering his son (Clifford Alexander). As there is no evidence against him, Mead refuses arrest and escapes to his ranch, where he remains with his two faithful companions. His love for Marguerite Delarue (Mary Charleson) causes him to return to the town and risk arrest. He is cast in jail, but later escapes. The watch and papers of young Whittaker are found and Mead is accused of the crime. He gives himself over to the law. But on the morning of his trial Marguerite's baby brother (Jack Standing, Jr.,) is lost and the whole town goes in search of him. The judge, rightly believing Mead honorable, permits him to join in the search, and he finds the child. And then it develops that young Whittaker had only been hiding from his father because of his secret marriage. His reappearance liberates Mead, who joins Marguerite.

" Honor's Cross "

IN the vivid picture of underworld life which " Honor's Cross " offers and the popular ingredients of heart and love interest and despicable villainy which go to make up the melodrama, this feature offering, the second Goldwyn purchase from Selexart, contains a big appeal to the masses of picture-loving folk. It is crowded with action of the swiftest type. The scenes in the resort of the noteworthies of the underworld present a series of pictures full of typical color and interesting detail. Through this ever-changing array of peculiarly fascinating scenes moves the appealing story of a downtrodden and much-menaced daughter of the city, the political boss, who is the usual wolf, and the hero, who comes from the contrasting country of the rocky Sierras. There is so much action and so many exciting scenes that the erring dramatic judgment of some one connected with the production of the picture need only be mentioned in passing. The fact is that either the scenario writer or the director, Wallace Worsley, forgot all about the high lights of the story. These are run through at the same rate as the less important passages in the picture. Their full worth is not realized.

Rhea Mitchell is a heroine of pleasing appearance, though she is capable of greater depth than she shows in her performance as Jane Cabot. Herschel Mayall is the typical heavy, though the same cannot be said of Edward Coxen as the hero. Adele Farrington, Roy Laidlaw and Joseph J. Dowling complete the cast. But it is not individual performances that make " Honor's Cross." Rather is it the fact that it is a lively and realistically staged melodrama of the underworld.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jane Cabot (Rhea Mitchell) finds employment as a dancer and singer in an East Side cafe, the hang-out of a gang controlled by Thomas Dolan (Herschel Mayall), from which place her mother (Adele Farrington) has just been discharged. Here she first meets Lee Stevens (Edward Coxen), fresh from the mountains, who all unsuspecting has come to take charge of Dolan's " real estate " business. This business is in reality only the blind for the traffic he carries on in exacting tribute from the disorderly houses of the city for protection. Jane refuses to cater to the wants of the proprietor of the cafe, and is discharged. Through the influence of Dolan she is unable to gain further steady employment. Stevens, discovering Dolan's real trade, and believing Jane unfaithful to him, returns to his mountain-home, heartbroken. Jane's father (Roy Laidlaw) kills a policeman in a fight. Dolan offers to use his influence in his behalf if Jane will accept him. She refuses. On the day Cabot is sent to prison his wife commits suicide. Left alone in the world, Jane is so dazed with her predicament that she allows Dolan to take her to his home. Here Stevens finds her, convinced of her innocence, and here also the police find Dolan wanted as the man higher up in connection with an attempt on the life of the district attorney.

" Selfish Yates "

WILLIAM S. HART reforms in good style in " Selfish Yates," a photoplay prepared for him by C. Gardner Sullivan. Here he is the bad man again but not the usual type. He is the selfish proprietor of the saloon and dance hall of a desert town. His awakening comes through a girl. Mr. Sullivan's continuity is as smooth running as a Rolls-Royce and as might be expected he has awarded the star a role in which there is considerable mental as well as physical action. Mr. Hart in his dual capacity of actor and director has utilized these opportunities to a degree which lifts the picture considerably from the ordinary Western.

The production contains some excellent lighting effects which are credited to Joe August. The night scenes in particular are vastly superior to the usual broad-day-light-stuff-tinted-a-dark-hue that is usually seen. They have all the somber gray of real night. The Western street is a pretentious thing and the rough interiors are realistic.

Opposite Mr. Hart is Jane Novak whose prettiness and delicate appeal are instantly caught. Thelma Salter and Ernest Butterworth, extremely clever child players, contribute a brace of performances that are in evidence enough to give the story of Yates' reform additional interest. Harry Dunkinson and B. Sprotte complete the cast.

As long as Mr. Hart must reform in every picture, " Selfish Yates " is a fine example of the dramatic manner in which he accomplishes it.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

" Selfish " Yates (William S. Hart), proprietor of the saloon in Thirsty Center, lives only for himself. When Mary Adams (Jane Novak) and her little sister (Thelma Salter) arrive in the town he puts her to work as scrub lady. Gradually, however, she works his reformation, while her sister takes Yates' protege, Hotfoot (Ernest Butterworth), in charge. The climax arrives when Riley (B. Sprotte), covetous of Mary, attacks her and severely injures her. Yates is ready to kill Riley, but Mary bids him stay. Bedridden, she becomes delirious and Yates learns then that she loves him. The townsfolk, aroused to anger against Riley, determine to lynch him, but Yates, realizing what Mary's wish would be, holds them all up while Riley escapes. " How Could You, Caroline? "

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"HOW COULD YOU, CAROLINE?" with Bessie Love, shows a great improvement over her first Pathe Play. Adapted by Agnes Johnston from a story by Izola Forrester, it gives Miss Love the role of an ultra-romantic school girl, who reads all about " Twin Souls," and the like. Her refusal to obey the rules of mere prosaic existence and her pursuit of her chosen affinity, an affinity, who, by the way, is a taxi driver and so extremely villainous, lead her through many amusing adventures. Miss Love is naturally suited to the role of the unsophisticated young lady. Being of tender years and possessed of a brilliant little personality and a full appreciation of the possibilities of any part she undertakes, she makes Caroline a human girl, so engrossed in the enthusiastic pursuit of her fad that she is ever amusing.

The production furnished the picture by Frederick Thompson is adequate. James Morrison, as Bob, makes a realistic figure of Caroline's admirer, and Dudley Hawley, as the mistaken affinity, is good. Edna Earl, Amelia Summerville and Henry Hallam complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Caroline (Bessie Love), exceedingly romantic, comes home from boarding school for the wedding of her sister (Edna Earl). One of the ushers disappointing at the last moment, Caroline is given an address book and told to secure a substitute. She chooses the most romantic name, Reginald Van Allen. Reginald is in reality a chauffeur, who has divers trades on the side. In Reginald Caroline believes she sees her affinity. Bob (James Morrison), her admirer from childhood, doesn't like it at all. On the morning of the wedding Caroline deserts Bob and goes off for a ride in Reginald's taxi. It breaks down and Caroline is late for the wedding. As a consequence she is obliged to remain in her room all the next day. She sneaks out, however, and starts to elope with Reginald. Taken to a shabby roadhouse, she discovers that he is married. Exploded romance! Some time later Caroline finds herself engaged to Bob. Desiring a little something " on him," she attends his bachelor party as a masked dancer. Bob is urged to rehearse his wedding ceremony and Caroline is chosen to help out. The service is said over them. The next morning Caroline taunts Bob with her knowledge of the affair. He, however, makes it known that he was aware of her identity all the time and that the marriage service was real.

" Mile-a-Minute Kendall "

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE prodigal son of Owen Davis' play, " Mile-a-Minute Kendall," provides another human comedy role for Jack Pickford. He is a realistic and likable prodigal. The part is in itself natural in conception and treatment and Mr. Pickford's handling of it is a skilled piece of acting from first to last. Even while seen as the thoughtless waster of his father's fortune, he is pleasing. He is thoroughly human when he imagines himself in love with the alluring Rosalynde d'Aubre of Lottie Pickford, and genuine to the last when success comes to him because of the love of Louise Huff's appealing Joan. Miss Pickford is a typical adventuress and Miss Huff is seen as the lovable heroine, a role in which she fits excellently. The trio does fine work.

The greatest portion of comedy is supplied by Jack McDonald and Casson Ferguson in the respective parts of Evans, the old miser, and Eddie Semper, the village messenger boy. Some of the scenes between these two are so burlesqued that they might have been clipped from a Sennett comedy, but this broad style of humor, though not of the original play, seems to fit very well into the picture. There is no danger of the picture audience missing obvious humor.

" Mile-a-Minute Kendall " is the faithful picture of the rich, young and citified man of today. In mirroring this slice of life it is possessed of as much color and appeal as are the Tom Sawyer productions in which Mr. Pickford has appeared. Its space is about equally divided between human interest and comedy touches, a combination which always pleases. Gardner Hunting adapted and William D. Taylor directed. This team seems surefire.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Kendall (Jack Pickford), because of the fast pace he sets, known as Mile-a-Minute Kendall, decides to marry Rosalynde d'Aubre (Lottie Pickford), a show girl, because he believes her the only one able to understand him. They made a rapid journey to a roadhouse run by Jack Evans (Jack McDonald), a miser, but sustain an automobile accident just before their arrival there. Philip (W. E. Lawrence) and Kendall's father (Charles Arling) follow. Philip makes known to Kendall Rosalynde's character, and for a five-thousand-dollar check she withdraws. Jack is left in the roadhouse suffering from a serious breakdown caused by the accident. Joan Evans (Louise Huff) cares for him, and when he gets well helps him on his invention of a new type of motor engine. The test of this proves successful just as Kendall, relenting his desertion of his son, arrives on the scene with his wife (Jane Wolff). There is a general reconciliation all around, and Jack, having proved himself a success after all, introduces his parents to his bride-to-be, Joan..

" The Hell-Hound of Alaska "

(W. H. Productions-Hart Re-Issues—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

W. H. PRODUCTIONS' third re-issue of the William S. Hart features, like its predecessors, is full of quick, snappy action but unlike the two preceding ones, " The Hell-Hound of Alaska," presents a good bit of society drama, seldom found in Hart pictures. Not until the last three reels, the feature is in five, does the typical outdoor atmosphere—that part of the action which is laid in Alaska—come to the surface. In this combination C. Gardner Sullivan, the author, has created a happy result and most certainly has created a distinctive William S. Hart brand of screen entertainment.

The offering is full of pep from start to finish, the typical Hart action predominating in the later reels. In this offering, the exhibitor will have booked two-in-one. He has the straight dramatic enactment as presented in the first two reels and then the virile strength of the Alaskan atmosphere and its characters depicting life as it is lived in the land where each inhabitant is a law unto himself.

" The Hell-Hound of Alaska " is one of the early masterpieces of Hart, and it stands with the same attractiveness as it held for motion picture audiences, three or four years ago. It will please today as it did then.

The cast interpreting this creation does excellent work. In support of Mr. Hart are seen Enid Markey, George Fisher, in the principal roles. The camera work is done well.

The story tells how Yukon Ed (William S. Hart) revenges the death of the girl he loves.

"Social Ambition"

(Goldwyn-Selexart—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS melodrama of man's redemption through the love of a girl has all the elements of popular appeal. Its scenes range from the business offices and social circles of New York to the muddy streets and lurid dance halls of Alaska, and the action embraces as varied an amount of situations. Howard Hickman's picture of the man who loses all faith in mankind subsequent to the cruel blow received from a wife he thought was loving, is a piece of acting that ever holds the attention. Rhea Mitchell as the young woman who is responsible for his redemption creates an appealing character and Katherine Kirkham gives an interpretation of the other woman that is thorough to say the least.

The story was prepared by William E. Wing and Thomas J. Geraghty made the adaptation. With the exception of the final reel it is expertly handled. This latter part fails to ring true. After Manton's regeneration has been accomplished in far off Alaska he returns to the city believing that his ex-wife will be his sincere friend. The act is false but inasmuch as a happy conclusion is reached after all and poetic justice meted out to the conniving villainess in this manner it will pass. The majority of the way the action grips with an ever-increasing force.

Under the direction of Wallace Worsley the picture has been given an elaborate and realistic production. Mr. Worsley has not been hampered by tradition and has made his dance hall people of Alaska quite human. They are not fighting and drinking all the time and there is no terrible one whose business it is to violate virtue. The photographic work of Robert Newhard is brilliant.

Joseph J. Dowling in a comedy-character role and Noah Beery complete the cast of principals with performances that are adequate in every degree.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Through the extravagance of his wife, Vincent Manton (Howard Hickman) fails in business. Mrs. Manton (Katherine Kirkham), furious because her ambition in the social world cannot be attained, divorces him. Later, a broken man, he arrives in Alaska. Under the influence of drink he insults Rose (Rhea Mitchell), the ward of the dance-hall proprietor, Big Dan (Noah Beery). He is severely beaten up by Rose's champions. Rose, taking pity on him, is the only one, with the exception of Old Joe (Joseph J. Dowling), who cares for him through his long sickness. Gossip starts and Rose is ostracized. When completely recovered, Manton marries Rose out of love and gratitude. After a time he makes a big strike, and leaving Rose without explanation returns to the city. There his millions gain him attention from all, including the ex-Mrs. Manton. Willing to be friend with her, he soon discovers that she merely receives him in the hope of effecting a reconciliation, that she may share his fortune. He returns to Alaska and Rose—and incidently a third party.

"Resurrection"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

COUNT LEO TOLSTOY'S "Resurrection" dealt with Katusha, a young woman of Russia, betrayed by a prince and later forced to pay the penalty for his wrong because of the inadequacy and sham of the Russian court. Charles Whittaker's adaptation, prepared for Pauline Frederick, follows Tolstoy closely enough in bringing out the story of Katusha, and it detracts little from the entertainment value of the picture, that the expose of the Russian court of the days before the revolution holds small prominence in the five reels. The fact remains that Katusha's downfall and resurrection is accomplished through a series of entertaining scenes, which at times soar to dramatic heights.

Miss Frederick's performance is one of sincerity and deep appeal. As Katusha, she is always successful in bringing out the innocence of the role as compared to the outright thoughtlessness of the man who betrayed her. Robert Eliott, as the guilty man for whom Katusha suffers, and John Sainpolis as Simonson, the leader of the downtrodden, who is responsible for her spiritual rebirth, give good performances. The production is adequate in every respect and the atmosphere always convincing.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Katusha (Pauline Frederick), the companion to two old maids, is betrayed by their relative, Prince Nekludov (Robert Eliott), a soldier. Shortly afterward the ladies discover the affair, and turn Katusha from their home. Her child dies, and with its death Katusha enters upon six whole years of revelry and debauchery, eventually being brought to court and tried for the murder of a wealthy merchant. Though innocent, her character is against her, and she receives a sentence of four years in Siberia. Prince Nekludov is at that time a respected man at the Czar's court. On the borders of Siberia, Katusha meets Simonson (John Sainpolis), a teacher of the masses, committed to exile because of his liberal teachings. It is Simonson who plants the spark of spiritual understanding in Katusha. She becomes a different woman. The Prince, now anxious to make amends and, realizing that he is at fault, secures a pardon for Katusha from the Czar, and from a sense of duty offers to marry her. But she refuses both pardon and offer of marriage, preferring to remain at the side of Simonson and work hand in hand with him in his teachings.

"The Dagger Woman"

(Russian Art Film-Pathe—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

SIMPLE to the point of being inadequate for presentation in five reels of film, "The Dagger Woman" is given a certain appeal by the human quality of the two principal characterizations and the finesse with which they are interpreted by Ivan Mozukin and Olga Zovska, the leading players. It is based on a work of L. Andrieff's, a Russian author of prominence. The leading figures are an artist, so engrossed in his work that all love is excluded, and a woman in whom a passionate love is aroused by this man. The working out of the destinies of these two characters is an entertaining study in characterization. It contains none of the sensational elements of the usual picture melodrama; rather does it bring out the psychology of the characters in a manner that will be appreciated by intelligent picturegoers.

M. Mozukin, whose work is well known by previous Russian Art subjects, performs with a naturalness and grace in bearing and expression that has made his acting stand out in the past. Mme. Zovska, a celebrity of the Russian stage, displays an emotional skill that makes her part stand out as particularly human and appealing. The supporting cast is adequate. The director was M. O. Sudokoff. The photographic work in the print exhibited for review is not of the best order.

Ivan Savonsky (Ivan Mozukin), popular society artist, meets Olga Kartoff (Olga Zovska), a young woman high in social circles, and while she is instantly attracted by him, he sees in her only the perfect model for his picture, "The Dagger Woman." Studying her, and by carefully playing on her emotions he gains her confidence, and afterward she consents to pose for him. The picture completed, she is grieved and then angered to discover that Ivan's interest rests solely in it, and how it will fare at the exhibition. She pleads with him in vain. The picture is pronounced a masterpiece, and Ivan is in his triumph as he returns to his studio. Here Olga has secreted herself. Humiliated by the reports circulated regarding herself and the artist, and unable longer to bear his disinterest she plunges a dagger to his heart and kills him.

"THE HULA HULA DANCE" is the first release of the W. H. Productions series of Charlie Chaplin re-issues shown for review. It is in two reels and reveals some of Charlie's old-time slapstick served in the characteristic Chaplin style, presenting his entire repertoire of laugh provoking stunts, from the inimicable dip of the black derby to the never-to-be-imitated Chaplin walk.

Charlie takes his audience back to the time of the caveman and presents a two-reel sketch in which he demonstrates just how the caveman brought the fair cavewomen around to his way of thinking. There is only one interior shown.

The comedian has a supporting cast composed of attractive girls wearing the straw costume of the hula hula dancers, and Charlie, himself, is arrayed in a bear skin, not forgetting the black derby. "The Hula Hula Dance" is a typical Chaplin performance of two or three years ago when he was beginning his conquests of the world of slapstick comedy. Audiences will laugh as heartily and as long and as sincerely at "The Hula Hula Dance" in its re-edited form, as presented by W. H. Productions, as they did back in the days when Charlie was mounting the ladder which has taken him to the pinnacle of the comedy field on the screen.

" The Little Runaway "

GLADYS LESLIE and Edward Earle put over one of the best comedy dramas ever created for the Vitagraph program when they present the leading roles of Paul West's story, " The Little Runaway," adapted to the screen by George Plympton and produced under the direction of William P. S. Earle. Miss Leslie and Eddie Earle work together with the same happy results as a double act, headlining in vaudeville, make possible. Both have the happy faculty of serving the light comedy in just the right proportion without " spilling the beans." They never exaggerate and each appreciates that a mild laugh if extracted from an audience unsolicited, is worth more than a roar extracted as the result of " overdoing " a certain bit, meant to be comedy but verging onto the ridiculous. Hence the roar. The natural, unaffected manner in which Mr. Earle, especially, does the comedy stuff, is worth mention. Miss Leslie " kicks " a little too high, at times, with the result that her acting verges onto the mildest ridicule. But in her late picture she keeps pretty well within bounds of discretion and the result is, a corking good comedy drama for entertainment via the gold fibre.

The human, every-day incidents brought to life by the author, Paul West, and the clever manner in which they are interpreted by Miss Leslie and Mr. Earle, stand for a good percentage of the worth of this offering. The opening flash shows a typical village in the bog country of Ireland and the setting that Director Earle made ready for reproduction by the camera, would make a son of Ireland get out the old Henry Clay and reminisce of his boyhood days among the bogs of the Emerald Isle. Along in the second reel, the action shifts to America and the home of Father Knickerbocker. Here the white meat of the story's plot is revealed—a little pathos, a little sunshine, a little bit of vampiring and then—the happy ending.

Jessie Stevens carries off the honors of the supporting cast with her character portrayal of the Irish mother. Miss Stevens has done some clever work in these parts for Vitagraph. " Mother " Mary Maurice is seen in a bit and to good advantage. William Dunn in the role of a " black sheep," gives a good account of Peter Dowd. Betty Blythe does not have the opportunity to show her real worth as an actress in this production, but swings through her bit with the kind of assurance that is most certain to lead to stellar roles. William Calhoun as the rent collector does a commendable bit.

Ann (Gladys Leslie), a little Irish girl, lives with her Aunt (Jessie Stevens) and her grandmother (Mary Maurice), in a small village in Ireland. The little family are lace makers. The village in which they live is owned by Lord Killowen (Edward Earle). He leaves the duties of collecting the rent to one Harvey Dowd (William Calhoun) and his worthless son, Peter (William Dunn). Killowen plans to visit America, having been invited to spend a season with Eileen Murtagh and her mother, prominent society people. Eileen has set her cap for a title. Killowen visits his township for the first time in years to inform Peter that he must collect all the rents as he needed the money for his trip.

Killowen meets Ann and rescues her from the unwelcome attentions of Peter, the collector's son. To Peter falls the duty of visiting the homes and collecting the money. He does so and decides that he will take a trip to America. Ann hears of this and decides to find Peter and make him return the money.

She persuades a sea captain to give her passage to America. Arriving in New York she is rescued by a policeman who has heard of Lord Killowen's arrival in America. He takes Ann to his home and sends for Killowen. Killowen, who is stopping at the home of the Murtaghs, takes Ann in charge. Eileen (Betty Blythe) becomes jealous of Ann and orders her from the house. Peter Dowd now in America, has inquired for Killowen and fearing Ann will tell him of the thefts, poisons his mind against the girl. When Ann is ordered from the home of the Murtaghs, Killowen decides that Ann and not Eileen is the girl for him.

Tourneur Moves to Honor Muybridge

MAURICE TOURNEUR, who resigned recently from the Paramount directorial staff, and formed his own producing organization, has started a movement to honor the man whose experiments led to the first motion pictures. "In May, 1872, Edouard Muybridge began his experiments in instantaneous photography," says Mr. Tourneur, "and yet, exactly 46 years later, we have done nothing to honor this pioneer who made the photoplay possible. In the interim Muybridge's experiments have developed into the fifth industry of America.

"The popular idea credits Thomas Edison with being the creator of the motion picture. While Edison contributed a vital part to the development of the film, animated photography really dates back to the Muybridge experiments.

"Muybridge built a shed which was painted black and was 120 feet long. Opposite the shed he constructed a camera house with 24 cameras, each having a lens three inches in diameter. In front of these cameras a horse galloped. The cameras, operated first by strings which were broken by the horse's progress, caught successive exposures. Later a motor operated the cameras. Thus a series of successive movement pictures was obtained. Later the work was taken up by M. Marey, of Paris, who utilized a sensitized film and was able to use a single camera. But Muybridge not only took the first photographs of moving objects, but he also projected them on a screen, leading directly to the exhibition of motion pictures.

"Here was the real beginning of the motion picture, later given splendid contributions by Edison, Eastman and others here and abroad," continued Mr. Tourneur. "It is singular that all the elements of motion pictures developed wholly in the Allied countries — the United States, France, Italy, and, in a measure, in England. Germany has contributed nothing, unless perhaps a certain development of the lens."

First Two Chaplin Re-Issues Ready

Co-operative Booking Plan Praised by Rapf

Harry Rapf expresses satisfaction with the successful manner in which his productions, "The Struggle Everlasting," featuring Florence Reed, and "The Accidental Honeymoon," featuring Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein, have been exploited by the Exhibitors Booking Syndicate of New York through its co-operative plan of booking. Sydney Cohen, president of the New York League of exhibitors, heads the syndicate.

Al. Harsten, general manager of the New York Booking Syndicate, writes Mr. Rapf that all the exhibitors who have booked these subjects are more than pleased with the plan and pronounce the features box-office attractions of high standing.

Mr. Rapf left Sunday for a trip through the West to close with several organizations similar to the New York Syndicate.

Doris Kenyon Completes First Picture

Doris Kenyon, her director, John B. O'Brien, and several members of her company, returned on Saturday from Virginia, where the last of the exteriors of "The Street of Seven Stars" were taken. These were the concluding scenes of the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, which Miss Kenyon is presenting at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc. The assembling and cutting of the picture will be finished within a few days and the feature, which is in six reels, will be ready for review within a week.

Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., is now busy on plans for Miss Kenyon's second feature. John B. O'Brien will direct and the company will continue its occupancy of the Plimpton Studio at Mount Vernon.

Demand for Hart Subjects Big in City

Because of the increased demands for bookings in Greater New York for W. H. Productions Company Hart re-issues, "The Two-Gun Man," in "The Bargain," and "The Bandit and the Preacher," the Magnet Film Exchange have been obliged to order additional prints, it announces. The third Hart feature will soon be released, and is entitled "The Hell Hound of Alaska."

Magnet reports the two-reel Keystone subjects booked solidly.

During the week of May 15 the first two-reel Charlie Chaplin reissues will be released. "The Hula Hula Dance," an adaptation from "His Prehistoric Past," is the title.

Jardon, "Tigress of Screen"

"The Tigress of the Screen" will be Dorothy Jardon's title when she makes her first appearance, announces Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., her personal representative.

" An Honest Man "

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Samuel D. Palmer

TRIANGLE has taken a pretty little story by Henry P. Dowst, which appeared in one of the popular fiction magazines, and applying to it the skill of Scenarioist George E. Jenks and Director Frank Borzage has woven it into one of the best five-reel screen plays it has produced in many a day. " An Honest Man " is the title—plain and simple enough. In fact, in its very simplicity lies the chief charm of the production. There are but four principles in the cast, less than a half dozen modest but adequate sets are employed and there is not an objectionable incident or an offending subtitle.

The plot runs along smoothly, so smoothly, in truth, that one is prone to think that he sees an inevitable conclusion far in advance. But the denouement furnishes a complete and agreeable surprise when an old man who is supposed to have died comes back to life.

William Desmond plays the featured role of a smiling, carefree, thieving vagabond who is remade through the confidence reposed in him by an old farmer. He fills the bill, yet he must yield the honors to Graham Pette who presents a truly wonderful character delineation in the part of Old Man Cushing. In makeup, in facial expression, in manner and mannerisms, in every detail, his performance is thoroughly artistic. Mary Warren and Ann Kroman are more than acceptable in the two most important feminine roles.

The production is splendidly subtitled and the direction by Frank Borzage is beyond criticism. There is some good photography by Pliny Horne and we have never seen better lighting effects than those supposed to be afforded by the rays of a kerosene lamp in two or three of the interior scenes.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Benny Boggs (William Desmond), a knight of the road, after numerous amusing experiences, offers his services as a soldier to Uncle Sam. Being badly intoxicated, he is rejected at the recruiting office. Again faring forth on the road, he obtains a day's work on the farm of Old Man Cushing (Graham Pette). The old fellow is not in good health and Benny agrees to stay awhile to help him out. The farmer is stricken at his work, and, believing his end near, he tells Benny of a hidden package and asks him to try to deliver it to his runaway daughter, Ruby (Ann Kroman), who is somewhere in the big city. Benny, thinking the old man is dead, sets out for the city and soon finds that the package contains $50,000. But Cushing having expressed his belief in his honesty, Benny does not touch the money. Through protecting a girl (Mary Warren) from the advances of a city fop, Benny acquires her friendship. Through this girl he finds Ruby and delivers to her the fortune. The two girls and Benny return to the farm and are amazed to find Ruby's father alive and quite well. Benny and Ruby plight their troth, to marry after he has done his bit in the army.

" True Blue "

(Fox Standard—Six Reels)

THERE doesn't seem to exist a word or group of words that adequately describe the William Farnum type of picture. " Virile drama of the great outdoors " has been employed with such frequency that a picture need only have a shot of a sweeping ranch or of the frozen wastes of the north to earn it. And it only partly describes Mr. Farnum's pictures. For while all his pictures are virile and of the great outdoors, whether they be located in the West, the North or on the sea, it is the Farnum personality that gives them their particular attraction. Here is an actor that makes one murmur " all man " and " magnificent " to himself with a feeling of confidence that he is not stretching

Theatre Notes

ARIZONA

Frank Damos, of the Nogales theatre, Nogales, reports having closed a deal whereby he acquires a plot of land on Morley avenue, whereon he intends to erect a new motion picture theatre, to have seating accommodations for 2,000 persons.

George Cox has caused the Rainbow theatre, Glendale, to be demolished and on its site is now erecting a much more modern structure to be devoted to the silent drama.

CALIFORNIA

J. C. Odell, president of the People's Trust and Savings Bank at Riverside, states that the plans of Architect Stanley G. Wilson for the remodeling of both exterior and interior of their building have been accepted and work will be commenced as soon as the bank can get possession of the property. The new plans call for two entrances, one leading from Seventh and the other from Main street, and the entire overhauling and redecorating of the Loring theatre. C. L. Nye will have charge of the new theatre.

Plans for the erection of a modern skyscraper building having a theatre with 3,500 seating capacity are now fully developed. The northwest corner of Third and Broadway, San Diego, is the site selected, and extends 150 feet on Broadway, 150 feet on Third street, through to Second street, where a frontage of 70 feet has been procured. The Orpheum syndicate is said to have the matter in hand.

GEORGIA

William Oldknow, general representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. for the Southern States, has negotiated a lease on the property located at 79 Peachtree street, Atlanta, formerly known as the Odeon theatre, and will there conduct a motion picture theatre for the purpose of exploiting exclusively Universal films and their allied interests. Mr. Oldknow is recognized as the pioneer exhibitor of the South.

OFFICIAL CALL

Eighth Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and Exposition of the Motion Picture Industry

Boston, Mass., July 13-20, 1918

To All State and Local Organizations of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America:

BECAUSE the motion picture industry has been singled out by the President of the United States and publicly commended for the service it has rendered in aid of the government in carrying on the war, and because it has rendered the greatest service of any single industry in the country, it is of the utmost importance not only to the industry as a whole but to the country at large that the annual convention and exposition to be held this summer be the biggest and largest of any convention and exposition in the history of the business.

Shortly after the declaration of war the President called upon the motion picture industry for aid and the aid was promptly given. That aid has been great but the opportunity exists to make it greater. At the last convention a split occurred in the ranks of the exhibitors which for a time looked as though it might have disastrous effects, but the convention held in Washington last winter partially healed that breach. The time has come when it should be entirely healed in order that the exhibitors of the United States may give the greatest possible measure of service to the government.

Because of the vastly important work that is ahead of the exhibitors of the United States during the coming year, and because of the great importance of this convention, I call upon all state and local organizations to pay their per capita tax in order that they may be able to elect a full quota of delegates and alternates to this convention.

The exposition this year will be held jointly by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture industry. During the week of the exposition I earnestly invite all organizations connected with and affiliated with the motion picture industry have been invited to hold their annual meetings and conventions. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers have already scheduled their conventions for this time.

Because of the facts outlined above, I, Lee A. Ochs, by virtue of the power invested in me, as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, do hereby call the annual convention of said Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to be held at the Mechanics' Building in the city of Boston in the State of Massachusetts from July 13-20 inclusive, and do hereby designate the Copley Plaza Hotel as the official convention headquarters.

Issued this 2d day of May, 1918.

LEE A. OCHS, President,
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Shall the Projection Room Be Visible from the Lobby?

THE new film standard for home and portable projectors which was adopted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at their recent Rochester meeting was discussed on this page in the issue of May 11th, 1918. Definite action was taken on this standard by the Society, though its universal use in projectors of this class was merely advocated.

The second important question which comes up for discussion was that of the Projection Room in picture houses. Should the interior be visible from any particular part of the house other than the auditorium or should the restrictions remain as they are, or be made even stricter?

There was one point on which all were agreed—that under no circumstances shall the wall or walls facing the auditorium be made of anything which is not 100 per cent fireproof and absolutely opaque. We can therefore eliminate any thought that the changing from present conditions would cause additional risk of film fire panic among the audience than that which already exists.

The question was discussed at considerable length, the following arguments being advanced in favor of keeping the projection room restrictions as they are at present, or even making them more strict.

First—From past experience it has been demonstrated that the audience must be kept in absolute ignorance of any fire which may occur in the projection room, for knowledge of such fire means panic and loss of life.

Second—That the projection room should not only be open to view, but should be forced by law to be built outside the theatre, and that access should be had to it only by a ladder or stairs on the exterior of the building.

Third—That it was impossible at all times to have the film handled so as to eliminate all danger, and therefore these exceptional occasions should not be brought to the attention of the audience or passers-by.

Fourth—That film, even when handled by the most expert people and under the most ideal conditions, is dangerous and apt to be a menace. Therefore, why make any change in the projection room by opening it and bringing this menace into prominence, even though it is a million to one chance that trouble will never arise?

The following arguments were advanced by those who advocate allowing the public to look into the projection room, either through a wired glass window opening on the lobby or foyer or by some other method:

First—That the projection of motion pictures is a hazardous occupation and therefore the more that is known about methods employed the less dangerous it becomes.

Second—The average projection room today is not kept as the law requires. By opening it to public view proper conditions would be absolutely necessary.

Third—Operators smoke in the projection room, which is against the law. This, according to actual statistics, causes 50 per cent of all film fires. This menace would be entirely done away with.

Fourth—The projection machines themselves are often not kept in proper running order—by opening the projection room to view the operator would be forced to keep his equipment in proper running order and thus reduce fire risk.

Fifth—The opening of the projection room would be a decided advantage to the theatre owner from an advertising viewpoint.

Sixth—That the danger from film fire was much exaggerated and that the authorities were beginning to realize this fact and were lifting restrictions rather than making them more burdensome.

Seventh—From a sanitary standpoint the improvement would be very marked, as theatre owners would be forced to equip their houses so as to live up to the letter of the law, which is not the case now.

Eighth—Of all the hazardous occupations the only one where complete concealment is insisted upon is the operation of motion pictures, and as concealment under all other circumstances means added danger, so the concealment of motion picture projectors means added danger.

Ninth—Any inspector or other official would be able to walk into a house and without the operator's knowledge carry on his inspection and make his report, knowing that it was based on facts and that the operator had not been warned of his approach and given time to clean up, turn on the ventilators, blow out the smoke, hide his cigarette and otherwise be ready for the visit.

We set forth these arguments in the hope that they will start our readers thinking, for there is no doubt that this question is going to be an important one to the industry. We will be very glad to receive comments on the subject, as the wider the opinions which may be expressed the better able will be the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to come to the right decision when making its recommendations to the industry as a whole.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Some Considerations in the Application of Mazda Lamps to Projectors

By L. C. Porter and W. M. States

[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Rochester, N. Y., April 9, 1918.]

A POSSIBLE source of large loss is in the alignment of the condenser lens and objective lens. It is important that the face of the condenser be parallel to the face of the projection lens, and also that the centers of both are on the same axis passing through the center of the light-source and the center of the mirror. Tests were made in which the condenser was properly lined up and the screen lumens measured. The condenser was then moved to one side in steps of 1/10″ also upwards in steps of 1/10″. The results were as follows:

Condenser
Proper Centered	Relative Light on Screen (Lumens)	100
“ 1/10″ “ to one side	“ “ “ “ “	72.5
“ 2/10″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	39.5
“ 3/10″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	24
“ 4/10″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	20.5
“ 5/10″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	20
“ 1/10″ upwards	“ “ “ “ “	88.5
“ 2/10″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	58.5
“ 3/10″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	29.5

These values of the screen illumination for various positions of the condenser lens are graphically shown by the curves in Fig. 8.

A slight change in the distance between the condenser and the aperture-plate has little effect, but the distance should be approximately right, i. e., 5″ for the 3½″ diameter condenser and 6½″ for the 4½″ diameter. Tests on the 4½″ diameter condenser showed the following variation in screen lumens obtained by moving the lens ahead of and behind its proper location:

Condenser
“ 6½″ to aperture plate	Relative Light on Screen (Lumens)	100
“ 6¾″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	103
“ 7″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	100
“ 7¼″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	100
“ 7½″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	103
“ 6¼″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	103
“ 6″ “ “ “	“ “ “ “ “	105

Presumably the condenser and objective lens are properly lined up at the factory and it should not be necessary to change this setting. It is well, however, to check this matter and to use great care after moving the lamp housing sideways for lantern slide projection to get it back into the proper position before continuing the motion picture projection. There are three simple methods by which the centering of the condenser may be checked:

Let one man, provided with a piece of dark glass, place his head in the beam of light about ten feet in front of the projector and look through the dark glass directly into the objective lens. The observer's head should be in such a position that the shadow thereof falls on the exact center of the lighted part of the motion picture screen. Looking into the objective lens through the dark glass, the corrugations on the condenser become clearly visible. An assistant should then move the condenser until these rings are concentric with, and centered, in the objective lens, as in Fig. 9*b*.

If one is to line up quite a number of machines, time may be saved by having a simple mechanical device made for this purpose (Fig. 10.) The device consists of a straight rod, A, pointed at each end. A section of a cone, B, of such a diameter that its center will fit snugly into the objective lens jacket after the lens tube has been removed. This cone-shaped piece also has a hole through it fitting snugly to the rod A. A tapered rectangular piece, C, is also provided to fit snugly into the aperture plate. This piece also has a hole in it fitting rod A snugly. A circular plate, D, is provided with a good substantial shoulder bored to fit rod A. These parts may be made of steel or wood, preferably steel. In using them remove the lens tube from the objective lens and insert cone B in the jacket. Insert rectangular block C in the aperture plate, and pass rod A through them. It then becomes a simple matter to place the center of the condenser against the pointed end of the rod, thus centering it perfectly with respect to the aperture plate and the projection lens.

The plane of the condenser is made parallel to the plane of the aperture by placing disc D on the end of the rod and having the face of the condenser touch the disc around its entire circumference. If desired, the mirror may be similarly centered before the condenser is put in place. From the curves shown it is easy to see that if two or more of the component parts of the optical train are slightly out of line a very large loss in screen illumination may result.

The use of wide aperture projection lenses is advocated with Mazda lamps (Fig. 11.) The light transmission possible through 5½″ focus lenses of varying diameters is approximately in the following ratio:

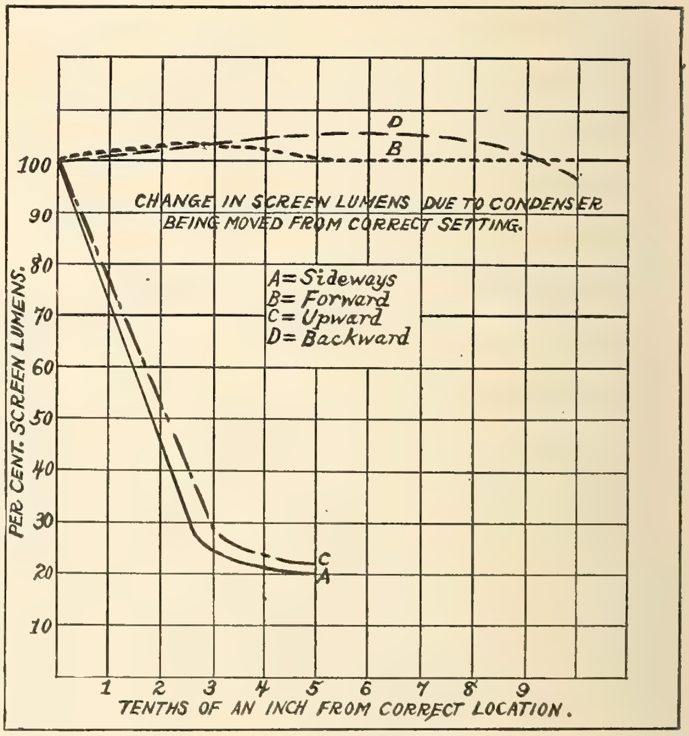

Fig. 8.

Focus	Diameter	Transmission
5½″	1½″	36
“	2″	64
“	2¼″	82

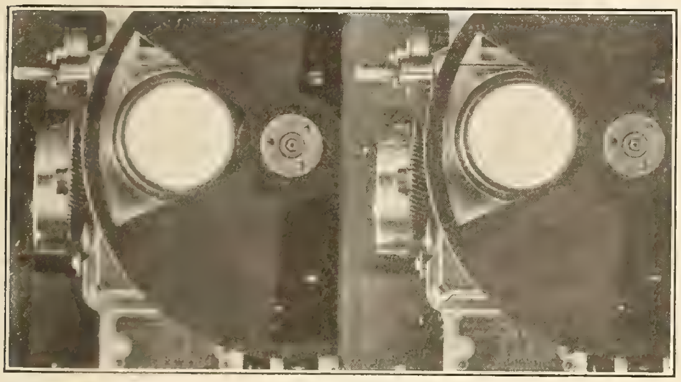
The use of wide aperture projection lenses results in a considerable gain in screen illumination with the Mazda lamp.

The color of the light from the Mazda lamp is warmer than that of the arc and generally more pleasing on that account. There are, however, a few conditions where it is desirable to imitate closely the color of the arc. Thus, in film exchanges and studios, a customer who is an arc user may want to select his films with due reference to his own illuminant. In the film studios, where the selection is made, the pictures are generally projected a relatively short distance, 25 or 30 feet, and a fairly small-sized picture is shown. Under these conditions the Mazda lamp offers more than a sufficient amount of light.



(a) (b)

Fig. 9—(a) Condenser Not Co-Axial With Objective. (b) Condenser Accurately Centered.

We may, therefore, sacrifice a small amount of light in altering its color to conform closely to that of the arc. This may be accomplished by inserting between the condenser and the aperture-plate a piece of glass of the proper quality. Such glass is available as a lamp bulb, i. e., there are Mazda lamps manufactured for color matching purposes with bulbs made of this special glass. They are known as Mazda C2 lamps. A good stunt is to obtain an old, burned-out, 500-watt PS-40 bulb Mazda C2 lamp and remove a section of the bulb to place in front of the aperture of the motion picture machine. There is an old trick that may be used in removing this section of the C2 bulb. With a fine file, make a scratch on the bulb, then take a hot soldering iron, poker, or any convenient pointed piece of hot metal, and place it on the filed scratch on the glass. A crack will start which will follow the hot iron wherever it is moved around the lamp bulb. In this way a nice piece of C2 glass may be easily detached from the bulb.

TESTING

Until recently it was more or less difficult to measure screen illumination. Photometers were expensive and considerable practice necessary to read them accurately. Now, however, there is available, at a low price, a foot-candle meter which can be used to great advantage in measuring the illumination projected by various lens systems or other devices, which it is desired to compare.

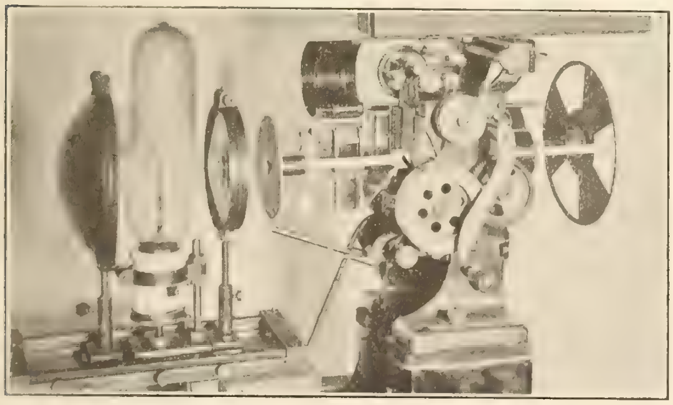


Fig. 10—Apparatus and Method for Aligning Projector Optical System.

In measuring screen illumination there are two methods in common use. One is to divide the actual motion picture screen into sixteen equal rectangles and measure the light intensity at the center of each of these; then average all the foot candle readings thus obtained, and multiply that average by the area (in square feet) of the screen. The result will be the total amount of light in lumens on the screen. The chief advantage of this method of measurement is that the distribution of light over the screen, i. e., its relative evenness or otherwise, is measured. The disadvantage is that measuring 16 points on the screen (and for accuracy's sake taking three readings at each point) is a rather lengthy process. These readings are usually taken without the film in the machine and with the rotating shutter stationary.

The total screen lumens may be obtained more quickly by placing a piece of good diffusing glass (dense opal) over the objective lens. The foot candle meter may then be mounted at any convenient fixed distance in front of this glass and the intervening space inclosed with black cloth or paper so as to shut out all extraneous light. If many tests are to be made, it will be found convenient to build a box lined with black velvet. This box should have an opening in one end to fit snugly around the projection lens; an opening in the opposite end for the foot-candle meter; and an opening at the top near the projection lens through which to view the scale of the foot-candle meter. Relative emitted lumens may then be measured at one set of readings.

If it is desired to obtain actual rather than comparative values, this device should be calibrated by removing the diffusing glass and reading the sixteen stations on the motion picture screen as described above. Then read in the box with the diffusing glass in place. If, for example, it is found that there are 600 lumens on the screen and the foot-candle meter in the box reads 2.00, then the constant by which the box readings should be multiplied to convert to actual lumens is 600 divided by 2 or 300.

If considerable experimental work is to be done, it will be found more convenient to use an optical bar than an actual projection machine. So far as the optical end is concerned, all of the mechanism of the machine is unnecessary. If some means is provided for holding an objective lens, an aperture plate, condensers, lamp and mirror, and for varying the position of each of these elements in three directions, i. e., forward and backward, sideways, and up and down, a most convenient testing device will result. Figure 12 shows such an optical bar. In this case the bar is mounted on a see-saw arrangement which may also be rotated. By this means the 16 points on the motion picture screen may be measured, leaving the foot-candle meter in one position and moving the lighted field around by means of the see-saw arrangement. This may be calibrated and degrees

The field of application for moving picture machines using Mazda lamps for light sources is large. Already the art has advanced to a point where (taking into consideration the somewhat lower results obtained under average practical operating conditions than are possible under the best conditions), Mazda motion picture lamps will successfully replace any A. C. arc on 25 cycle current; 50 ampere A. C. arcs on alternating current of 60 cycles and above and also 25 ampere D. C. arcs. In other words, twelve-foot pictures projected on a plain, white screen or sixteen-foot pictures on metallic or mirror screens, up to throws of 100 feet. By such a replacement satisfactory projection is secured at a lower operating cost.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has, among its members, many men actively engaged in the manufacture of large as well as small, or portable, motion picture machines. There is a wonderful field open to these gentlemen. The educational possibilities of the motion picture machine are enormous. It is the authors' belief that some day the house machine, and those for use by salesmen, etc., will vastly outnumber its larger prototype, now so common in the motion picture theatre. There are two factors which will contribute most to this accomplishment, i. e., safety and simplicity. The use of the Mazda lamp for a light-source secures the latter and contributes largely toward the former. After simplicity and safety we desire excellence of screen results.

It is hoped that a careful study of the data presented above will be of assistance to manufacturers in producing the highest grade machines, and to the users of these machines in getting the best out of them, thereby jointly obtaining excellent pictures. The lamp manufacturers are with you from start to finish, both in the interest of science, and the advance of education, as well as from the commercial standpoint. Our various engineering departments are in a position to assist you in your development work, and we shall be glad to have you call for such assistance at any time.

In conclusion, the authors wish to thank J. Force of the Laboratory and E. F. Carrington of the Photographic Department of the Edison Lamp Works for their assistance in obtaining and preparing the data presented above.

I. P. A. Secures Larger Quarters

WITH a view to providing added comforts and conveniences to its enthusiastic and steadily increasing membership the International Projection Association has relinquished its old headquarters at 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, and secured new and commodious quarters at 437 East 145th street, Bronx. The new clubhouse contains eleven large rooms, well fitted up, and will be ready for occupancy about May 15. The club has leased the premises for a term of years and have also purchased a pool table, and the nucleus of a technical library.

To the regret of the membership at large Frank S. Pircher, B.Sc., the recently elected president, was obliged to resign his office, due to the pressure of highly important work which at present is occupying the major portion of his time.

At the club's last business meeting, on April 22, Frank H. Tyler was elected president, to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Pircher's resignation.

E. M. PORTER, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York City, left New York the latter part of last week on a ten-day trip, to visit a few of the distributors handling the Simplex projector. His first stop was at Chicago.

Mr. Porter will consult with the various companies acting as exclusive distributors for the projectors made by the Precision Machine Company, with a view of taking up details in connection with the company's new sales promotion plans. Mr. Porter expects to obtain important data, indicating the prospects of the accessory business in the Fall.

The Camera

The Optical Requirements of Motion Picture Projection Objectives

By Alfred S. Cory

[A paper read before the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Rochester, April 9, 1918.]

IN the motion picture industry, as in every other modern industry, the trend in mechanical and technical matters is always toward increased efficiency, combined with improvement in quality, and on the present occasion I bring to your notice the results of a comparative study of motion picture projection objectives from the standpoint of their defining properties and the efficiency with which they utilize the light-source of the motion picture projector.

As the analogy between the production of an image, or picture, in the photographic camera, and the reproduction of an enlarged screen picture by the motion picture projecting machine, is a very close one (the two processes being, in fact, merely the inverse of one another), we are provided with a ready means of studying and comparing the capabilities of projection objectives by subjecting them to the same considerations that are applied to the investigation of the properties of photographic objectives, but before we proceed there is a difference which should be pointed out between the character of the work which is to be accomplished by the photographic objective and the projection objective, respectively.

In the case of the photographic objective, the angular field, or field of view, required to be covered is seldom less than 30 degrees, which is considered a very narrow field in photography, but in the case of motion picture projection, the field which comes into play is only about 15 degrees in angular extent (for an objective of 4 inches E. F.), and is even less in the case of long focus lenses. Were it not for these extremely moderate requirements as regards the angular extent of the field of view, the effect of the aberrations of the customary projection objective would be much more apparent in the screen reproduction.

On the score of aperture, or intensity, however, the requirements of photographic objectives and projection objectives are identical, for in both cases the greatest aperture is essential which is compatible with freedom from a noticeable amount of aberration in the projected pictures. Thus the bundles of rays transmitted by a projection objective are of large angular section, as in the case of the photographic objective, but the most extreme rays from the film picture to be projected have very slight inclinations to the axis of the objective when compared with the obliquities met with in photography.

As is well known, the images formed by lenses are affected, as regards sharpness or quality of definition, and as regards the accuracy with which they reproduce the projected object, by a series of aberrations, the most representative aberrations, from the viewpoint of the optical constructor being:

(1) Chromatic aberration (due to the composite nature of white light).
(2) Axial spherical aberration.
(3) Spherical aberration for points outside the axis.
(4) Astigmatism.
(5) Curvature of the image field (invariably associated with 4).
(6) Distortion.

A brief outline of the cause of these various aberrations, their effect on the projected image, and the requirements for their elimination, or correction, will be given, and a comparison between the customary projection objective, and some objectives of improved construction, will be made on the basis of the extent to which the various aberrations have been eliminated in the several types of objective considered.

To save time in reviewing the effects of the several aberrations upon the definition of the projected picture, we will assume, in the first place, that any objective which is worthy of investigation has been chromatically corrected for at least two spectral colors, and has also been spherically corrected for rays parallel to the axis, i. e., is so corrected that the axial ray and the edge ray, after refraction by the objective, cut the axis at the same point, which point of intersection is known as the focal point of the objective in question.

The fact that an objective is spherically corrected for the center of the field does not, however, assure the sharp reproduction, in the image, of portions of the object which are situated outside the axis, because the zones of the objective between the axis and the margin may exert their influence on oblique pencils in a manner which is quite fatal to crispness in the image, and this effect is number 3 on the list of aberrations, being generally known as coma. Spherical aberration of the oblique pencils of rays gives a fuzzy appearance to the image, the reason for this being that the various zones of the objective have not the same magnifying power, due to the unsymmetrical refraction of the rays in the meridian sections of oblique pencils. In first approximation Abbe showed that for the elimination of coma the ratio of the sines of the angles made with the axis by any and every ray proceeding from the axial object point and refracted to its image point must be constant, or in other words where u is the angle which the incident ray makes with the axis and u' is the angle which the refracted ray makes with the axis. This ratio must also be equal to the linear magnification. In the case of parallel incident rays the relationship where h is the height of incidence of the ray considered, measured from the axis. This ratio must be equal to the equivalent focal length of the objective and the difference between the value of $h/\sin u'$ and the equivalent focal length, F, for any zone of a given objective represents the deviation from the sine condition for that zone of the objective, and if the sine condition is approximately fulfilled in an objective the values of

$$\frac{h}{\sin u'}, \text{ must be constant}$$

for the various zones will be nearly equal to the outstanding spherical aberration for the same zones as compared to the focus of the axial ray. Zonal variations of the equivalent focal length are eliminated over a narrow field, i. e., up to 7 degrees from the axis (15° field of view) when the sine condition is fulfilled as a first approximation, but in the case of wider fields a special correction for coma may be necessary, which is, however, outside the scope of the present considerations.

The commercial varieties of projection objective are made along lines similar to those proposed by Petzval in 1840, and the deviations in present day manufacture from the original Petzval Portrait objective are so slight that the projection objectives now generally in use are similar in their characteristics to the original Petzval lens. The Petzval objective has always been celebrated for its critical definition in the center of the field, which compares very favorably with the most modern objectives over a restricted area in the vicinity of the axis.

At a distance of 12 mm. from the axis (corresponding to one-half the width of a film image), the deviation from fulfillment of the sine condition commences to assume such proportions, however, that there appears to be room for improvement through the use of some other type of objective wherein the sine law is fulfilled for a greater distance away from the axis, because the edges of the motion picture image are outside of the region over which this important correction is operative in the case of the Petzval objective. By the use of certain types of photographic anastigmats as projection objectives, a field much in excess of the diagonal of a film image may be secured which is free from coma, and as these modern types of objectives appear to possess numerous other advantages they will be considered more extensively in the course of my remarks.

A further deterioration in the definition of the projected motion picture image is the result of astigmatism and curvature of field, two associated aberrations which appear as numbers 4 and 5 on our list.

A description of the effects of astigmatism and curvature of field upon the projected image will show the importance of correcting the projection objective for these aberrations, so we will dwell briefly upon the matter, reference being had to Fig. 1.

In the diagram a pencil of light rays, supposed to be of very narrow cross-section, is incident obliquely upon a positive lens. The cause of astigmatism is found in the fact that a different contour of lens surface is presented to sections of the incident oblique pencil which are 90° apart, and the refracting effect of the lens is thus different for different portions of the incident pencil.

The section of the oblique pencil of rays which contains both the axis of the pencil and the axis of the lens is known as a primary or meridian section, and is denoted by A B in the diagram, while the section at right angles to A B through the oblique pencil is known as the secondary or equatorial section, C D, of the same oblique pencil. Proceeding now to follow the course of the rays after the oblique pencil has been refracted by the lens, we note that the rays of the equatorial section C D come to a focus at I in the form of a line which radiates from the axis, while the rays of the meridian section A B come to a focus further back at II as a horizontal line which is at right angles to the radial line at I, or, more strictly, it is tangential with respect to the circular image field. At the position I, therefore, we have vertical or radial elements of the object in focus and horizontal details blurred beyond recognition, while at II we have horizontal, or tangential, object elements sharply delineated but the vertical elements hopelessly out of focus. Somewhere between I and II is a position of minimum indistinctness which is known as the circle of least confusion, and would represent the best marginal definition attainable with the uncorrected lens.

The converging of oblique pencils to two focal lines is not the only consequence of oblique refraction, however, for the respective radial and tangential lines are located on two very curved surfaces, as the diagram shows, and these curved image-surfaces only coincide at the axis of the lens. The difference between the curvatures of the I and II astigmatic image-surfaces is known as the astigmatic difference, which increases with increasing angles of obliquity of the incident rays. This deformation of the image-surfaces, i. e., their departure from the flatness of an ideal focal-plane, is known as curvature of the image-field, and it is found desirable when correcting an objective for the removal of astigmatism to abolish the astigmatism and the curvature of the field simultaneously.

By suitable design and choice of the glasses, an objective may be made which brings the I and II image surfaces into contact, whereupon the lens is free from astigmatism and renders a sharp image, but this single anastigmatic image field may still be a very considerably curved surface. It is therefore the aim of the optical computer to render the field flat and perpendicular to the axis at the theoretical focal-plane simultaneously with the bringing together of the I and II image surfaces. This is accomplished when the Coddington-Petzval condition is fulfilled, which requires that i. e., the sum of the products obtained by multiplying the curvature of each refracting surface by the difference of the reciprocals of the refractive indices of the media bounding that surface must be zero. When this equation does not equal zero its value indicates the curvature of the image field at its vertex, or, in other words, at the axial focal point.

NOTE.—The Coddington-Petzval condition is only operative when the astigmatism has first been abolished, that is when i. e., the sum of the differences in the diameters of the circles of confusion (corresponding to an extra-axial point of the object) resulting from the refractions at each of the surfaces of the system equals zero.

In the case of some modern photographic objectives the astigmatism and curvature have been eliminated over a very wide field of view, although in anastigmatic corrections, as well as in ordinary spherical corrections, there remain, in the case of most objectives, small outstanding zones where the I and II image-surfaces have not been brought completely into contact, or where the field is not perfectly flat and at right angles to the axis of the objective.

As a concrete instance of the existence of these astigmatic deviations, and departures from strict planeity of the image-field, the Petzval type of projection objective shows a noticeable degree of astigmatism, or curvature of the field, or both, at 5° from the axis (corresponding to a field of view of 10°), while at 7° from the axis (corresponding, roughly, to a 15° field of view) the astigmatism, or the curvature, or sometimes both, are of quite appreciable extent. To those who have never experimented with lenses from the constructional point of view it will be of interest to state that by separating the front and rear components of a Petzval type objective the flatness of the image-field is improved, but at the same time the I and II image-surfaces tend to separate from one another more and more as the lens components are spaced increasingly farther apart, so that flatness of field is attained at the expense of increased astigmatism when the correction depends solely upon the empirical principle of separation. On the other hand, a very close approximation to complete coincidence of the I and II image-surfaces may be secured by bringing the components of the Petzval objective close together, thus eliminating astigmatism almost entirely, but in this case a very much curved field results, which is equally as objectionable as the presence of astigmatism both to the photographer and the optical projectionist.

As it is therefore to be seen that the Petzval objective possesses neither complete freedom from astigmatism, nor a perfectly flat field of sufficient angular extent to permit of perfect definition over the entire extent of the projected motion picture image, it appears that in order to achieve the utmost in sharpness in cinematographic projection some of the modern types of highly corrected objectives could be utilized to advantage in this class of work. Projection objectives of the photographic anastigmat type have been used in England and on the Continent for some years past with great success, and I need not therefore apologize for directing the attention of the Society, and the industry at large, to the improved results which may be secured by the use of projection objectives of modern design.

Is It Patriotic to Abandon Music?

By GUSTAV SAENGER

SOME day when the complete account of the present war is written, when every phase and part of the gigantic struggle will be known, when the indescribable feats of bravery and endurance of our men, together with the material factors which aided in the ultimate victory will have been duly recorded, a considerable chapter will be necessary for the proper presentation of the important, the essential as well as the uplifting part which music, in its every form, contributed to our cause.

After everything is said and done, the spirit, pluck, endurance and courage of the man behind the gun cannot be upheld forever without outside influences of some kind. Besides being clothed, fed and attended to in cases of accident, the men gathered together from every field of human endeavor, made up from every possible scale of human society, need periodical rest and entertainment of one kind or another to divert their attention from the bloody work in hand. And what more potent or vital influence can be thought of for collecting, strengthening and upholding the morale and courage of our troops, of entertaining them in their hours of leisure and reminding them of the loved ones at home for whom they are fighting, than music? What greater stimulus can be given to a tired, fagged-out company of men than to start them singing a rousing marching song or by letting a military band play it for them?

Everyone of the belligerent nations has long since established bands, choruses, theatres and entertainments of all kinds for the relaxation and amusement of its soldiers. America, too, has quickly seen into the need of providing its fighters with every possible kind of musical relaxation, not only for reasons of absolute amusement but on account of its far-reaching influences as a direct need.

Public attention has been frequently directed of late to the inspiring work done by Lieutenant John Philip Sousa in connection with the organizing of military bands for use in the present war.

Not so very long ago Major-General Leonard Wood issued an invitation to musicians in the seven states from which the men of the Eighty-ninth Army Division were drawn to submit original marches from which an official divisional march was to be selected and I believe it was he or Secretary Baker who stated at one time that "a singing army is a triumphant army"; another has declared that "the singing of the army will be one of the inspiring chapters in the history of the war," and a capable writer in the Chicago Evening Post recently said, among other things, that—"Music when men are going into a charge lifts the heart and makes the hand strong. Music in the intervals between actions, back of the trenches and in the billets, lifts the souls of the soldiers, acts as a palliative of hardships and comforts like a mother. Old soldiers have said that no man can be a coward as long as he can hear the band play. The men of ours who are over there have music supplied to them, and if the ration of instruments or notes or song words is short, they improvise. Almost better a foodless camp than a songless camp. The man who can supply music for the troops is as necessary as the man who can supply munitions.

But while this essential need of music as an inspiring and uplifting force is gaining greater impetus with our authorities as the war keeps on, we are threatened with manifold powerful influences at home to declare a ban on music in general, do away with it and place it in line with those luxuries of life which our authorities have classified as non-essential.

And it seems doubly discouraging to consider that regardless of all the efforts made to provide music for our enlisted men and with due acknowledgment of the value and need of musical activity in connection with their duties, no end of propaganda is being scattered broadcast at home, in connection with civilian life, to depreciate the value of music and prove it worthless as a factor in war-time activities.

Quite recently the New York Musicians' Union approached the so-called Theatre Managers' Association with a request for a ten per cent increase in salaries for all members of their organization. Not only did the Managers' Association flatly refuse consideration of this request but announced through their counsel that it would be impossible for them to reach a higher scale of wages for their musicians, that well-nigh prohibitive cost of living had carried production expenses with it, that music had taken its place with other non-essentials, that it was a luxury now if there ever was one, and that it was not necessary to the production of a great majority of legitimate plays.

Aside from the fact that the general rise in the cost of living has affected musicians just as seriously as any other class of citizens it seems rather high-handed for an organization of theatre managers, dependent upon the amusement-seeking public, to declare music a luxury and non-essential, just because their orchestras have taken it upon themselves to ask for a raise in salaries. Why not declare the products of scene painters, costumers, program printers, electricians, etc., unessential because advance in salaries for services rendered has been asked for?

This question of music for those who stay at home is a serious and a vital matter. Our civilian population must be provided with opportunities for relaxation and amusement and to this end nothing serves to better advantage than music in one form or another. Let us insist upon non-essentials, if they really are non-essentials, but let everyone in a position to do so and in particular American music lovers and the American public in general, register a distinct protest against the proposed and constant efforts of those who are endeavoring to have music and musical performances put into the luxury class.

It would be just as unpatriotic and harmful to deprive our home communities of the benefits and pleasures of music in these trying times as it would be to refuse the same thing to our fighting units.

Music should not be dispensed with or objected to on account of convenience, business reasons or because of thoughtless, war-time classification. Music is a vital essential in the lives of hundreds of thousands of our citizens. To deny it would mean the taking away of one of our strongest and most desirable forces for the up-keep of our spirits, our powers of endurance, our patience, our belief in ultimate success and in depriving us of so many factors necessary for victory it would seem that in the end our enemies would be served and benefited to a much greater extent through such a purpose than we would.

the point. Mr. Farnum's physical might, his face in which there is not one disagreeable line and his power of expression place him in a class by himself. If one uses "all man" when referring to Mr. Farnum, he cannot justly use it in reference to any other actor. The Farnum of the screen is the ideal gentleman. Not as regards clothes but as regards acts. There may also be something in the fact that he never has a role in which he is anything but frank and truthful in the most distressing situations.

"True Blue" prepared for the star and directed by Frank Lloyd shows him as a ranchman, kind hearted to all, but nursing a secret hatred and a contemplated revenge against the English Earl who broke his mother's heart. The story is simplicity itself and so is a most suitable vehicle for Mr. Farnum. But in its simplicity it is power in itself and moves forward in bold and invigorating strokes. There is nothing petty in plot or situations. It deals with elemental passions in a sequence of scenes that grows more interesting with every reel. The story is beautifully set in magnificent Western scenes and has for variations some glimpses of the high spots of the city of Chicago. Mr. Farnum in his best ranch clothes mingling with the cabaret lizards is at once an amusing and admirable figure.

Katherine Adams is seen opposite the star in this picture and she does a little part competently. William Scott as the weakling English youth, Charles Clary as the Earl and Francis Carpenter as the hero when a child give excellent performances.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Brockhurst (Ada Gleason) is deserted by her husband, Gilbert (Charles Clary) when he inherits an earldom in England. She dies shortly afterwards. Years later, Bob (William Farnum), her son, is happy on his ranch, save when a desire for revenge on his father overwhelms him. When the Earl visits Chicago on a mission for his government Bob visits him and denounces him as a scoundrel. His father makes a weak attempt to make amends, but is scorned. The Earl's son by his second wife, Stanley (William Scott), a weakling, visits the town near Bob's ranch to see the sights. In a gambling game he attempts to pass an I. O. U. off on a stranger and is beaten up. Bob, learning his identity, takes him to the ranch, after paying the debt, and with revenge still in his heart forces him to work it off. The youth is mistreated by Bob and the cowboys until Ruth (Kathryn Adams), the school teacher, intervenes in Stanley's behalf. Believing she loves him, Bob sets to work to make a man of him and eventually succeeds. He is surprised to discover after all that Ruth loves him. When the Earl, with a desire to make amends, offers to make Bob his heir he refuses, but sends Stanley back to him—a man.

"Mountain Law"

(Blue Ridge Drama-General—Two Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

THIS story, by L. Case Russell, is old as the hills wherein it is depicted, although it has been garnished in one or two respects. The blood feuds among mountaineers is the theme, and all features of this "pastime" are amply and aptly dealt with. The refining influence of the schoolmarm is played upon, and Bob Clayton, one of the feudists, when asked to tell of something he has done for which he was ashamed, vividly describes a poor shot of his, which failed to reach its mark.

The school teacher tries to impress the other viewpoint upon him, and has but scant success; showing how deeply set are these mountain feuds. There's a pretty little love story running throughout, and the tenderness of the feudist for child and animal is portrayed as passionately as is the vigor with which the feud is prosecuted.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Fanny Bruce (Marion Henry), the new school teacher, hears of the feud between the Claytons and Danceys and essays to smooth matters over by getting the chief feudists to her Sunday school class and learning the evil of such doings. She meets with small success, however, and eventually falls in love with one of them, Bob Clayton (Ned Finley). On their wedding day Bob's brother Dave (Charles Robbins) is killed from ambush. Bob stumbles over the body and learns that Sam Dancey (Richard Neil), a member of the other faction, has been there and starts in pursuit, as also does the sheriff. Bob follows Sam's tracks and kills him in a running fight just as the sheriff shoots from another angle. The wedding party is being held up when the sheriff arrives at the cottage and announces that he shot Sam because he evaded arrest after the ceremony. Bob tries to tell Fanny the truth, but she refuses to listen, simply saying, "I am a Clayton now," and so Bob knows she understands and forgives.

"I'm a Man"

(Judge Brown-General—Two Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

WHEN a high school cadet is taunted by his fellow members and ridiculed in the presence of his best girl on account of his wearing short pants, there is just cause for ire in the youthful bosom. Frank Eisel (Martin Pendleton), apparently about fifteen years of age, is the victim, and in his wrath he declares to his parents, "I'm a man, and I want long pants." His older sister procures them for him.

This is the beginning of a picture brimful of interest, and shows to what lengths a youth imbued with thorough, out and out Americanism will go in defense of his principles.

The continuity of the story is good, the locations selected with a good eye to realism, and every character in the plot is beautifully woven around the boy character.

There is absolutely no overacting, and the whole reflects credit upon Director King W. Vidor.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Frank Eisel declares his patriotism and intention to join some branch of the service. His ardent manner compels attention. On the other hand, his parents, being of German birth, but loyal Americans, are used in a subtle manner by a so-called Frenchman, Jules de Courcey (Wharton Jones), to further his ends as a German spy. And herein lies the plot and denouement. The youngster has a small wireless outfit with which he amuses himself and also instructs himself. The Frenchman, a director of the bank presided over by Frank's father, is looked upon as wealthy and is the parents' chosen suitor for Ruth Eisel's (Ruth Hampton) hand. Ruth, however, favors David Smith (Lloyd Hughes), a young clerk in her father's bank, and a prime favorite with young Frank. De Courcey knows of Frank's wireless, and in informing Simon Eisel (William Davenport) of his desire to use same one night threatens to denounce him as a German spy, for his (the Frenchman's) day had come—a day he had long looked forward to—this day was when he would have a chance to render the Fatherland a service, and that service was to be the burning of the oil fields of the South. Frank's father falls for the ruse and takes the boy for an auto ride that night, but he returns early enough to discover his wireless apparatus being used by the spy, and he deciphers the message. At the risk of life and limb he tears his way to the military guard to give the warning. In a state of complete collapse and with many injuries, he informs the soldiery of the German scheme just in time to save the extensive oil fields. In the meantime Ruth's sweetheart has had his eye on the pseudo Frenchman, and having been made a mmeber of the Secret Service exonerates Ruth's father. The latter now is proud to admit, "My son, you're a man."

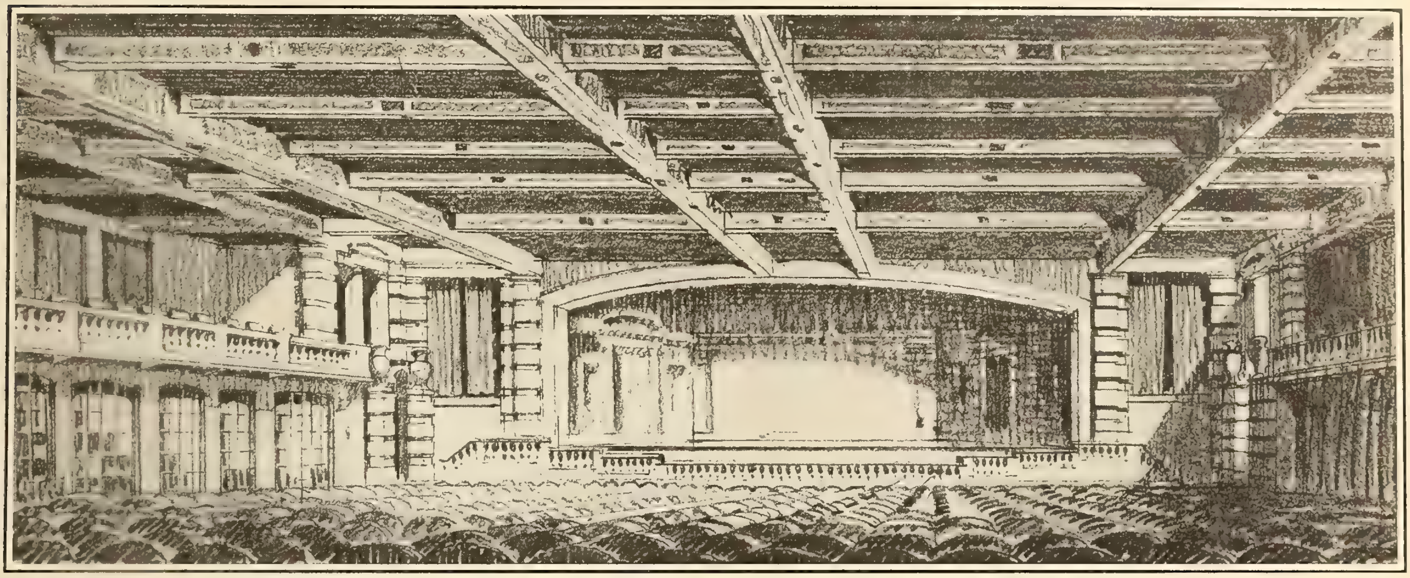
Theatres Worth While



Architect's Drawing of Interior of "The Symphony," New York's Newest Northside Theatre.

Symphony Theatre Nearly Ready to Open

WORK has been progressing so rapidly on the Symphony theatre, New York's newest photoplay palace, that definite announcement of the date of opening is expected within a few days. The building is located at Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, and has undergone a full remodelling to make it one of the finest houses in the country.

The architect's drawing reproduced above gives only a faint idea of the beauty of the interior of the house. An air of cozy comfort is suggested by the substantial lines of the architecture. There is not a post in the place so that an unobstructed view of the screen is gained. All of the seats with the exception of smoking loges are on the lower floor.

Aubrey M. Kennedy, president of the Kennedy Theatres, Inc., and his general manager, Charles L. Cole, have "camped" on the premises day and night and no workman on the building has been more untiring in his efforts to establish a new record in theatre building than has either of these officials.

As a result of the speeding up obtained by their presence, the finishing touches are about to be given to the Symphony, and very soon the opening will be announced along with the inaugural program.

Many innovations in theatrical appointments and equipment are promised as an agreeable surprise to the Symphony patrons. Every detail providing for dignified comfort has been thoroughly studied out and provided. Already applications for reservations for the opening night and for succeeding weeks are pouring in to the Symphony offices.

Handsome New House for Zanesville

ZANESVILLE, O., is to have a handsome new house in the Liberty, which will be ready for opening in the fall. Caldwell H. Brown, assistant cashier of the American Trust and Savings Bank, of Zanesville, has secured a long-term lease of the Schultz Opera House, and this is to be remodelled at an expense of $20,000.

Architect Fred Elliott, who designed the handsome Majestic theatre in Columbus, and the Weller theatre in Zanesville, is making the plans for the alterations. As a matter of fact the Schultz at the time of its erection was called the handsomest house west of New York, and it has not greatly deteriorated since so that the large sum to be spent in the changes should work wonders.

The seating capacity of the house will be between 1,000 and 1,200, reducing somewhat the present capacity of the theatre, because Mr. Brown believes in sacrificing chair room for the comfort of his patrons.

Racine to Have Splendid New House

WITHIN a short time Racine's new theatre, the Rialto, which represents an investment of $220,000, will be in operation.

I. Friedman, owner of the Palace theatre, formed the Rialto Theatre Corporation something over a year and a half ago and secured a perpetual lease on what is known as the Baker Block, a large building situated on Monument Square, a few doors south

Let Us Know When It Is Ready and We Will Tell You the Data We Want

WE are anxious to print pictures and descriptions of the "Worth While Theatres" in this department—especially the new houses. However, with the present delays that are encountered in the shipment of building materials, it is impossible for us to keep any accurate account of the days for future openings and we invite managers to send in photographs of such new houses, both interior and exterior views together with description and we will then send a blank for the additional data that we need.

Established houses which have not been pictured in the NEWS are invited to share these columns. This matter is intended not only to give an account of the better houses, no matter the size, but also to give hints which may prove of value in future construction and equipment.

of the Palace theatre, in the very heart of Racine. A like lease was obtained on a piece of land just in the rear of this building, and the corporation then made known its intention of putting up a theatre building. Construction work was begun in November.

The new theatre, which was designed by Martin Tullegren & Sons, Milwaukee, will have a seating capacity of two thousand. It consists of a main floor, mezzanine balcony of thirty boxes, each seating ten persons, and a balcony above. The theatre proper, eighty by one hundred forty feet in size, is situated on the land at the rear of the Baker Block and will be reached by a hundred-foot lobby running through that building. A foyer, with marble floor and walls, will run the full width of the theatre at the inner end of this lobby, while a canopy and huge sign will adorn the outer end at the entrance. Arch doorways, with copper doors, will lead into the main floor.

Mural paintings will decorate the walls of the theatre, and the proscenium arch will be a thing of beauty. Air shafts have been constructed in the walls and blow fans will draw outside air into a pit along the sides of the building whence it will enter the theatre. The place will be air heated, the same air pits to be used in conjunction with enormous scroll-work registers to distribute the heated air. Over the air pits, which run along each side wall of the theatre, aisles lead toward the rear, becoming tunnel exits opening on Lake Park at the rear of the theatre, facing Lake Michigan, where there is plenty of space for parking automobiles.

The masonwork of the theatre has already been completed, and work is rapidly going forward on the roof, which is supported by four huge steel trusses which span the entire building. Over forty-one thousand dollars' worth of structural steel has gone into this building. Although the Rialto is intended for a motion picture house de luxe, a large stage, thirty by eighty feet in size, has been constructed in order that the theatre may be equipped to run any kind of theatrical performance, up to and including grand opera, on occasion.

Two years ago, Mr. Friedman, convinced that the motion picture business was a big thing, gave up part of his department store for use as a theatre and opened the Palace in the spring of 1916. Since that time the Palace has run the cream of the many pictures on the market, and the people of Racine have shown their appreciation of the quality of the Palace programs by patronizing it well. Some idea of the volume of the business which this small house, seating only about eight hundred, does can be gained from the fact that it paid in war tax from November to March over four thousand dollars. Nearly every evening in the week, a crowd of theatre-goers may be seen standing in the Palace lobby waiting their chance to enter.

This bothered Mr. Friedman. With such an overflow, he figured, there certainly must be room for another theatre in Racine. He also believed it an imposition to keep the public standing in the lobby. For these reasons, he undertook the big proposition of putting over the new theatre.

The Rialto, which will be opened late in the summer, is intended as a motion picture theatre to be run somewhat on the plan of its famous namesake, and will show pictures of the quality the Palace now runs but bigger ones than that small house can handle profitably.

The Palace theatre has been taken over by the Rialto Theatre

Directory of New Theatres

ILLINOIS

The old Parkway theatre, Clark street and Diversey Parkway, Chicago, remodeled and rebuilt, was reopened Saturday, May 4, as the Drury Lane theatre. It has a seating capacity of slightly less than 1,000. As the Parkway theatre it was one of the first big neighborhood motion picture theatres in Chicago. It has been dark alternately for more than a year. The owners, Grossman and Mitchell, have spent a large sum rebuilding it and have placed W. R. Riddell, an old-time theatrical manager, in charge as manager. Mr. Riddell's selection of "Hearts or Diamonds?" for the opening gives that production the unique distinction of having opened two Chicago theatres. "Hearts or Diamonds?" was booked by Andrew Karzas, managing director of the new Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, for opening day. The production was scheduled for first run at the Madison Square, Irving Park, Kedzie Annex, Harper and Gold, Chicago neighborhood houses, and for the Alcazar, a Chicago loop theatre.

Philip Cohn and Joseph Erber, theatrical men of East St. Louis, announce that construction work will shortly be commenced upon a theatre building at Collinsville and Illinois avenues, East St. Louis. The new theatre, which will be managed by Erber, will have a seating capacity of 2,214. It will cost $225,000. The site has a 200-foot front on Collinsville avenue and 153 on Illinois avenue. For the several years Erber has managed the Erber theatre, 219 Collinsville avenue, Cohn also owned an interest in the theatre. The lease on the property expires next year, and it is believed the new building will be completed before then.

INDIANA

June 1 is now the date set for the dedication of the new theatre at Eighth street and Wabash avenue, Terre Haute. Weather conditions and a change in the plans of the theatre, which call for a stage about 68 feet in height, 44 feet higher than the original plans called for, is causing the delay for a few weeks. General Manager A. F. Brentlinger says: "The contract for chairs for the theatre has been let to Messrs. Haywood and Wakefield, of Chicago. They will be of the regulation theatre size, twenty inches in width, upstairs and down. The chairs will be furnished in gray leather and upholstered in line with the color scheme of the house. "We will have a stage 21 x 32 feet, six ordinary dressing rooms and one large dressing room."

IOWA

Hopkinson is to have a new motion picture theatre. The Root Building, recently vacated, has been leased for a term of years by E. L. Belknap, and the work of remodeling is already under way.

M. H. Peterson is erecting a new motion picture theatre at Strahan.

KANSAS

Work has been commenced on the erection of the new Wichita theatre by the Peerless Theatre Company. The building is to cost $75,000. J. H. Cooper, of Topeka, is president of the company, and the location of the structure is 308-310 East Douglas avenue. Its dimensions will be 50 x 140 feet, three stories in height, with ornamental terra cotta front. C. C. McCollister will be the manager of the new house.

MASSACHUSETTS

The new Roslindale theatre and business block being erected at the corner of South and Washington streets, Jamaica Plains, is nearly completed. Opening announcement will be made soon.

MONTANA

The Missoula Theatre Company contemplates the erection of a motion picture theatre at Missoula, and bids are now being sought, according to plans and specifications as prepared by Architect Ole Bakke. Gilbert J. Heyfron is manager of the company behind the project.

Peter Arena has purchased the old City Hall building at Whitefish and is having same remodeled for the installation of a modern motion picture theatre.

NEW YORK

James G. Brownlow, secretary of the Binghamton Chamber of Commerce, is authority for the statement that a large motion picture theatre to cost about $225,000 will be erected in the central part of the city of Binghamton this year.

PENNSYLVANIA

C. F. Yeagley has opened his new brick theatre at Confluence. The building will seat 233 people, and he has selected "The Liberty" as the name.

Farrell is to have a new, up-to-date motion picture and vaudeville theatre. Sharon men are interested, and the location will be on Idaho street.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Blunt is to have a picture show again. R. E. Leeper has rented the room in the town hall for this purpose, which has recently been remodeled and changes made to conform to requirements.

WASHINGTON

A contract for the construction of an auditorium for the display of motion pictures at the State Fair Grounds, Yakima, has been awarded to E. McWilliams for $8,940.

VIRGINIA

Dunn and Fuller have just completed and opened "The Queen," at Norton, a theatre to be devoted to the silent drama. It has a seating capacity of 350.

Attention: Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker.

Dear Mr. Rothacker,

We desire to express our sincere thanks to you for having so admirably taken care of our requirements in the printing of the Charlie Chaplin release - "A Dog's Life".

The Members of the Circuit are highly pleased with the results as shown on the screen and we feel deeply indebted to you for so promptly supplying every Member with the required number of prints before the scheduled time, in accordance with our arrangement.

Turning out over two hundred prints of a three reel picture in the short time that you have done this work certainly establishes a new record for speed, particularly when the fact is taken into consideration that the development and photography is up to the highest stardard in every way.

Yours very truly,

The World's Greatest Stories

are brought to life on the screen in

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures

(Nationally Advertised)

AN immense organization of men and women of unusual literary talent is buying, adapting and creating photoplays for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

No price is too high to pay for a good play. No exertion is too great if it will bring a story of dramatic value.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation believes—as every exhibitor does—that the story has got to be good.

Here are a few of the men and women who wrote the stories for the Paramount and Artcraft Pictures released in March, April and May:

"The Golden Goal"

The Story of a Man From the Dregs Who Achieved Conscience, Honor and Love

VITAGRAPH

by Lawrence
McCloskey

Directed by Paul
Scardon

Did It Prove Worth While?

HE had been a rough, unlettered seaman, brawling in slop-chest togs along the waterfront dives. And then his sleeping caveman soul was awakened by a woman.

To Big John Doran this pampered society beauty was his polestar. And because he could not see the mockery of it all, he set out to become her "equal"—to study, to advance, to become rich, that he might claim her.

But Big John Doran learned much that was not in books. He thought he had discovered a heart of gold—he found it a heart of steel. He had set out to climb to the level of his "wonder woman." And, suddenly, he found himself on moral heights that looked down upon her sort.

Yet there was another woman who had believed in him and helped him along the stony way. Should he turn back—back to the waiting arms of the humble girl of his own station?

Big, masterful Harry Morey is at his best in this latest Blue Ribbon Feature. And prominent in the support of the screen's most virile star are Florence Deshon, Jean Paige, Arthur Donaldson, Robert Gaillard, Denton Vane, Bernard Siegal and other Vitagraph favorites.

SYRACUSE, N. Y. MAY 7TH, 1918

"'Over the Top' the greatest picture ever made. I played it for two consecutive weeks to capacity business. This is the longest consecutive run of any attraction in the history of Syracuse. Some of my patrons returned four and five times. Am arranging for a return engagement. Wish to compliment Vitagraph on its splendid publicity campaign which was of immense assistance."

THE men and women of our profession have been entrusted with a great responsibility in the American Red Cross War Fund Drive, which opens on May 20th and continues until midnight, May 27th.

Recognizing that our profession is the most potent agency to reach the hearts of the people and stir them to deeds of patriotism and generosity, the managers of this great drive have assigned to us the work of gathering millions from the masses during that week.

We accept the responsibility and hail it as a great opportunity for patriotic service.

Let every man and woman of our profession, every artist and every manager, join hands to send a horde of dollars to supply loving care for our fighting men and to heal the wounded of "No Man's Land."

Let us give generously our own money and our time and labors to collect the money of the millions with whom we come in daily contact.

If we are to measure up to the traditions of our profession and fulfill the trust which President Woodrow Wilson and his fellow officers of the American Red Cross have placed upon us, we must have the united, one hundred percent cooperation of every man and woman of the stage and pictureland.

The Red Cross managers in giving us this opportunity and this responsibility recognized that the greatest efficiency and the greatest sums of money to be collected would result from our unified efforts.

Therefore, the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team was created, and to that team, exclusively, was entrusted the work of raising money from the members of our profession, its allied industries, and the million or more people whom we daily entertain in the theatres of this city.

The Red Cross managers have placed this responsibility upon us and have asked that the men and women of our profession stand unitedly behind our own team.

It has been agreed that the best interests of the great cause for which we are all working will be served if all benefits and all efforts to raise funds through the aid of our profession are handled exclusively by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team.

We ask all members of our profession, in the interest of efficient work, to adhere strictly to the terms of this agreement. We ask you to give every hour of your time, every ounce of your effort, from now until the end of the Drive, so that we may send a message to the President of the United States, and to the hundred million people of this nation, that we are the most powerful agency of the land in carrying on patriotic work, and that we are "one hundred percent essential" in the hour of our country's need.

TRIANGLE

WHAT IS A FILM EXCHANGE ?

A FILM Exchange is an establishment operated primarily for the benefit and convenience of Exhibitors. Without Exhibitors there would be no need for a Film Exchange.

This is the principle upon which TRIANGLE Exchanges are conducted. Each and every individual in a TRIANGLE Exchange is made to understand that his future with TRIANGLE is entirely dependent upon the careful consideration that he gives to each Exhibitor.

It is the aim of each TRIANGLE Exchange to give an Exhibitor more attention, better service—in fact more for his money than he can obtain elsewhere. The class of service given an Exhibitor is entirely independent of whether he pays $7.50 or $75.00 for a picture.

It is never too much trouble to carefully and courteously serve an Exhibitor in a TRIANGLE Exchange. Any reasonable request or demand of an Exhibitor will be given immediate and painstaking attention whether in the regular course of business or in a particularly urgent emergency.

Any misunderstandings or difficulties that arise must be settled at once and to the entire satisfaction of the Exhibitor. Disgruntled or dissatisfied customers are not tolerated by TRIANGLE.

The development of efficient service is of as much importance to an Exhibitor as to TRIANGLE. A closer cooperation between Exhibitors and TRIANGLE Exchanges means a big saving in time, labor and money to every TRIANGLE Exhibitor. Criticisms or suggestions from Exhibitors towards better service in TRIANGLE Exchanges are always welcomed.

Remember the cooperative service for which TRIANGLE stands, whether you are a TRIANGLE Exhibitor or whether, like so many other Exhibitors, you have about decided to run TRIANGLE.

FROM the unusual interest displayed in the announcement that Maurice Tourneur is to make his first independent picture the Drury Lane melodrama "Sporting Life", it is very evident that the exhibitors and open market distributors who have exploited Mr. Tourneur's picture "The Whip" are looking forward to as great a success in "Sporting Life." Gauging the future by the record Mr. Tourneur has made, it is reasonable to say that they will not be disappointed. Mr. Tourneur thanks the trade for its encouragement and assures it that "Sporting Life" will represent his best efforts. Details as to method of release will be announced in due time.

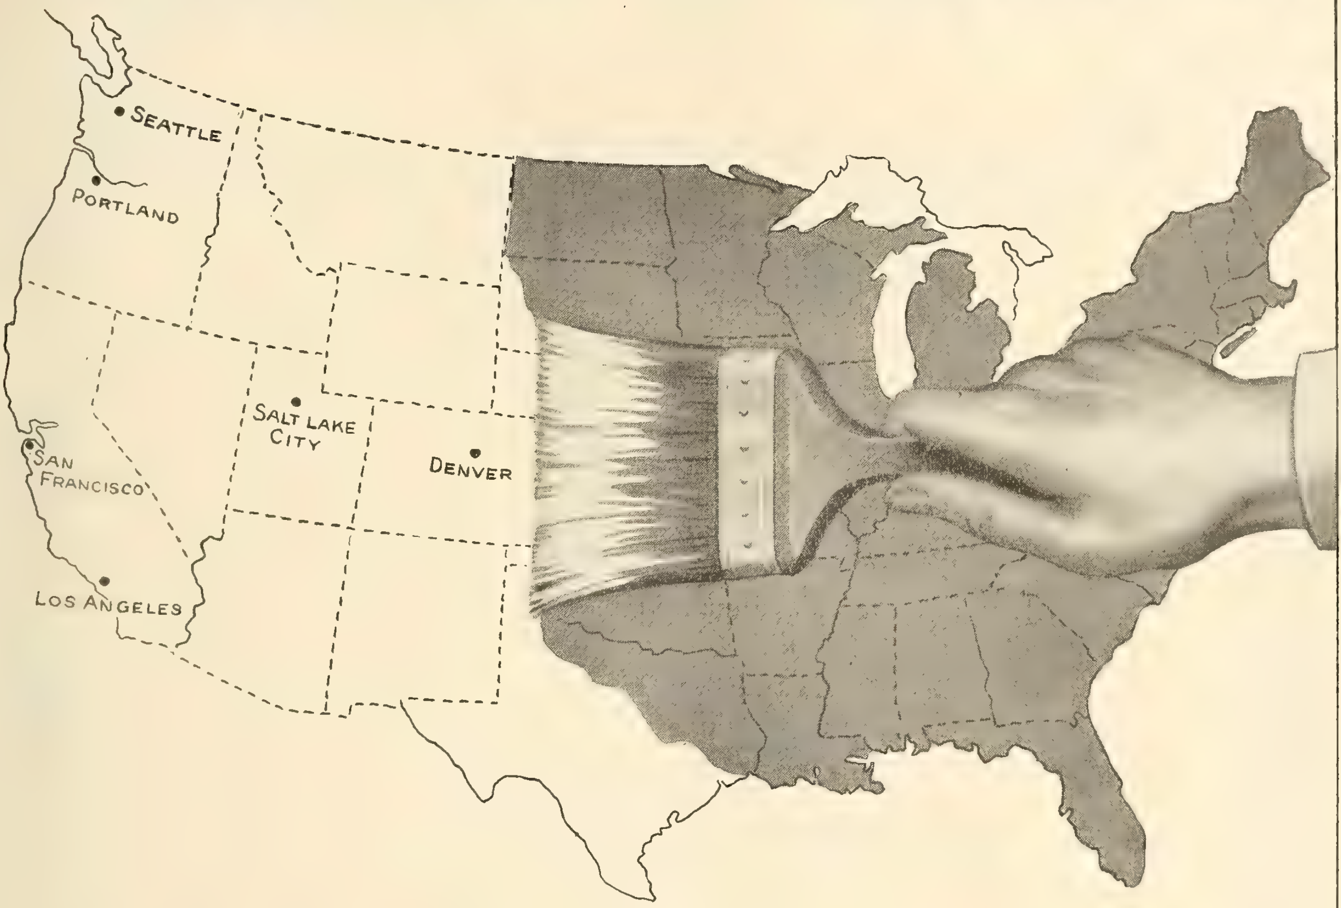
DEVOTION TO AN IDEAL



THE HODKINSON CO-PARTNERSHIP PLAN NOW EMBRACES HALF OF THE UNITED STATES

Any success, to be permanent, must put the method of its progress, ahead of its speed.

The expression, "Rome was not built in a day" has more significance in business, then its common usage indicates.

The survival of the fittest is not the survival of the fastest. It is the test of the sturdiest—the most inherently strong.

Ideals are greater than ideas. They persist. It took generations to complete the pyramids—an ideal product of its kind which has withstood the tests of centuries.

The Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan has not been conceived for a day.

Striving for permanency we prefer the steady, healthy growth that overcomes all difficulties and transforms obstacles into successes.

We are devoted to a practical ideal, and the proof of this devotion is found in the map above, which shows that already half of the United States has been embraced by the Hodkinson plan—and the area is extending daily.

As the ancient said, "Things that are difficult to create are equally difficult to destroy." Permanency, progress and equity summarize the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan.

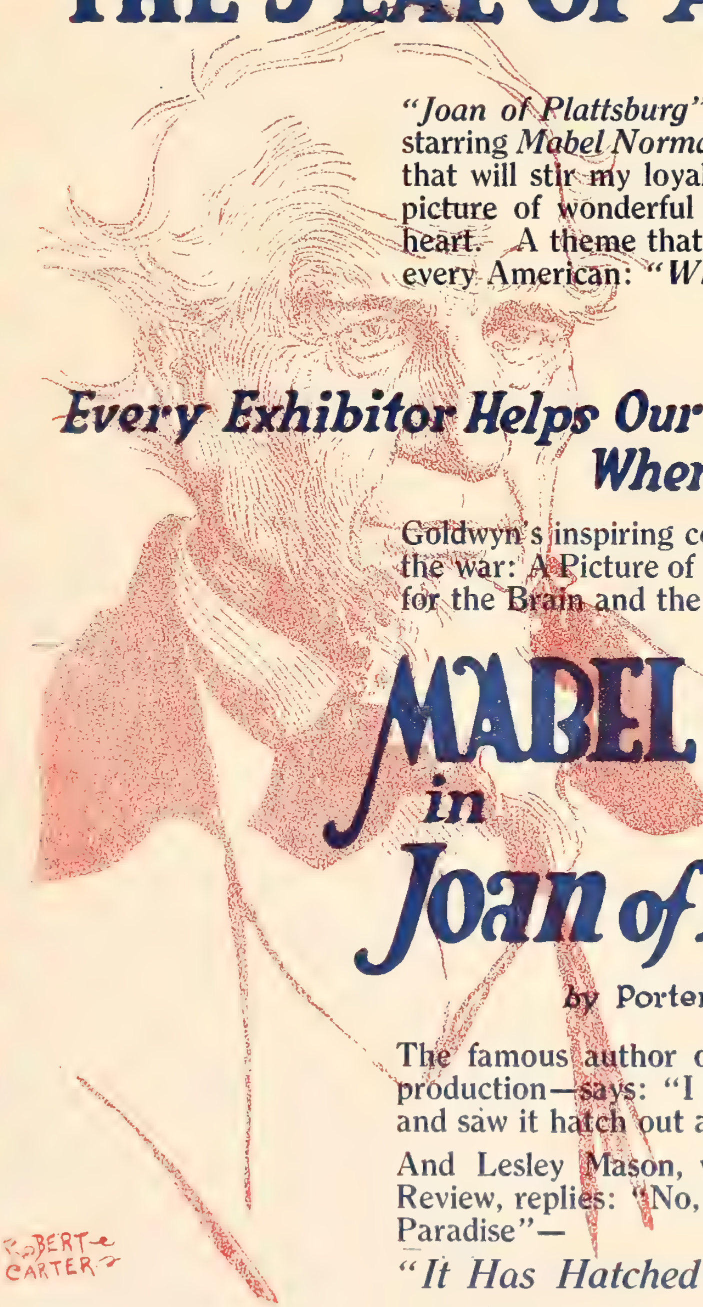
THE SEAL OF APPROVAL



"Joan of Plattsburg" by Porter Emerson Browne—and starring Mabel Normand—is a motion picture production that will stir my loyal millions to their very depths. A picture of wonderful patriotism; a story of the human heart. A theme that answers the question on the lips of every American: "What can I do to help my country?"

The famous author of this story—watching his screen production—says: "I feel like the hen that laid an egg and saw it hatch out a Bird of Paradise."

And Lesley Mason, writing in the Exhibitors' Trade Review, replies: "No, it has not hatched out a bird of Paradise"—

"It Has Hatched Out an American Eagle."

An exhibitor must use his imagination and enthusiasm in presenting this production. He should rally around him every patriotic agency in his town.

"A Particularly Valuable Picture Right Now—"

SO writes Helen Pollock, daughter of the brilliant dramatist-critic, of Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," voicing the opinion of the New York Telegraph. And she adds: "It is not only the best Goldwyn picture, but one of the greatest productions ever made for the screen."

"'Joan of Plattsburg' contains a quantity of combined pathos and fantasy that makes it tremendously different from the general run of war pictures," says Peter Milne in The Motion Picture News. "This production contains a 'touch' that makes it intensely interesting."

"'Joan of Plattsburg' is meant to typify the American woman's desire to do her share in the great war . . . . . It will win an immediate and hearty response from patriotic picture patrons all over the country." This is the verdict of Edward Weitzel, the keen and cautious critic of The Moving Picture World.

"How even the humblest may do something for this country in the world crisis is the theme of 'Joan of Plattsburg'" says Samuel M. Weller, editor of The New York Review. "It is a stirring comedy-drama with a fine patriotic background . . . . . Exceptionally fine . . . . . Intensely human . . . . . A complete triumph for Mabel Normand . . . . . The patriotic value of this picture is unusually high."

"As 'Joan of Plattsburg' Mabel Normand has the biggest role of her screen career," says The New York Dramatic Mirror. "The very name of this production should prove an inspiration to exhibitors throughout the world."

"A fine thought is behind 'Joan of Plattsdurg'" says Jolo in Variety. "It will thrill picture patrons everywhere . . . . . A pretentious production."

George T. Pardy, expressing the verdict of The Exhibitor's Trade Review, says: "This picture abounds in spectacular scenes and thrills calculated to arouse patriotic enthusiasm . . . . . It gives every indication of being a valuable box-office attraction."

Plank No. 2

Leaving Good Enough Alone

THE Affiliated Distributors' purpose is evolutionary, rather than revolutionary.

Its aim is to develop, not to destroy—to broaden the scope of the exhibitors' booking associations now operating, not to absorb them.

The AFFILIATED is not a commercial enterprise. It is a movement—the outgrowth of the success already achieved by exhibitors' booking associations.

To these associations, the AFFILIATED owes its existence. They have been the pathfinders, the trail blazers. They are the ones that have demonstrated that co-operative booking is practical and profitable by actually providing their members with better pictures, at a third to a half former prices,

Working independent of one another, however, these associations have been limited in the number and quality of the pictures which they could obtain. Furthermore, they have been prevented from securing all the price concessions which their combined booking power would have earned for them. Manufacturers could not count on this market to cover the country.

The AFFILIATED has come into the field to unite the potentialities and strength of these associations.

Dependent upon them for its support, the AFFILIATED must deal justly with them, or go out of business. They have the whip hand. They maintain their complete independence, combining their booking strength only, for the purpose of securing a consistent, dependable supply of pictures, at prices which they cannot obtain individually.

They run the AFFILIATED. They dictate, not only their own policies, but the policies of this central organization. They pick their own pictures. They get all their own profits, and share in the profis of the central organization, as well.

The AFFILIATED simply multiplies the power of each individual booking association, by that of all of them.

Could any plan be simpler, fairer, surer?

The "AFFILIATED" Platform

1—To insure EXHIBITOR MANAGEMENT and CONTROL in very fact, as well as promise.

2—To in no way disturb existing booking organizations, but rather to encourage them.

3—To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its OWN control.

4—To maintain all the benefits of "Open Booking," and at the same time provide a CONSISTENT and DEPENDABLE schedule of releases.

5—To secure, not only ALL the concessions in rental prices which the combined buying power of exhibitors will earn, but the MAJOR SHARE of all excess profits as well.

6—To distribute the cost of all productions on a fair and business basis to each booking association, and to every member of such an association.

7—To regulate expenditures, according to sound business methods and to protect exhibitors against excessive salaries, extravagant advertising and pretentious executive offices.

8—To arrange, on behalf of the booking associations, now existing, and such others as shall be formed, for an affiliation with a national, or central clearing house, upon terms that are JUST and EQUITABLE to all concerned.

A FEW OF THE MANY TRIBUTES TO AND ENDORSEMENTS OF THE PLAN

OF THE

United Picture Theatres of America

INCORPORATED

A. J. Gilligham, one of Michigan's most prominent showmen, in an interview published in the Michigan Film Review, stated:

> "I know from inside information that the United Picture Theatres will go over, as some of the biggest men in the picture business are preparing to affiliate with the movement. The books are open and the whole plan is laid out along co-operative lines with a view of giving exhibitors reduced film rental—nothing is to be concealed from exhibitors—it's just as simple as the A B C language."

The Exhibitors' Herald of Chicago, in an editorial published in the issue of April 27, asserted:

> "Among the booking circuits and similar associations that have been advanced the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., gives greatest promise of reaching its goal. It has much to commend it in the way of a definite and set plan and an organization that includes in its personnel a number of men of demonstrated ability in film affairs."

L. W. Brophy, secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association of Oklahoma, writes:

> "I wish to state that I have investigated the United Picture Theatres of America co-operative profit sharing proposition and I find the personnel of the company high class. I have investigated through my banking connections their depository, The Commercial Trust Company of New York and want to say: if you had $500,000 to place on deposit with a bank, you could not pick a more solid institution."

The Pittsburgh Moving Picture Bulletin, in its issue of May 1, declared editorially:

> "The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has interested many prominent men of the exhibiting side of the industry and has a good chance of success."

An Open Letter To "Wid"

To Wid Gunning,
Publisher " Wids " Daily,
71-73 West 44th St.,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Wid:

I have just read with much interest your criticism of trade papers which serves to introduce your new daily (first copy at hand, by the way, and it certainly is readable).

Some things you say against the trade press are right, I believe; in other respects, I think, you are wrong. And I'm going to refer candidly to both sides of the matter in another letter.

In the meantime I want to put some frank questions to you. I know you will answer as frankly. And we'll give a page like this next week for your reply.

When you came back from your recent trip of investigation you said to me, as I recall: " Well, I've got to hand it to you. I'm not much for trade papers, you know; but I'll say that wherever I found an exhibitor reading one it was Motion Picture News."

You said another trade paper was weak and another was nowhere in sight.

Isn't that what you said?

And isn't it also true, Wid, that you found Motion Picture News at every theatre you visited.

Frankly, wasn't each copy being read and used? Go ahead, we'll print your answer.

And finally, how do you account for our subscription receipts for the first quarter of 1918, as published, of nearly $4,000,00, mostly renewals. (Records here at our office.)

Does an exhibitor pay for and keep on paying for something he doesn't use?

All right, Wid! Your turn next.

Sincerely,

W A Johnston

Volume 17. No. 21 May 25, 1918

Germany Proposes—!

GERMANY has prepared for a film war.

And Germany, we already know, has a way of preparing for war.

Germany has made a trust of its film companies, backed and financed by the German government. Theatres are being acquired right and left throughout all of Central Europe.

Germany proposes to Germanize all Central Europe—through the one most effective, modern means, the film.

Germanize means not merely the spreading of German Kultur, but the introduction of German products, such as agricultural implements, clothing, foodstuffs, chemicals—what not?

Two thousand negatives have been made by the German film trust—ready and waiting. Germany is afraid of American films—admittedly—because American films are immeasurably better.

But Germany doesn't care because Germany has organization, backed by the German government's deep appreciation of the publicity power and commercial utilization of the film.

Germany intends, if possible, to keep American films out of Germany—and other countries.

Germany will go into South America—and other countries, and give its Trust films away, if necessary. Its Government will stand the loss.

But favors will be asked in return. Perhaps the purchase of German-made projection machines—or any kind of trade reciprocity, mostly outside of the film business.

Thus does Germany propose to break down after-the-war economic trade barriers.

Through Films!

Read the facts in the interview in this issue with Frederic Burlingham.

Copies of this interview have been released in advance by Motion Picture News to all the big dailies in this country.

What does this government propose to do?

What will the U. S. Chamber of Commerce do?

What does the motion picture industry propose to do?

And above all, when will this country see the truth—that the film today is the greatest offering modern science has made to the spreading of the propaganda of world democracy and to the expansion of America's commerce and industry?

The Pictures' Opportunity

OUR hat is off to William Fox!

It was only natural that he should be asked to head the motion picture and theatrical drive in Greater New York for the Red Cross War Fund, after his spirited and successful leadership of previous charitable drives in connection with the war.

In replying to the Red Cross Committee, however, he has done a very fine thing, for which this industry owes him thanks.

He seized the opportunity to make certain and conclusive the picture theatre's full claims to recognition as a force in making public morale and in bringing its charitable and the committees of the allied motion picture and theatrical industries.

Heretofore, noticeably in the Third Liberty Loan drive, district committees were appointed and in their subdivisions the aid of the theatre, while obviously highly thought of, was subsidized to the extent that individuals and companies in other industries got credit for the work done and the facilities contributed by the theatre and the picture star or manager, let alone the peculiar power and publicity of the motion picture itself.

Mr. Fox gave to the general committee as a condition of his acceptance the stipulation that this unfair status be set aside. All of his demands, and they were definite and comprehensive, were agreed to.

As it now stands all monies collected in or in front of the theatres of Greater New York will be credited only to the allied motion picture and theatrical industries.

So also will all monies collected from the individuals, corporations, and employes within these industries; and from the businesses directly allied with the studios and theatres.

Moreover, the theatre benefits and all activities to the above ends will be governed solely by the industries' own committee.

Thus we have, for the first time, unity and clear coordination in a war drive; unity of purpose and action; clear-cut and full credit for results to be accomplished.

We deserve this credit; and we need it.

There is, in our opinion, no great danger that this industry will be classed by the government as a non-essential.

But should this happen it will only be through ignorance at Washington of what the screen has done and can do; of what a tremendous force it is in the whole work of war and war charities; of how necessary it will be in the great reconstruction era to follow the war.

These important facts should and must be made known.

The opportunity is here; let every firm, every individual put his shoulder to the wheel. Let the opportunity commandeer you. Give your time or your money, or both—freely!

You are working not only for the greatest of charities, the most blessed, but you are also doing your best for the motion picture and yourself.

Speaking Editorially:

Extending the Movement

IT is only regrettable that the unity of purpose and action achieved by the picture industry in connection with the Red Cross war drive is limited to Greater New York.

There will be great work done by picture theatres all over the country. Their activities, the monies they collect, should be made known and made part of the total credited to the industry and to the fame of the screen.

Benefits have already been held. Theatres everywhere have undoubtedly been asked by district and local committees to lend themselves to this greatest of all charities. It is too late now to secure unity. The State Leagues of Exhibitors might have effected this for each state as it has been accomplished in New York City.

We can only suggest this: If each theatre participating in the Red Cross drive will send us a post card, giving a total of receipts collected Motion Picture News will publish the amount and the theatre's name in an honor list and see that the facts are made known and filed with the American Red Cross.

Send the post cards in.

Make this contribution to the lasting honor of the industry.

Dead or Alive?

ABOUT the most foolish question we know of, the most useless to give time or type to, is that mossy one: "Is the State rights market dead?"

The State rights market, like the whole picture market, is alive if it gets good pictures, and dead if it gets poor ones.

That's the whole answer! Only the pictures must be exceptionally good.

Our friend, Joe Lee, who certainly knows the picture market, answers the question with a story.

Two men stood on the edge of a woods in the centre of which was a gold mine.

One man who had been in, said "There's a gold mine in there. I'm going in and work it."

Said the other fellow: "I can't see it," and walked away.

In Again Out Again

THE New York Times, in its usual Monday column of photoplay reviews, jumps suddenly away from the bills of the three big photoplay houses and refers enthusiastically and at length to "Masks and Faces," which the critic found on the Saturday night bill of Loew's New York theatre.

The audience, says the critic, "which undoubtedly went because it was Saturday night and not because of any special attraction for them in the modestly advertised feature film, saw a photoplay in which probably more men and women of note connected with the English stage appeared than in any previous screen production."

He goes on to refer to the origin of the photoplay—the famous Peg Woffington story; to the appearance of such celebrities as Barrie, Shaw, Pinero, Hare; and expresses amazement that a film of such exceptional cast and origin should step in and out of New York unheralded to New York's educated classes and into oblivion as part only of a one night's bill at a "movie fan" house.

It is amazing, Mr. Critic, but such are the ridiculous mechanics of the film industry.

We take occasion here to recommend this photoplay for special audiences and proper advertising. By "special" we mean the cultured people who exist in sufficient quantities most everywhere.

Misplaced Ardor

A NEW YORK exhibitor tells of the four-minute man who, in the heat of his address in this particular theatre, declared:

"Instead of coming to these places of amusement you should stay at home—save the money for Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps. You shouldn't be here."

Our idea of a four-minute man in need of a stop second watch and a gag.

If it weren't for the motion picture as an institution and the courtesy of the individual managers this four-minute man would be wailing:

"If there were only some way of reaching the people with the message of the war! They don't read the papers, they won't read pamphlets, they can't afford Broadway shows. What can we do?"

That's what he might be saying. But as it is the picture and patriotic managers are supplying him his audiences and are also supplying those audiences with pictured messages of far more value than his words.

The "Specials" and Summer

"SUMMER is coming on," say the pessimists when you ask them how the film outlook is.

"Summer won't make a bit of difference," say the exhibitors who have had recent experience with such "specials" as "The Kaiser," "My Four Years in Germany," "The Unbeliever," "Revelation," "The Bluebird" and "Tarzan of the Apes."

And we think the latter are right. Give exhibitors, as Frank Carroll says in an interview in this issue, a product which has selling points and the exhibitor will sell it.

An Answer to Our Call

DO you remember that some weeks ago a film salesman asked us to answer the question, "Why are all film salesmen called pirates?"

And do you remember also that we passed up the job of answering—and even said that we did not know that all salesmen were called pirates?

Then we asked our readers to help us out and settle the salesman's worries. One veteran showman has already obliged us in more than interesting fashion. His article appears in this issue.

You will want to read it. It's on Page 3078.

QUICK action on the part of Canadian film men seems to have saved the day. It has at least secured modifications which remove the almost prohibitive import tax originally intended.

But since the changes seemed only to result in different forms of taxes to attain the same end, it would still appear that the outlook for producers and exhibitors in the Canadian field is far from rosy. However, reel taxes, and such methods, by their indirectness, have not the drastic character of an excessive import tax. For one thing a reel tax is only collected on films that are working and bringing in money, while high import duties tax all films regardless of their possible financial prospects, thus taking on the semblance of an embargo.

Speaking of embargoes on imports—can you imagine a laboratory telling a customer that he would have to improve the quality of his photography or take the subjects to some other laboratory? Watterson Rothacker did that a few weeks ago to a good steady account. And what is more—he didn't tell us about it himself.

This may sound like an ad, but we just had to tell you about it to show how fast this old game of ours is moving.

THIS paragraph is going to be a wail against the boss. Just think of the joy we could have and the spice we could give this page writing about that Teutonic film octopus which is preparing to drive America out of the European market after the war. The story, from the lips of Frederic Burlingham, makes reading that you don't want to miss. You'll find it as soon as you turn this page.

After you have read it—what are you going to do about it?

"You" in this case refers to the manufacturers—members of the National Association.

Which brings to mind an unpleasant thought. We suppose that with a National Exposition under way such an unimportant little trifle as the German Film Trust will have to step aside.

Of course, we will be told that the Exposition is the place to organize the offensive, but—

Have you ever seen anything organized at a picture exposition?

The boss also took from us the opportunity to sing our own song of praise for the two-fisted way in which William Fox has jumped into the Red Cross drive. But there's one thing we can say: Don't forget that every time William Fox takes on his shoulders a double load of altruistic work, there's a husky lot of toil wished on Winfield Sheehan.

The present is no exception. Just now Winfield Sheehan is a regular twin-cylinder Red Cross engine. More power to him!

WE are going to watch with interest the results of Willard Mack's acquaintance as scenario editor of Goldwyn.

Brother Mack, from his Salt Lake days down through his recent—and current—stage and screen successes has been a prolific writer and a sure-fire one.

"Sure-fire" in the theatre and literary sense of the phrase—that is, frequently reaching great heights, but always up to standard. Willard Mack possesses the entertainment sense—that knack which enables a great writer to be at least entertaining even in his hack moments.

It will be entertaining to watch the career of Willard Mack—Scenario Editor.

PHYSICAL CULTURE NOTE: Al Lichtman plays tennis every morning from 7 to 8; Bill Kalem Wright is running home early evenings to harden his muscles bossing a New Jersey ranch, estate or farm; Arthur Leslie still jaunts to the Y. M. C. A. several times a week and any number of picture personalities are looking over the golf sticks.

Don't know what it's all about but just to get in the swim we're thinking of trying Kelly pool ourselves. Yes—trying.

JAMES SHELDON only sat in the President's chair out at Mutual's Chicago office long enough to be sure that it was a good fit, and then boarded a train bringing him to New York for a hustling week.

Together with his other activities of the week, it is understood that President Sheldon's visit is the first step to a re-establishment of the Mutual headquarters in New York.

Thus does time and "the center of the film world" move!

Welcome to our midst, Jerry.

Ran into "First National" Williams, "National" Reichenbach and "Ivan" Chadwick at one table in the Astor last Saturday. Learned that "Tarzan of the Apes," "My Four Years in Germany" and Chaplin are running a dead heat at breaking box-office records. And as we left Harry's insistent voice asserted that "Tarzan" had taken to breaking the others records.

Never thought, until we struck the sidewalk, that modest Mr. Chadwick hadn't even mentioned his own picture. So we'll do it for him here, in small caps, too: "GRACE VALENTINE IN "THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN."

IF you want five minutes of zippy reading turn to Page 3089 and read a letter Jerome Beatty wrote to Dr. Frank Crane, well-known brother to the sob sister.

The doctor wandered into a picture show recently and then fell upon us of the picture industry with minnenwerfers, whiz-bangs and what-nots.

If the doctor hadn't sharpened his pencil so finely—and he is incisively witty—that it dismembered his logic, all might have been well. There is room for improvement in many, many picture stories. But Dr. Crane just closed his eyes and swung wildly—yes, wildly.

The doctor's style is so good that his articles make most interesting heading—provided one forgets what he says. But Jerome Beatty's letter is so good that you want to be sure to remember what he says— for it will come in handy on frequent occasions.

For a closing paragraph we have a line contributed by a reviewer signing as Antony Anderson in the Los Angeles Times of April 30. The picture reviewed is "Woman and Wife," and the line reads: "Alice Brady is Jane. . . . A better actress for the part than 'Diamond Jim's daughter could not be imagined."

Yes—and Douglas Fairbanks is the man who makes the scales.

Is a Salesman a Pirate?

Exhibitor John C. Green of Canada Also Wants to Know Other Things About Picture "Peddlers" Who Mix "Bull" with Business. Maybe He Has the Right Idea. What Do You Think?

EXHIBITOR JOHN C. GREEN, one of the real, genuine veterans of the industry, and who is now manager of the Temple theatre in Galt, Ont., Canada, has profited by the experience he has undergone in the business.

But there are still a few things he would like to know, and a few things he wants to get "off his mind" through the medium of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

So a further introduction to his letter, which follows, is unnecessary:

"I am a constant and very thorough reader of all the trade papers published, from front cover to back page, having had an experience dating back from the very beginning of the game here in Canada, 1896, June 20. You see, I had this business well in hand many years before any such animal as a film peddler or film exchange existed, having bought many thousands of feet of film from Pathe, Lubin, Edison, Biograph, Vitagraph and George Kleine; in fact, I think I am safe in stating that 85 reels of film I sold to a man named Phillips in Toronto many years ago were the pictures used to open the first exchange in Toronto. I can find no record of any person who rented films out of Toronto at any earlier date.

"To get back to your editorial entitled 'Help Us Out,' which attracted my attention, I will say there are various reasons for calling some film peddlers 'pirates,' and it's darn tough on some real old high sea pirates to reflect on their good name in this way. The old saying, 'There is honesty among thieves,'" doesn't apply to the film salesman of a certain kind. They have no speaking acquaintance whatsoever with old man Truth. Their motto evidently is: Every small-town manager is a Hick and Rube, overlooking quite frequently the fact that many small town and small city managers have had long theatrical experience as showmen on the road before they settled down in some moss-grown village to try and make a living.

The writer has been all through the theatrical mill from circus side show performer, talker, lecturer, advance agent, imitation press agent, sheriff dodger, magician, actor (very bad one), so in a certain sense is entitled not to be classed as a come-on or easy mark, yet these Johnny Newcomers in the game try it on Old Man Green with the same baby stare and wide-open countenance that they do on some Bohunk manager, and think they are getting away with it.

"No later than four weeks ago a brand-new bird of this variety came along, and after listening to his line of patter, booked three features—a weekly animal reel, a single-reel comedy series and a two-reel comedy series. I told him the paper I used, all new, also just the accessories required, all to be here a week in advance. All fine, so he said. Now here is the answer: The exchange manager in Toronto looked over the contracts, sent back the ones that the price suited him; the single-reel comedies contract he failed to return, and sent a letter stating the two-reel comedies were booked in my opposition house. In place of the all new paper photos, cuts, etc., on feature, they shipped me a bundle of junk. After three or four dollars spent in phones and wires, I cancelled the feature. Then you could hear them yell in Hoboken, N. J. Threats to sue, etc. Just so soon as film exchange managers realize that running a theatre in a small city or town is a tough proposition and far from being a gold mine, and send out some intelligent business men who look over all the features they try to sell, become thoroughly acquainted with the strong and weak points of their production, and can talk to a manager in a manner that sounds at least reasonable and not like 'bull,' I think the feeling toward the exchanges will change.

"Why is it that all pictures are 'cheese' except the brand that our friend film peddler is handling. I frequently happen into a grocery store, jewelry store, hardware or dry goods establishment, and have often done the good listener act, and I note the difference in the line of

All Film Exchanges in future must supply the Temple Theatre, Galt, with all new photos, posters, slides, cuts, press matter, and all accessories promised by your travellers. I don't believe in cancelling a contract once made, but will also insist on the Exchange filling every promise made. I have just had trouble with an exchange over a "bundle of junk" they sent me that I would not use to adorn a dog kennel, much less the lobby of my theatre. Fair play is a jewel, so let's all play fair. Don't misrepresent either your production or the accessories that go with same and you will never receive a film cancellation from John C. Green. The days of strong-arm, black jack methods are gone, even in the film business, so I say, gentlemen, play fair! Don't let your travellers say they will furnish anything they cannot deliver, then any exhibitor that plays dirty deserves all the Exchange can hand him. In future John C. Green will be a tough old buzzard to sell film to, but when the exchange plays fair and gets away from the idea that my name is "Mr. Izzy Easy" the war will stop and all will be like a June day.

This card-notice prepared by Exhibitor Green is probably the first time on record where a manager has tried to bridge the gap between theatre and exchange in a practical way and by appealing to reason while retaining a blessed sense of humor.

FABLES OF AN INDUSTRY'S GOOD NAME

No. 1—The Producer

Aristotle P. Slugg was a manufacturer of Aniline Confectionery for the Penny Trade when he heard that people Got Rich Overnight in the Fillum Business.

Slugg had a good education as far as it Went, which was only to the Fifth Grade of P. S. 132, Bronx. But he had a Pile of Rocks, and calculated that the Sinews of War would Put Him Over the Top.

He bought a Story and hired a Director, a Star and a Crowd.

The Story was by a Well Known Author, but it was Dashed Off a good many years before his name was ever Set Up in Mazdas. In the Spots where it wasn't Mushy it had to be read with a Gas Mask.

The Star had a great following in her Day, but most of them had followed the Undertaker since Then.

The Director was a Master Technician, who had Developed his Art running an Afro-American Entertainment in the interests of Dr. Munyon's Reliable Pain Killer.

The Cast was composed of boys from the Gas House District and girls who were Simply Crazy about dear Mr. Slugg for giving them a chance to Express their Movie Souls.

Slugg took the Gang out to a Lot and shot the picture in Thirteen Days, while Nature provided the Illumination and Providence looked after the Details.

Then an Expert who was an Old Friend of the Director cut the Film in a Dark Room and Ninety Minutes. He titled it with Original Poetry.

Slugg hired a theatre for a Trade Showing and tried to Camouflage the Production with a Real Orchestra and Ushers in Esquimo Costumes.

The House was filled with a Large and Intelligent Audience of Friends and Relatives. Also eleven Reviewers who had not Tasted Blood for a Week and were Thirsty. Also seven Foreign Buyers and One Exhibitor looking for a Warm Place to Sleep.

Slugg offered "THE SEX LURE" to the Big Companies and they Lied politely and told him that they made all of their Releases.

So he announced that it would be Sold on State Rights.

The Market was very Dull, except for a few struggling Exchanges, who made him Percentage Propositions.

He took them Up, and the picture ended their Agony and put them Out of Business.

If Chaplin were At Liberty for a Dollar a Day and Found, Slugg's End would not buy a Wiggle of the Celebrated Cane.

Today he will tell you what he Thinks of the Motion Picture Industry.

He will mention that he was once a Big Producer, but is now Off the Stuff for Life.

He explains that the Fillum Business is Economically Unsound, and is conducted by an Organized Gang of Thieves, Cut-throats, and Pirates.

JACK NATTEFORD.

talk and politeness used by the commercial drummer to his prospective customer as compared with the line of drip handed out by some of the 18-year-old youths trying to sell Hokum and Boukum's world's stupendous super features in 5, 6, 7, 9, 11 reels, that will turn 'em away at every performance for our manager (so they say)? Well, Jim Spriggins over at Acorn Haller did three hundred in two days with this big mastodon production (yes, he did not).

"Any time any peddler tells me how much any certain picture will get me in two or three days, just right there I know I have run across the brother of Ananias—the champion liar—so I say, Mr. Editor, to call some film peddlers pirates is to flatter them. They are just plain liars, who think managers of theatres in small towns and cities were specially made to pick from topknot to pin feathers; but at that I gather many a laugh at their silly attempt to describe the very marvelous drawing power of their stupendous productions. Any manager that follows the trade papers as closely as 'yours truly' and then lets one of these birds hand him a nice, juicy quince in the way of a lot of false promises deserves all he gets. My advice is to keep posted—yes, better posted, Mr. Manager, than the film peddler, and many of the punk features now on the market will go to the scrap heap with their praises unsung. Get out in the sticks, Mr. Producer, study the conditions in a twelve-thousand city like Galt, Canada, and you will not try to make managers pay fifty dollars per day in a ten-dollar per day town. Your population methods are all wrong. Some twelve-thousand town will stand a daily matinee and two evening performances, but Galt, Ont., Canada, will not.

All the houses here give one performance at 8:15 in the evening. No matinee except Saturday or on a holiday. Then why not let the man on the job who knows conditions tell you what price is fair and reasonable, especially if that man has always been fair and square so far as giving the public the best pictures produced are concerned and giving it to them first. I would imagine that such managers are of more use to uplifting this business than the money-grabbing guy who hands the public junk and filth as long as he can get away with it. In parting let me say that faults are to be found on both sides, with the exhibitor as well as the so-called film pirate, and the sooner exchanges get the idea out of their heads that the small-town and small-city exhibitors are a bunch of poor forlorn Hicks, the better for them.

"Good advice Mr. Film Peddler: Never promise one single little thing in connection with any picture you handle that your exchange cannot fulfill to the very letter. Then, and not until then, are you entitled to be called a human, truthful representative of a film concern. Take a night off from your poultry farm and chicken chasing and study the life of that illustrious and truthful statesman, General George Washington. Don't let 'em call you a film pirate; force their hand; use 'em square, son; make 'em call you an honest film representative.

Canada Revises Tax Program

Impost on Imported Film Reduced from Five Cents Per Lineal Foot to Three — Exhibitors' Reel Tax Raised Instead

BY the prompt and co-operative action on the part of several prominent exchange men and exhibitors of Canada, the disastrous blow aimed at the film industry by the Government at Ottawa, in its war budget, announced a short time ago, has been lessened to a great degree. Everybody in the trade is breathing easier today.

The readjustment of the prohibitive tax now places the burden on a much more equal distribution basis. Whereas, according to the first announcement, the tax, which was an increase of exactly 150 per cent. over the former duty on imported film, was a burden that threatened the ruination of film exchanges in Canada, the new adjustment spreads the tax out between both exchanges and exhibitors.

In short, the adjustment is as follows: The duty on imported film into Canada has been reduced by the Government from five cents per lineal foot to three cents per foot. This will be a flat rate. In view of this reduction to the exchanges, the exhibitors will be asked for a reel tax from the Government which will be fixed at either 10, 12½ or 15 cents per reel per day. The exact reel tax has not been officially announced at Ottawa.

This reel tax is to be collected by the exchanges and handed over to the Government. To A. S. Aronson, secretary of the Regal Films, Limited, is given the credit for the solution of the problem. He was the father of the movement, and through his aggressiveness and clear understanding of the situation the Government was persuaded that an adjustment on a more equal basis was absolutely imperative.

Pettijohn Stirs Up Cleveland

New Ohio Exhibitors' Film Exchange Is Expected Eventually to Ally Itself with Producers and Exhibitors Affiliated

FOLLOWING the recent visit in Cleveland of C. C. Pettijohn, during which he set forth to the motion picture exhibitors of the city the final plans of the direct releasing proposition known as the Producers and Exhibitors Affiliated, the exhibitors of Cleveland have co-operated to the extent of forming a corporation in the State, for the purpose of buying and distributing motion picture films on a mutual benefit basis. The organization is called The Ohio Exhibitors' Film Exchange Company, and was incorporated with a capitalization of $5,000.

This plan was adopted and the necessary amount of money was paid in May 3, at a special meeting which was called to discuss the Pettijohn plan. Temporary officers were elected as follows: Henry H. Lustig, president; Dave L. Schumann, vice-president; M. B. Horwitz, secretary, and W. J. Slimm, treasurer.

Preliminary methods of procedure were discussed in a general way, but the only plan actually determined upon was in the matter of stock. It was agreed to sell no more than a single share of stock just now, to each exhibitor, at ten dollars a share. This will guarantee the company sufficient working capital to allow it to proceed in the regular manner. After the organization is in practical working order there will be no such restraint in the matter of holdings.

While the Ohio Exhibitor's Film Exchange has not yet definitely committed itself to the adoption of the Pettijohn plan to the extent of becoming an integral part of it, it is fairly certain that it will ultimately become one of the Pettijohn units, as soon as both of the plans are in actual working operation.

The direct producer-to-exhibitor proposition has been a live issue in Cleveland ever since the idea was first presented. Several times it has been on the point of really accomplishing something in this new branch of the film industry, but each time something has interfered. Mr. Pettijohn, however, made the plan so evidently to the advantage of the exhibitor that its adoption went right through without a hitch.

In and Out of Town

John H. Collins, director for Metro Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York from the West Coast, last week, to begin work on a series of pictures in which Viola Dana is to be featured. Miss Dana, who in private life is Mrs. Collins, accompanied the director East.

Sam Katz and A. Balabon, owners and operators of several large theatres in Chicago, including the Central Park theatre, arrived in New York last week for the purpose of looking at some of the up-to-date New York houses. Messrs. Katz and Balabon are building a large new theatre at the junction of Lawrence avenue and Broadway, Chicago, and they want the last word in modern construction of motion picture theatres.

James M. Sheldon, who succeeded John Freuler as head of Mutual Film Corporation, is in New York in the interest of that company.

John E. De Wolfe, the Milwaukee banker, one of the purchasers of Paralta interests, arrived in New York last week. Mr. De Wolfe expects to be in town for several days.

W. A. S. Douglas, Diando Film Corporation, Los Angeles, leaves this week for the coast after a few days' business visit to New York.

N. H. Friend, publicity director for Bray Studios, left for Atlantic City this week to spend a short vacation.

J. A. Gove, Fox publicity manager, returned to New York last week from a business trip through the East.

Claud McGowan, auditor, Universal, leaves New York this week for a tour of the company's exchanges. He will be absent from the New York office for several weeks.

Charles C. Pyle, Chicago, representing Bartola, manufacturers of musical instruments, is in New York on business.

Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is in New York on a business trip.

Germany Seeks to Control the Market

Producer of Rare Swiss Films Asks in Interview If America Is Going to Let Other Countries Outdo Her After the War Is Decided

WHO is to dominate the world film market after the war?

This was the foundation of an interview last week between MOTION PICTURE NEWS and Frederick Burlingham, well known cinematograph film producer, who recently reached the United States from Switzerland where for years he has devoted his time to securing rare views of the Alps and the beautiful country thereabouts.

The keynote of the interview can best be explained, probably, when it is made known, Mr. Burlingham is greatly interested in the American film industry, and believes the time is now ripe for organization and going after the world's markets. He is boosting American films at his every opportunity.

Germans in Film Scheme

Relegating his own films to the conversational background, Mr. Burlingham wanted to know, Who is to dominate the world film market after the war?

Continuing, he said: "The Germans have a perfected organization, but their film production is inadequate. On the other hand, the Americans have the films, but practically no organization.

"This is what the Germans are doing: The German producing companies have pooled their interests. In this combination are the following large concerns: Meister, Nordische, Union, Hansa, Olivier, Mia-May and Eiko.

"This film trust has been capitalized at 25,000,000 marks. It is backed by the Reichsbank and Dresdenerbank, besides the government has subventioned the combination to the tune of 10,000,000 marks. The capital it is stated is shortly to be increased to 40,000,000 marks.

"In order to control the business in Germany, this trust has bought ninety of the leading cinemas, which makes them virtually all powerful. As the 2,500 other cinemas are likely to follow the leading cinemas in making up their programs, having suceeded in controlling Germany, the trust is now organizing Austria, the Balkans and Russia.

"Just before I left Switzerland, the Germans had either bought or leased twenty-four of the leading cinemas. Moreover, in order to get a tighter grip in Switzerland, they have organized into a local Trust a large percentage of the exhibitors. This was quite easy, as eighty per cent of the people exploiting cinemas in Switzerland unfortunately are of German origin. Having done this, they then proceeded to organize the film renters into a trust and the scheme was to have the film renters' trust place their programs with the Film Exhibitors' Trust. Independent or Allied concerns in Switzerland, therefore, found it extremely difficult to do business. The plan was audacious, but temporarily has fallen through because the powerful French firms, Pathe and Gaumont, refused to be a party.

Trust Fixes Prices

"While the German trust is finding some resistance in neutral countries, they virtually control the situation in the Central Empires. This is made possible because the Government has closed the frontier to all outside films. The Film Trust magnates therefore sit around a table and fix prices and the exhibitor has nothing to say in the matter. The prices for positive film fixed by the trust for Germany varies from three to seven marks a metre, according to subject.

Frederick Burlingham

"In case a cinema exhibitor wants a popular film, such as one of Henny Porten, the Mary Pickford of Germany, he is forced to contract at the same time for a number of other films which he does not want. Not only that, but to get films now, the trust forces him to sign contracts for 1919 for films, the scenarios of which have not been created. Naturally the trust is making money. This is evidenced by the statement that the Hansa Film, which started about four years ago with a capital of 30,000 marks, already shows a net profit of 1,200,000 marks.

"Besides effecting these enormous profits, the trust has finished and paid for some 2,000 film negatives, which are being held back for dumping on the market the moment peace is declared. As the negatives are paid for, these films can be sold virtually at the printing price of positive, the German plan being, in case of commercial war, to demoralize the world film market. They are in a position to carry out this menace, because it is not necessary for them to think of immediate profits.

"In case of a compromise peace, the Germans propose to open the market to such countries as give Germany equal facilities. Their idea is to work on the lines of compensation. I understand they are seriously concerned with the American menace, because American films are very popular in Germany and the exhibitors are very sore with the trust. The exhibitors say that when the war is over, and they can get films from America, they will have their revenge.

"Even now certain American films are running in Germany. I understand the Germans have succeeded in getting a number of films featuring Clara Kimball Young, through neutral countries, and have duped the positives and are spreading these films broadcast. Some of the films mentioned to me in this connection are 'Sudden Riches,' 'Traviata' and 'Carmen.'

Big Prices to America

"The Germans," said Mr. Burlingham, "are prepared to pay big prices for American films now. Just before leaving Switzerland, I had indirectly a proposition from official representatives of the trust, stating that the Germans were prepared at the present moment to buy American films in New York, deposit the money and to hold the films here in New York for shipment just as soon as peace is declared. The trust wishes to control the American production within the Central Empire and to do this, are prepared to advance millions. In case they do not succeed in controlling American output, the small German exhibitors will combine and deal direct with America, thus eliminating the trust.

"The weak side of the German scheme is their lack of films. They must have Allied films. The neutral countries especially, refuse to be fed up with German production.

"In this connection, the German mentality is curious. The Germans even in Germany will run Allied propaganda, showing Joffre decorating French soldiers. This is in line with their playing 'Hamlet' in a theatre at Lille. Moreover there is a strong desire on the part of German film men to get back on good terms with America.

"German Government agents, however, have taken a special interest in American films. Some time ago the Vitagraph film, 'The Invasion of the United States,' was bought for the Swiss market, but almost immediately disappeared from the market and it is said in Switzerland, is now running in Germany with reversed titles, showing what will happen to Germany if the Keep that figure in mind; if you let its lesson sink in it will save you money. Anglo-Saxon armies get across the Rhine.

"The stealing of films has led recently to more than one scandal. The result is, it is extremely difficult at the present moment to ship films to any neutral country bordering Germany. As a matter of fact these restrictions in Holland and the Scandinavian countries have led to a film famine. Not being able to get Allied films, these border countries have been forced to take German films and such short sighted policy has played directly into the hands of the Germans.

"Before leaving Switzerland, I was asked by the French to make a report on conditions. Seeing this report, the Americans in Berne considered it sufficiently important to take the matter up immediately with Washington.

"My idea, instead of preventing films from going to neutral countries bordering Germany, is that immediate facilities should be given, allowing films to be shipped without delay or frontier interference, to all of these countries and to control them through special bureaus to be created.

Give Films Big Chance

"President Wilson has stated that America is fighting for Liberty and Democracy and it is a role of American film companies to propagate these ideas on the screen. Films therefore are something more than merchandise, and should be given special facilities.

"Take Switzerland, for instance. If film producers in New York could send films to Washington to one central distributing organization, which in turn would forward these films without delay to a bureau, to be created and attached to the American Legation in Berne, shipment to be made through the Government Commercial Service, these films on arrival could be leased on license to bona fide Swiss, after the Government had assured themselves that the films would not fall into the hands of Germans, but would be used only in this country.

"This is perfectly feasible, and such centralization actually would be cheaper than at present. Furthermore there is no reason why large American concerns should not have representatives working with this central organization. In fact such an organization might co-operate with all the other Allies, so that a co-ordinated effort would supersede present haphazard methods.

"If this could be done in Switzerland, it could be done not only in all the neutral countries bordering Germany, but in every country where there is an American Consular Service. American Film Manufacturers therefore could send sample films all over the world and have then returned to New York, if not sold, without facing the danger of losing money or having the films duplicated by unscrupulous agents.

"At the present moment America is about the only country producing first class films. If American Film Manufacturers can get together, and if the Government will co-operate, there is no reason why the Americans cannot control now the entire world with the exception of the Central Empires and after the war is over, to divorce the organization from the Government influence and go ahead on their own.

"If American film manufacturers don't organize and take advantage of this supreme opportunity, another such occasion may never present itself.

Swiss Market Interesting

"Americans don't realize the vast possibilities for American films on the world market. Switzerland is small, but the market is interesting. Good American films should bring about one dollar a metre or thirty cents a foot. This price may be a little high for unknown stars, but as advertising in the leading Swiss papers can be had for two dollars a page, it would not cost a fortune to get stars before the public. At the present moment, Mary Pickford is absolutely unknown in Switzerland. As a matter of fact, Swiss buyers, who generally go to Paris for their films, don't even know the names of the leading American manufacturers. When a good American film does get to Switzerland, it goes there with a French trade mark, the origin of the film in many cases being concealed.

"Another reason why American films don't get a fair show is that before arriving in such countries as Switzerland, they pass through so many hands, that the final price is prohibitive. Charlie Chaplin, for instance, is bringing ten francs a metre, which at the rate of exchange works out at about seventy-five cents a foot. Swiss film renters cannot get their money back at such prices.

"If Americans could deal direct with film renters in all these countries, through a perfected organization, they would no longer be outsiders on these markets."

"Street of Seven Stars" Finished

It is announced from the New York office of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., that "The Street of Seven Stars," the first picture to be made by Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, will be ready for a private showing in a few days. The story is by Mary Roberts Rinehart and the picture was directed by John B. O'Brien.

Mabel Normand Renews Her Goldwyn Contract

After making an announcement to the effect that Mabel Normand had renewed her contract with Goldwyn for a term of years, Samuel Goldfish departed for California last week. He will go first to Los Angeles, after which he will visit the principal cities of the Far and Middle West.

"Miss Normand has borne out every prediction we made for her even before she had made her first Goldwyn production," said Mr. Goldfish before leaving. "We predicted that she would surprise her tremendous audience of admirers by being a brilliant dramatic actress instead of merely a comedienne. In Goldwyn she has developed a new personality that combines her former graces as a comedienne with dramatic power that we knew she had. I am especially happy that Miss Normand has signed a new contract with Goldwyn for a term of years, for I know that she is once more at the flood tide of popularity in all parts of the world."

Paralta Studio Sold to Brunton and Hampton

In connection with the sale and reorganization last week of Paralta Plays, news of which appears on another page of this issue of Motion Picture News, it was reported from the Coast, May 13, that Robert Brunton and J. D. Hampton have purchased the studio. It is understood Paralta, reorganized, will make Louise Glaum, Bessie Barriscale and Kerrigan features for Paralta and Hodkinson.

It is said that in all probability Thomas H. Ince will rent space at the Brunton-Hampton studio and close the one he is now using.

World Salesmen Determine Picture Policy

In order to get a comprehensive idea of the wants of exhibitors during war times, World Pictures has just completed a mail symposium among all of its salesmen, asking them to give their honest opinions of just what the World should do in the way of productions while the war continues.

As the result of this symposium and a careful survey of picture conditions in England, France and Italy, World Pictures has determined to increase its output by the addition of the Fay Tincher and Marie Dressler comedies and to produce pleasing pictures of civil life, reflecting hope, optimism and uplift instead of the sordid and tragic phases of life. There will be occasional war pictures, depicting the tense, dramatic phases of the war, but these will not be morbid or depressing.

Red Cross Big Drive Begins May 20

Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team Is Headed by William Fox and Represents Every Branch of Amusement in New York—Headquarters Opened on Broadway

LAST week William C. Breed, chairman of the American Red Cross War Fund Committee, commandeered the prominent managers who are to constitute the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team during the big Red Cross drive, which begins May 20 and ends the following Saturday.

The general committee selected represents every branch of the amusement industry in the Greater City, and the despatch with which the various generals took command of their respective departments indicates that of all of the various trade teams none will outdo the theatrical and motion picture contingent in energy and organization.

Fox Chosen Team Captain

The list of generals who form the Central Committee of which William Fox was appointed team captain, includes Winthrop Ames, E. F. Albee, David Belasco, R. H. Burnside, William A. Brady, George M. Cohan, Pat Casey, Charles B. Dillingham, A. L. Erlanger, Morris Gest, Alf Hayman, Sam H. Harris, Marc Klaw, Marcus Loew, Lee Shubert, J. J. Shubert, Sam A. Scribner, Winfield Sheehan, A. H. Woods and Adolph Zukor, with Mark A. Luescher in charge of the publicity.

William Fox, after being appointed to head the Red Cross drive, called a meeting at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday of producers, officers of the local Exhibitors' Leagues and members of the trade press. A buffet luncheon was served.

Mr. Fox explained at length the circumstances of his appointment. When he was asked by William C. Breed, chairman of the American Red Cross War Fund Committee, to accept the appointment, he found that the amusement places and interests of New York City were completely subsidized to the main committee appointments of the American Red Cross. In citing the injustice of this arrangement he evidently echoed the feeling of all present. In the third Liberty Loan drive practically every exhibitor in Greater New York found that his house was being used by some outsider who got all the credit for the funds raised. Exhibitors have already been approached by local Red Cross committees and the use of their theatres solicited in the same manner.

Industry Gets Credit

Mr. Fox took up the matter with Mr. Breed at considerable length in a letter in which he detailed the various points on which he would accept the commission. Briefly, his demands stipulated that all benefit performances, subscriptions from individuals or corporations owning theatres, or producing companies and exchanges, from the employes of all theatres and branches of the industry, all money collected not only within the theatres, but about the theatres, and from all lines of business directly allied with the theatrical and motion picture companies and theatres should be received through Mr. Fox's committee and credited to the allied theatrical and motion picture industry.

Through this systematic organization only those connected with the allied theatrical team will be permitted to solicit in the theatres, and then only when authorized by the committee, and all the speakers will be assigned from the committee.

PLAYERS

IF you are going to be in New York from May 20-27 a wonderful opportunity is offered you to do your bit for the boys over there.

About four hundred players are needed to make personal appearances each night at theatres in Greater New York as part of the Red Cross Drive of the Motion Picture Industry, under the leadership of William Fox.

Four hundred is a big number. So whether you are a star or not, if you earn a salary by appearing on the screen, if you depend on exhibitors for that salary, if you depend on the mothers of the boys over there—turn out for the Red Cross.

Call Bryant 2600 and ask for Mr. Sydney Cohen—he will tell you how to get aboard the band wagon.

All the trade papers are going to publish an Honor Roll of those who respond—perhaps a casualty list of those who could but wouldn't—so get on the Honor Roll now.

Chairman Breed accepted Mr. Fox's provision in toto, and, therefore, for the first time in Greater New York, at least, the Motion Picture industry will proceed in a war drive as a unit and get full credit for all funds raised.

Mr. Fox instructed all theatres which so far have been approached by local Red Cross societies to state that they are to use their theatres only under instructions from the committee.

Much enthusiasm and complete accord was manifested at the meeting.

Samuel Goldfish offered the use of his entire organization in New York. He furthermore stated that he was about to leave for the Coast, and would proceed there under orders from the committee, if the committee so wished. He thereupon made his personal contribution of $1,000 to the Red Cross Fund.

All Offer Their Help

Mr. Fox stated that this action was in line with the attitude of many others thus far. The Van Buren Outdoor Advertising Company had already offered an unlimited amount of free advertising space. The Lithograph companies offered free paper as desired.

Generals were thereupon appointed for the picture theatres in the three largest boroughs of Greater New York. They were John Mannheimer for Manhattan, John J. Wittman for the Bronx and William Brandt for Brooklyn. These appointments were unanimously approved. These generals are to appoint captains and lieutenants in their respective territories. The generals for the boroughs of Richmond and Queens are to be announced shortly.

Chairman Fox announced that two floors of the Subway Central Building, 1465 Broadway, had been contributed by the owners to be used as Red Cross headquarters for the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Committee. He also announced much progress already made by the committee along different lines. Shows at Madison Square Garden and balls at leading hotels on a very large and sumptuous scale are already arranged for. Several thousand women in New York City have volunteered their services, and will provide their own uniforms. Automobiles are freely offered from all quarters. New York City regiments and one thousand soldiers from Yaphank will participate in public exhibitions.

One of the most important events of the drive week in New York City will be the appearance at picture houses of the screen stars. A committee of the trade press, with Sidney S. Cohen as chairman, has been appointed to enlist from the various companies the services of their stars. It is requested that the heads of the picture companies in New York immediately communicate with Sidney S. Cohen, 1465 Broadway, telephone Bryant 2600, and give him a list of their stars who will be available for the eight days of May 20 to May 27. These stars will be booked at the various theatres by Mr. Cohen and his committee of exhibitors. Bookings will be arranged by Thursday evening, May 23.

Russell Bassett, Screen Actor, Dies

Russell Bassett, well-known Famous Players-Lasky actor, died the morning of May 8, at his home, 101 West Eighty-ninth Street, New York, of cerebral hemorrhage. He had been working in a picture up to the preceding Friday, his last role being that of a priest in Madame Cavalieri's new production. He had been ill since Sunday.

Mr. Bassett was 72 years old. Following a career of a half century on the speaking stage he appeared in motion pictures during the last seven years of his life. His first work before the camera was done at the old Staten Island Nestor Studio. He soon went to California, where he was three years with Universal.

We have a couple of long explanations of that 73 to give you on this page. O. I. Demaree, of the Franklin Theatre, Franklin, Indiana, wrote recently: "Enclosed find my check for subscription to Motion Picture News. I don't mind telling you that I cannot get along without it." E. K. Hardwick, of the Lyceum, Clovis, N. Mex., says: "We know of nothing that gives us more pleasure than to enclose our check for subscription to the Motion Picture News." SEE PAGE 3086.

Allen Promoted by F. P.-Lasky

Former Manager of San Francisco Branch Office Becomes Special Representative to Exchanges —Will Have Headquarters in New York

J. W. ALLEN has been promoted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to the new and important position of Special Representative to Exchanges and has arrived in New York from San Francisco, where he was manager of that exchange for three years, to take up the activities of his new post. As previously announced, Myron H. Lewis, formerly manager of the Los Angeles branch, succeeds Mr. Allen at San Francisco and J. J. Halstead, formerly assistant manager at Los Angeles, becomes manager there.

Mr. Allen has been associated with the motion picture industry for eleven years, and for the past seven has been managing exchanges. In 1915 his San Francisco office won first prize in Paramount's Exchange contest for the greatest amount of business obtained in ninety days. In 1917 he made a trip to China, Japan and the Philippine Islands covering a period of six months, during which time he placed the Paramount product in these countries. He is the first exchange manager to institute the direct-by-mail campaign to the theatre patron in behalf of the exhibitor, which is now widely used throughout the industry.

J. W. Allen Has Been Appointed by Famous Players-Lasky As Special Representative to the Exchanges

In speaking of Mr. Allen's promotion and his new duties, Walter E. Greene, managing director of distribution, said: "Mr. Allen's new position as special representative to exchanges has just been created by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. His headquarters will be in New York, and he will immediately start activities which will take him to the various exchanges, where he will assist local managers in introducing methods resulting in closer co-operation with and from the home office, and help in every way to enhance the workings of out of town branches. Widely known and liked in the industry and thoroughly acquainted with exchange and exhibiting problems, Mr. Allen in his new work will prove another strong link in the chain of Famous Players-Lasky service now rapidly culminating in a standard of value, marking a new era in the annals of the motion picture distribution world."

Stage Women's War Relief Thanks Petrova

Madame Olga Petrova, who was an active participant in the recent Liberty Loan campaign and is about to start on a country-wide tour in the interest of the War Savings Stamp drive, has received the following letter in appreciation of her assistance in the work of the Stage Women's War Relief:

"Dear Madame Petrova:

"The photographs which you so kindly sent me for the Stage Women's War Relief have been received, and I want to thank you for the co-operation which you have shown in this great work. It is indeed gratifying to find such willing helpers among the busy people of the theatrical world.

"Again thanking you, and with best wishes, I am

"Most sincerely,
"Eleanor V. V. Brewster."

A New Law Firm

Walter N. Seligsberg, Clarence M. Lewis and Alexander L. Strouse announce the formation of a law partnership under the firm name of Seligsberg, Lewis & Strouse. Their office is at 55 Liberty street, New York City.

Sennott Joins Sherry in New Concern

Norman J. Sennott, who recently retired from the business managership of the Paramount and Artcraft Exchange of New York, becomes general manager of the new concern which William L. Sherry has started, with offices in the Godfrey Building. Mr. Sennott was associated with Mr. Sherry for many years in the Paramount and Famous Players-Lasky Corporations, even back to the time when Mr. Sherry helped to form the Paramount Company.

Mr. Sennott's former associates in the exchange tendered him a farewell dinner at Healy's, May 4. Those present were Mr. Sennott, L. Rogers, H. Danto, A. A. Corn, J. C. Clark, W. Roosevelt, F. A. Lappen, C. J. Fitch, F. W. Langtree, W. Conlin, J. Goetz, H. Malhardo, M. Nathien, A. G. Whyte and S. Friedman.

G. D. Baker Operated Upon for Appendicitis

George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, who has been in Los Angeles less than two months, is in Good Samaritan Hospital, Los Angeles, recovering from an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Baker was stricken at his desk at the studio and underwent the operation a few hours later.

During Mr. Baker's illness his duties will be assumed by Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the Metro Corporation, who is in direct charge of the West Coast studios in Hollywood.

South Africa Wants Film Printers and Developers

South Africa is in need of expert film printers and developers, especially those who are used to the Williamson, Newman and Sinclair machines, says the International Variety and Theatrical Agency, Ltd. Only such men as may procure passports can possibly be considered. The reason given by M. A. Schlesinger of the I. V. T. A. for coming to America to select experts is that South Africa recognizes from the American films shown that this country is far advanced in the matter of tinting and toning and in film developing generally.

Florida League Meets

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Florida held its semi-annual meeting at Daytona May 7 and 8, with C. D. Cooley, manager of the Strand at Tampa, in the president's chair. The main topic of the meeting was that of greater co-operation with the Government as an assistance in winning the war.

Northwest Convention Well Attended

Contradicts Expectations and Develops Into Peaceful and Successful Meeting—Parker of Duluth Chosen as Exception on "Blue" Ticket—Steffes Insurgent

THE internal explosions, which according to predictions, were to rend the seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest during their sessions May 7 and 8 at Minneapolis developed into mere flareups that sizzled out harmlessly, making the elections and order of business a mere duplication of previous annual sessions. Instead of secessions and splits, the convention terminated with a better understanding of things in general among the exhibitors gathered there and a more firmer cementing of friendships. The convention went down on record as being the best attended of all the annual meetings held by the Northwest body.

For a time, however, things looked as if it might in a small way turn out similar to the historic national convention held at Chicago last year. The insurgent party, of no mean numbers, led by the militant W. A. Steffes, chairman of the By-Laws Committee, opposed to the administration in charge of the convention, kept things moving lively for a while on the last day with demands and much criticism.

Flare-up as Finale

The big flare-up that looked for a while as if it might develop into an explosion, came on the final day when a determined movement was started by the Steffes faction to throw out the present system of by-laws and give the members the privilege of electing the board of officers from the floor instead of having them named by a directorate. Steffes, as chairman of the by-laws committee, started right off in the beginning of the reading of his report to recommend a change. It met with immediate assault from the other side. David G. Rodgers, who drafted the by-laws now in use, stated that they had been drawn up in accordance with Minnesota corporation laws. Others substantiated his claim and it was brought out that they could not be legally changed without reorganizing and taking a new charter. The argument for and against switched back and forth in a heated debate.

President Gilosky intervened by appointing a committee to secure legal advice on the matter. A lawyer was secured and he voiced the opinion that the officers had to be elected as previously—by the directorate or a new charter had to be obtained. While objections were made from several of the members and the opinion pronounced absurd, it accomplished the object, however, of putting an end to the wrangle. Chairman Steffes did not finish reading the recommendations of his committee. President Gilosky, three times chief executive of the Northwest body, made an announcement in which he flatly refused to be a candidate for any office.

Then came the election. The insurgent party, although relinquishing their effort to change the by-laws, tried the next best move when the election of the directors came up—they nominated a ticket of their own, known as the blues, to go against the organization selections, known as the whites, and the battle was on. When the smoke cleared away the white ticket had won the election of the directors with the exception of one member. Ralph Parker, of Duluth, who had been nominated by the Blues, was the exception, and it was noted with much glee by the Steffes faction that Parker received the highest number of votes cast. The rest of the personnel of the directorate elected was composed of: Clyde Hitchcock, Minneapolis; Dan Eselin, Minneapolis; William Deeth, Minneapolis; Billy B. Watson, Minneapolis; D. W. Chamberlain, Mankato; Ellsworth Cameron, St. Paul; Joseph Friedman, St. Paul, and Fred Upham, Minneapolis.

Deeth Chosen President

The board of directors announced at an evening session the following officers selected for the ensuing year: William H. Deeth, president; Ralph E. Parker, vice-president; Clyde H. Hitchcock, secretary; Dan Eselin, treasurer. The new president was formerly treasurer of the Northwest body. The entire board of directors was selected as delegates to the national convention in Boston. Despite the fact that the election came far from suiting the supporters of the blue ticket and that they considered the election of Parker meant merely a sop for them, they remained loyal to the organization and applauded in many cases the announcement of the voting. In closing the convention gave a rising vote of thanks to the retiring president, Mr. Gilosky.

The printed and word of mouth rumors that had made their way through the trade prior to the convention that the Northwest body would withdraw from the national organization, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America proved to be mere rumors when the test came. The matter of withdrawing was touched upon lightly at the first day's session when attention was called to the resolution made previously by a number of the members to secede. After that it was referred to indirectly several times without drawing fire. National President Lee A. Ochs and Vice-president Joseph Hopp jumped up at the mention of it the first day and expressed their regrets that such a move had ever even been thought of. They urged the exhibitors to remain loyal to the national body and rather than withdraw to send a strong delegation to the Boston convention, in July, and get what they wanted by fighting for it there. These urgings acted soothingly upon a good many of the belligerents and the others strangely dropped all their previous vigorous determination to force an issue and withdraw. So while there was a flare-up in this direction it was merely red fire and unexpectedly sizzled out.

Telegram to Wilson

Among the resolutions offered at the convention and adopted were those of Secretary Hitchcock, who asked that a telegram to be sent to President Wilson assuring him of the hearty support of the Northwest organization, and S. G. Lebedoff's resolution requesting national distributing companies to give their local exchange managers more authority in executing their duties. Mr. Lebedoff maintained that the local exchange manager was much more fit to accept or reject contracts for big productions than the home offices and recalled several recent instances where exhibitors had booked big pictures, had paid big money for them and held contracts accepted by local exchange managers who were later informed that all such contracts had to be cancelled and more money secured for the productions. The applause that greeted the passing of Mr. Lebedoff's resolution was second only to that on the occasion of the passing of the secretary's resolution.

Secretary Hitchcock's resolution demanding exchanges operating as branches of a national organization keep advance deposit moneys received from exhibitors in local or state banks, and asking that the legislative committee of the Northwest organization exert its efforts to have a bill making such action a law, brought before the next Minnesota Legislature, was also the subject of much debate.

On Tuesday President Gilosky appointed the following committees: Auditing, W. G. True, Minneapolis; F. E. Nemec, St. Cloud, Minn., and T. E. Hansing, Minneapolis. Resolutions, Joseph Friedman, Minneapolis; H. C. Zander, Rhinelander, Wis.; Dan Eselin, Minneapolis; Anton Gilles, Breckenridge, Minn., and Archie Miller, Devil's Lake, N. D. Grievances, Billy B. Watson, Minneapolis; Fred Upham, Minneapolis; Ed Hinz, Minneapolis; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, and William Watson, Excelsior, Minn. Credentials, D. W. Chamberlain, Mankato, Minn.; Thomas Foster, Stanley, Wis.; D. G. Rodgers, Minneapolis; R. C. Gibbs, Huron, S. D., and Dan Eselin, Minneapolis. Mr. Gilosky also appointed William True, Minneapolis, and C. S. Watson, St. Paul, sergeants at arms.

Secretary Hitchcock's yearly report showed 172 members to be in good standing on May 7, 1918, and that 78 were behind in their dues. Thirty-two new members were added to the Northwest branch's roster during the 1918 convention Mr. Hitchcock reported.

If you are one of those who helped make that figure you are one of those who gets a dollar's worth for every dollar he spends. If you are not—but here is another of the reasons for that mysterious 73: "I wish to congratulate you on the progress made by Motion Picture News in the last year. You certainly have jumped away ahead of all other publications in interesting and instructive news, and I trust your present speed will keep on."—D. E. Big Record for Six Months

Robertson-Cole Company Proves Boon to Independent Producers in Marketing Productions in Foreign Territory

REALIZING that the chief difficulty that confronted the independent producer in foreign fields was his inability to get the sort of representation that would enable him to get the maximum return for his picture, the Robertson-Cole Company, one of the largest exporting firms in the world, entered the motion picture field. The company's main office is in New York, with branch offices located in London, Sydney, Melbourne, Singapore, Rangoon, Bombay and Karachi, with travelers throughout South America and other parts of the world.

This entrance of the Robertson-Cole Company into the motion picture business was made six months ago. The independent producer had but to turn over to Robertson-Cole Company his completed picture and the big organization started the machinery which sent prints of the picture into all parts of the world where Robertson-Cole Company representatives arranged all details from trade showings to the sale of the picture. This enabled the independents to enter the competition in foreign fields backed by an organization with a thorough knowledge and wide experience in foreign salesmanship.

Miss Edna Williams, who for several years had been identified with the foreign end of the motion picture business, was engaged to take charge of the sales rights for such pictures as the company might acquire, where such sales rights were negotiated in New York City. It also arranged with the Arrow Film Corporation to negotiate the exclusive foreign marketing rights for productions marketed by independent producers. Since the first of the year these arrangements have resulted in there having been negotiated and sold the following rights:

"The Public Defender," "Betty, Be Good," "Bab the Fixer," "The Checkmate," "A Bit of Kindling," "The Wildcat," "Sunny Joe" and "The Castoff" in Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

"The Accidental Honeymoon," "The Master Crook," "The Struggle Everlasting," "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," "Weavers of Life" and "Souls Redeemed" in Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Africa.

"The Grain of Dust," "Just a Woman" and "Nine Tenths of the Law" in Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

"The Finger of Justice" and "The Great White Trail" in Africa.

"Lust of the Ages" in the British Isles and Africa.

"Her Fighting Chance" in the British Isles.

"Those Who Pay" in Australia, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Brazil, Africa, France, Spain, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador.

"The Zeppelin's Last Raid" in Africa, Brazil, Japan, China, Philippine Islands, Dutch East Indies, Hawaiian Islands, India, Burma, Ceylon, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, Mexico, Scandinavia, Australia.

"The Belgian" in Australia, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Brazil, Mexico, Africa, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador.

"The Eagle's Eye" in Cuba, Porto Rico, Santo Domingo, Japan, India, Burma, Ceyton, Straits Settlements, Philippine Islands.

The Jester Comedies in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, United Kingdom, Russia, France, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Holland.

Farnum Appears on Stage for War Relief

William Farnum made his first appearance on the speaking stage for the first time in years at Los Angeles a few days ago, the occasion being the launching of the Los Angeles branch of the Stage Women's War Relief at the Morosco theatre. A distinguished gathering of stage and screen folk was present.

Mr. Farnum came to the affair direct from the Fox studios in Hollywood where he has been busily engaged in finishing the interior scenes of "Riders of the Purple Sage," the Zane Grey novel which Director Lloyd is picturizing.

Two Capital Theatres in 10-Cent Ranks

The Maryland and Virginia theatres, Washington, D. C., have at last joined the ten-cent ranks. Their managers, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Noonan, respectively, believed that the war tax necessitated their having a five-cent admission in order to maintain patronage. They now state that not only has patronage been maintained, but increased box office receipts have resulted, with better service possible.

"Our Boys" Tobacco Fund

The total amount of contributions to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" received to date is $217,464.36.

Fox Editor Speaks at the National Board Luncheon

At the annual luncheon of the National Board of Review, given at the McAlpin Hotel in New York recently, Hettie Gray Baker, editor of the William Fox productions, was one of the speakers. About 200 were present and among the other speakers were Cranston Brenton, chairman of the Board; George Middleton and Dan Beard. In her talk, Miss Baker said:

"Besides 976 other duties, the film editor is like a pioneer regiment as far as his relation to the National Board is concerned. That kind of a regiment prepares the ground for the battle, eliminates obstructions, removes non-combatants, lays out the line of attack and generally sees that everything is disposed to the most favorable advantage. Wednesday afternoon is the battle." (The reference is to the day on which the pictures are shown to the National Board.)

"After the smoke has cleared away and the attacking party has retired (seldom with any casualties), the pioneer regiment comes up, clears the ground of dead and wounded, rebuilds trenches, reconstructs the field of action and generally makes itself useful. The analogy is obvious.

"May I venture, from my frontline trench, to say 'Greetings' and to express my thanks for and my appreciation of the work of the National Board and especially of the spirit of co-operation that is constantly manifested by those individual members with whom I am in professional contact? Please notice that I said contact—not conflict."

Powers Buys Fireproof Film Company Plant

The Powers Camera and Film Company, of which P. A. Powers, treasurer of Universal, is the head, had purchased the plant of the Fireproof Film Company in Rochester, which was built some time ago at a cost estimated at $750,000. The present deal is said to involve nearly a half million dollars.

The Powers organization was recently organized by Mr. Powers, and it is said that a number of prominent producers are associated with him. Mr. Powers has stated that he has obtained sufficient orders to engage the full capacity of the plant for the next year. It is probable that at least a thousand hands will be employed. The capacity at present is about 500,000 feet per week, but it is not expected that that amount of film will be turned out for the first month or two. Mr. Powers has obtained orders for a large amount of Government work, as well as the orders of those concerns the executives of which he has succeeded in interesting.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Raver?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

WE were going to open this article by saying that Harry Raver was the man who tried to save Art Dramas from the wreck.

But that wouldn't be fair. Besides, it's too long a story for this page. And besides again—it wouldn't tell you what kind of a fellow Harry Raver is.

For Harry Raver is the smiling kind—and smiles don't go with wrecks.

Especially the Harry Raver brand of smiles. Harry has a smile that shows all over—a smile that curls around the edges of his mouth, that dances from his eyes, that shows in every carefree move of his body, that shouts in the jaunty tilt of his hat.

Just to meet Harry Raver on the street and to hear his jovial "Hallo" is to feel your own spirits mounting higher. He's a regular smile tonic—a spring, winter, fall or summer tonic.

We always wondered how any man could acquire so positive a smile—until we one day caught Harry Raver off his guard.

And then, in a moment of confession, we learned his secret.

Harry Raver has actually studied, read and digested big, bulky, wordy tomes on psychology, psycho-therapy and other psycho-high-brow subjects of the sort.

Can you imagine it?

Can you picture a film magnate who gets the time to read even his evening newspaper?

We begin to suspect them all. Maybe William Fox gets up at midnight to read ancient history; Adolph Zukor may be absorbing political economy; Richard A. Rowland may be memorizing Rozet's Thesaurus for more names to call us when we criticize his dancing.

You never can tell.

But we suspect that Harry Raver got his smiling habits before he took up psychology—back in the business where smiles were a necessity and an asset.

For Harry gained his show knowledge in the great outdoor show world. He was a prominent and important figure in tent show land before pictures were even program fillers.

We doubt if many picture magnates can boast of so early and solid a groundwork of experience as a showman.

Even to-day he is president of the Showmen's National Organization.

Perhaps it was that experience which led to the formation of the All Star Feature Company—that early step to put famous stars and plays on the screen.

Let's see, that was about five years ago—gosh, but doesn't it seem a long time?

Then there was "Cabiria." Don't you remember how startled we all were to learn that a motion picture was to be given its initial presentation in the Astor's Grand Ballroom?

Showmanship again.

Then the opening night at the Knickerbocker — with the brightest luminaries of society in the boxes. To see a motion picture — five years ago.

Showmanship again.

Showmanship is ingrained in Harry Raver—and he is still a young man.

Put those two facts together, remember them, and keep your eye on Harry Raver.

We have a whole-souled admiration, you may gather, for Harry Raver the man and Harry Raver the showman. He's clean as a whistle and as lively as an electric spark—so we're watching for the next flash.

What it will be we don't know. Just now he is making independent productions. Under his wing he has also Maciste, three-time box-office winner in "Cabiria," "Marvelous Maciste" and "The Warrior." Up his sleeve he has big big plans — so we are watching.

You are getting so close to the explanation of that haunting figure that we don't want to hold the suspense much longer. So we'll give you a short and sweet reason for the existence of that 73. Sweet to us—and to you if you let the number 73 become your lucky number. Here's the final reason: "We could not do business without Motion Picture News."—W. W. Goldfish Offers Fox Backing

Places Goldwyn Organization's Resources at His Command in Coming Red Cross Drive Week of May 20-27

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of Goldwyn, has written a letter to William Fox, who has consented to serve as captain of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team in the Red Cross drive for funds the week of May 20-27, offering him the resources of the entire Goldwyn organization. Incidentally, Mr. Goldfish takes the occasion to pay a warm tribute to Mr. Fox, whose work in the interests of war relief already has accomplished so much.

Mr. Goldfish's letter and Mr. Fox's reply follow.

My Dear Mr. Fox:

Returning from your luncheon with both producers and representative exhibitors and responding to the magical thrill of your appeal, I take pleasure in handing you herewith my personal check for $1,000 as my contribution to the second nation wide drive for the Red Cross Fund.

My departure to-morrow for California is going to prevent my participation as one of your lieutenants in this drive during the week of May 20 to 27, but in leaving I place at your disposal the resources of the entire Goldwyn organization. You do not need to "commandeer" it, Goldwyn volunteers to give you its full support.

I wish to take this means of saying what a splendid thing it is for the motion picture industry and for the charitable and relief agencies to which you so freely give your money, your enthusiasm and your genius, that there is a William Fox. You communicate your enthusiasm to others and give them inspiration. I know that your two recent brilliant successes in raising tremendous sums of money—for the Jewish War Relief and the Knights of Columbus—will spur you on to a still bigger success for the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Industry team, of which you are the able captain.

With personal good wishes, I am,

Cordially,
(Signed) SAMUEL GOLDFISH.

To this Mr. Fox replied.

My Dear Mr. Goldfish:

I beg to acknowledge your most beautiful letter and your most beautiful check. Believe me, I highly appreciate the sentiments expressed in your letter, and it during this drive I become tired and weary and feel as though I would like to stop I shall read your letter, which will inspire me to go on and bring the drive for the American Red Cross of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team to a successful conclusion.

Wishing you a pleasant trip, I beg to remain

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) WILLIAM FOX.

Pitt Theatre Adopts Summer Pictures

It was announced from the offices of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, in the Times building, last week, that the Pitt theatre, in Pittsburgh, which earned quite a reputation with big pictures a year ago, and which has been playing legitimate dramatic attractions during the season just ended, would return to pictures for the summer months, next week.

The first picture to go into the Pitt theatre for the summer season will be the Vitagraph feature, "Over the Top," with Arthur Guy Empey. The Pitt theatre, by reason of its location and the fact that it has a cooling system for hot weather, has always run through the summer months in Pittsburgh and done a big business. Among its many features is a forty thousand dollar pipe organ. It is perfectly equipped with screens, booth, machines, etc., for the perfect projection of a film.

Get United Franchises for El Paso

William R. Winch, of the Wigwam theatre, El Paso, has purchased the first and second run franchises for this city of the United Picture Theatres of America, the new co-operative association of exhibitors. The Hidalgo theatre, F. F. Montressa, manager, signed for the third run privilege. W. G. Underwood, representing the U. P. T. of A., closed the deals.

Cinema Exhibitors Open New Headquarters

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County, of which Henry Cole is executive secretary, formally opened its new headquarters at 1323 Southern Boulevard on the evening of Thursday, May 9.

The opening was a grand success, with members, their friends and representatives of the trade press in attendance. Secretary Cole had issued invitations to the affair on May 6.

To insure the presence of the exhibitors and others whose businesses kept them away during the earlier part of the evening, the opening was held at 11 p. m., and continued until far past the midnight hour.

The old headquarters of the Association were at 1243 Southern Boulevard.

World Photographer Goes to France for Y. M. C. A.

Frank R. Willey, who has been connected with World Pictures for some time as a news photographer, has resigned his position to accept the position of news photographer for the Y. M. C. A. in Europe. Mr. Willey will take "stills" and motion pictures of the Y. M. C. A. huts and other establishments and the photos he takes will be used in the forthcoming drive for additional funds with which to further the work of this organization.

First National to Move Its Offices

Owing to the steady increase in the volume of its business, the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is preparing to move its head offices in New York from 18 East Forty-first street to larger quarters, occupying the entire eighth floor of the new building at 6 and 8 West Forty-eighth street. The change will be effected some time before June 1.

With the release of the first of the Chaplin Comedies and the taking over of "Tarzan of the Apes" and "My Four Years in Germany" for distribution througout the United States and Canada, the suite of offices on Forty-first street soon became too crowded for comfort or efficiency.

The new offices have been finished throughout in mahogany, and laid out in such a way that every department will have plenty of light and air.

Spacious quarters have been reserved on the Forty-eighth street side of the building for the directors' meeting room and the executive offices of J. D. Williams and H. O. Schwalbe. The doors of these two administrators of the circuit's destiny will be found to open as readily in the future as they have in the past to any one with ideas that fit into the co-operative policy which is being applied so successfully to the task of film distribution.

J. R. Fulkerson, El Paso Owner, Is Dead

John R. Fulkerson, owner with his brother, of the Alhambra theatre, El Paso, Texas, and possessor of an interest in the Bijou theatre, died in New Orleans, Friday, May 3, after an illness of several months. Mr. Fulkerson was forty-seven years old and unmarried. His brother, S. Vance Fulkerson, manager of the theatres named, was with him at the time of death, and took the remains to Bryan, Texas, for interment.

Caruthers Promotion Manager

F. D. Caruthers, for many years associated in the management of the New York World, has been appointed promotion manager of that newspaper. The appointment was made by Ralph Pulitzer.

Director Alan Crosland in the Army

Alan Crosland, the able young director who worked with Alice Brady on a forthcoming Select Picture in her Star Series, has been placed in Class 1-A of the Selective Draft and has already joined the National Army.

Herbert Griffin

Griffin Does Y. M. C. A. Work Abroad

Herbert Griffin, for many years selling representative of the Nicholas Power Company, has temporarily severed his connection with that company and is now in Russia with the Y. M. C. A. Commission.

Mr. Griffin has long been identified with the industry, and is an expert in projection matters. It is confidently expected that his experience and ability will prove of great value in this new field.

Mary Maurice, Vitagraph "Mother," Dies

Mary Birch Maurice, aged Vitagraph actress, died suddenly Friday, May 3, at the home of relatives at Port Carbon, Pa., where she had gone to recuperate from a long illness following an operation performed at St. John's Hospital, Brooklyn,

Mrs. Maurice was born in Ohio in 1844 and was fifty-one years on the stage. Notable among her appearances were those in Shakespearian roles in support of John T. McCullough, Lawrence Barrett and Edwin Booth and with Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle" and "The Cricket on the Hearth." Her screen career began in 1910, since which time she has been continuously with Vitagraph, playing "mother" roles almost exclusively. Her last appearance was as the aged nurse in "Over the Top."

The funeral was held Tuesday, May 7, at Port Carbon.

George Gould Over-Seas

According to a notification card received by Motion Picture News, Sergeant George Gould, formerly on the editorial staff of the publication, and who was called to the colors in September of last year, has arrived safely in France. He is attached to the 302nd Supply Train, American Expeditionary Forces.

Beatty Returns Crane Barrage

Famous Players-Lasky Advertising Man Heaves Terse Words in Checking Up Critic's Pointed Thrust at Punk Pictures

ONCE more has a critic lifted his pen against the alleged weakness of motion picture plots in general, and once more has the motion picture industry, through one of its representative representatives, replied in kind—only more so.

In a New York daily paper under date of May 3, Dr. Frank Crane, who has contributed many readable articles to the public, saw fit to take a caustic rap at motion pictures as they are "writ." He was perfectly satisfied with actors, settings, direction and photography, but when it came to the story he threw up his hands, and cried: "Why does the producer spend thousands on his production, and then get the barber to write the story?" Dr. Crane admitted he was mad—and mad yet—because of that fact.

But his article made Jerome Beatty, of Famous Players-Lasky, madder still. So Mr. Beatty replied in this manner:

Dear Dr. Crane: I have just read your editorial in The Globe, "To Movie Men," and to paraphrase it, "I am mad yet." I was insulted. How did any editorial writer have the audacity to make such statements in print? What do you think the American public is, anyway—paralyzed from the chin up?

Do you think they are going to believe that sort of talk? I'm afraid you have been talking to some of those disgruntled members of the Authors' League and not to the successful members of that League.

We are perfectly willing to admit that a few of our stories are bad; so are a lot of editorials in The Globe—but the majority of our stories, like the majority of your stuff, is far above the average. We are trying hard and we are paying real money to authors. For instance, just a few days ago Douglas Fairbanks paid $10,000 for the rights to "He Comes Up Smiling."

The trouble is, Dr. Crane, that you're not at all fair about it. You damn us all—every story we put out—when as a matter of fact you will find that the average quality of our stories is just as high, if not higher, than that of the stories in the magazines that reach the people who go to the movies. The Saturday Evening Post, I believe, would be the best example.

You ask, "Why are actors cheerfully paid $1,000 a week while if an anthor wants $1,000 a year the movie man will have a fit?" You know that's unfair.

You say, "The average movie plot is simply punk." That's not true. You say, "Why pay Mary Pickford a billion dollars a year and then get the 'teamsters and plasterers' to write the story for 50 cents?

Let's take Mary Pickford's pictures, that you say were written by the "teamsters and plasterers" for 50 cents.

The "plasterer" who wrote her most recent release, "M'liss," was Bret Harte. A darn good man with a trowel. She is now working on a story by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd.

Before "M'liss" she appeared in "Stella Maris," which you remember came from the whip of a first-class cart driver named William J. Locke.

If you saw Mary Pickford along in December, you noted among the productions of "teamsters and plasterers" in which she played were "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, and "The Little Princess," by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

To get down to the "teamsters and plasterers," or their agents, who have drawn such insignificant sums as one to ten thousand dollars, either for no work at all (when we merely bought the rights to an already produced play or novel) or for two or three weeks' work in which it was necessary merely to outline the skeleton of the story—are Alice Hegan Rice, Joseph C. Lincoln, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Edward Sheldon ("The Song of Songs), Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells, Maurice Maeterlinck, Victorien Sardou, Earl Derr Biggers, Percy Poore Sheehan, Arthur Wing Pinero, Henry Arthur Jones, Robert Hichens, Harry Leon Wilson, Maximilian Foster, Count Leo Tolstoy, Owen Davis, David Graham Phillips, Granville Barker and Laurence Housman ("Prunella"), Larry Evans, Henrik Ibsen, Frederick Ballard ("Believe Me, Xantippe"), George M. Cohan, Marion Polk Angellotti ("The Firefly of France"), George Broadhurst.

These you will admit are pretty good "teamsters and plasterers," and they are people that have been writing for us only recently. If I went back to 1917 I would have to pay extra postage on this letter.

If what you say is true—"If an author wants $1,000 a year the movie man will have a fit"—then we must by this time be a madhouse of epileptics, for it is hardly probable that any of these "plasterers and teamsters" would be satisfied with the wages which you say are the union scale. It is just such as your editorial that holds us back when we need encouragement.

We are trying our best to get good stories. We are paying a pile of money for them, and we are frank to admit that it's no easy job to pick them. Instead of your unfair criticism we should be getting your help, because the motion picture is the universal amusement, and it is up to all editorial writers to make that amusement better. They can't do it by criticism that is so inconsistent that nobody believes it.

Sit right down now and give me a list of novels or plays that you think would make great motion pictures. Give me a list of authors who would be wiling to write for motion pictures if they were given their own price. We will not only be grateful for your suggestions, but will go after the stuff. I think if you make out a list we wil be able to show you that either a great many of them have already been produced, and that you didn't happen to see them, or that for some good reason—not our reason but a reason that you will admit is sound—that will not make good motion pictures.

Consider the drama. All of it — vaudeville, stock companies, New York productions, and Omaha productions. Average them all up, and I think you will find that the quality of the motion picture stories is higher than the quality of those produced on the stage.

That's all. I didn't mean to be rough in this letter. I'm just bouncing back your own language to you.

Sincerely,
JEROME BEATTY.

Sheldon Makes Known New Mutual Policy

James M. Sheldon, who was recently chosen president and general manager of Mutual Films Corporation to succeed John R. Freuler, resigned, was in New York last week in connection with business of the organization. He returned to the Windy City May 13, where he expects to remain but a few days, coming back to Broadway next week.

In an interview with Motion Picture News, Mr. Sheldon said that the new policy of Mutual will revolve around the axis of fewer and better pictures, to meet the demands of the present market. Mr. Sheldon appears convinced that the exhibitor of today wants quality above everything else. In this same connection it is expected that announcement will be made next week of the making of eight big pictures for Mutual, one now finished.

Mr. Sheldon said that four of the quality pictures are to be made beginning immediately in the New York Biograph studio, with Edna Goodrich in the star part. An announcement of considerable importance is also expected to be made shortly in connection with the Mutual Screen Telegram.

The eight big pictures will be backed by an extensive advertising campaign, in keeping with the Sheldon belief that worthy subjects deserve producer boosting to the fullest possible extent. Mr. Sheldon, it might be incidentally stated, is a great believer in service, and the new Mutual policy of fewer and better pictures will permit of adequate service with each release. Mr. Sheldon intends to reorganize the selling system to insure this service.

The American productions, Mr. Sheldon said, will be handled for the present, at least, by Mutual.

Carroll Plans More "Specials"

Pioneer Film Man After Trip Through Country Declares Market Healthy for the "Super-Production

FRANK CARROLL, who in collaboration with Ira Lowry, gave the screen the remarkably successful Goldwyn special, "For the Freedom the World," is back at his desk in the Chandler Building after a trip through the United States and Canada undertaken as the preparatory step to new activities soon to be announced.

Mr. Carroll returns to New York in a far more optimistic frame of mind than many recent film arrivals in the metropolis. "The market may be dull in some spots," he declares, "but never in the long years that I have been in the game have I seen conditions so prosperous for the unusual production—the picture that is big in theme and staging.

"Give the exhibitor a picture with strong selling points to-day, and you don't have to worry. Exhibitors are advertising more and better than ever, and they are giving longer runs. Provided you make a picture that is worthy of being called a 'special' or 'super-production,' the exhibitor will do the rest."

It is known that Mr. Carroll has plans under way that follow the lines suggested in his interview with a NEWS representative.

Frank Carroll's observations on films conditions are backed by an experience in the picture field which dates back to the "pioneer" days. He gained a varied schooling ten years ago successively as actor, director, technical expert and production manager, and for the past five years or more has been an independent figure in the film world. Among his early individual activities was that which gained for him the honor of having produced one of the first five-reel productions made in America.

Not the least important of his activities during the past three years has been as advising and consulting expert on productions and playing talent.

Frank Carroll

It was through his efforts that Kitty Gordon first appeared in motion pictures; that the popular E. K. Lincoln was induced to return to the screen; he first saw the possibilities in Barbara Castleton, which have since led her to stardom; he first made the then unheard of offer of $3,000 per week to Mary Pickford, acting with J. D. Williams; while numerous other prominent film players attest that his is the mind which first started them on their way to success.

Among the recent contracts engineered by Frank J. Carroll are the consummation of an agreement between Fred Stone and the Lasky Company, and the coming appearance in films of Louis Bennison, the star of "Johnny-Get-Your-Gun" with the Betzwood Film Company.

Kleine Nails Unfounded Rumor

Declares Trade Publication Printed Untrue Story That General Had Taken Over Kleine New York Exchange

GEORGE KLEINE, in a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, took occasion to nail and deny what he claims were false rumors and statements which were published in the Exhibitors' Trade Review of recent date.

Mr. Kleine declares this latest misstated rumor, which bore the news that he had turned over his New York exchange to General Film, is in line with the also false report published to the effect he had sold his Canadian business.

The Kleine letter follows:

Gentlemen: There is a statement published in The Exhibitors' Trade Review, Volume 22, page 1738, to the effect that the General Film Company "has taken over the business of the George Kleine Exchange in New York."

This statement is untrue, and as far as I know not the slightest attempt was made by the paper to verify it. It is in line with another statement printed to the effect that I had sold my Canadian business to one Mr. Smeraldi. This was also untrue, and the paper printed it without attempting to verify the alleged fact.

The least that a responsible publication can do when it hears such reports is to verify them before publication.

For your information I will add:

I have not sold nor do I contemplate selling my film distributing business operating under my name and the trade name, "George Kleine System." This business is being conducted conservatively and is as sound as any in the industry. On January 1 I changed releases from the program system to superfeatures and short length features released at irregular intervals. We have had some of the most conspicuous successes of the year, including "The Unbeliever," "Ruggles of Red Gap," "A Pair of Sixes," "Brown of Harvard," the Flagg Comedies, etc.

We have coming a number of big features not yet advertised, among them a great Italian war picture made by Cines at Rome at the instance of the Department of War and Munitions of Italy; also "Young America," a Cohan and Harris play, and "Hawthorne of the U. S. A."

In Canada our offices are aout to be merged with those of the General Film Company; they have not sold out to me nor I to them, the merger maintaining the interests of both parties, and involves economy of operation only.

Very truly yours,
GEO. KLEINE.

"Tarzan" Booked for 6,000 Days in Two Months

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit had closed bookings on "Tarzan of the Apes" up to May 10, totalling 6,009 days. It is claimed that these figures top anything on record in moving picture annals, when the fact is taken into consideration that "Tarzan" was released a bare two months ago.

Many of the leading exhibitors have preferred to play "Tarzan" on a percentage basis. On the other hand, T. L. Talley, of Los Angeles, holder of the First National franchise for Southern California, closed a cash contract with the Kinema theatre in Los Angeles for $3,500 for a two-weeks' run.

It was announced last week that the censorship troubles in Chicago and Philadelphia in conection with the D. W. Griffith picture, "Hearts of the World," manager by Elliott, Comstock and Gest, had been bridged over to a certain extent, and the presentations were continued in both cities with slight deletions.

Educational Pre-Releases the Current Week

The Educational Film Corporation presents as its pre-release at the New York Rivoli the week of May 12, the Katzenjammer cartoon, "Fisherman's Luck," while at the Strand, "Night Animals," by Professor Ditmars, will be shown. These pictures are on the regular releases of the Educational for the week beginning Sunday, May 19.

Haworth Official on Way East

F. J. Hawkins, manager of distribution of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, is on his way to New York from Los Angeles. C. L. Cole, New York distributor for company, accompanies Mr. Hawkins, and they will visit the leading exhibitors of the United States and Canada to arrange for first-run bookings of the Sessue Hayakawa productions.

League in New Quarters

The New York branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has removed its headquarters from 218 West Forty-second street to Room 1211 of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue.

Universal Buys Ambulance

The Universal Film Company has started a fund for the purchase of an automobile to be presented to the National Corps for American War Relief for use on the battle front.

A film salesman, just returned from a trip covering every theatre, town and city in Ohio, western Pennsylvania and Kentucky, reports a copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in every single theatre visited.

Not merely that—but, in every instance, also, the " NEWS " was at the exhibitor's desk being used; and in every instance, a complete file was kept for constant reference.

This is true of no other trade paper—and the plain answer is right inside the covers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS

The " NEWS " is the one paper the exhibitor works with. True of every picture house in the U. S.

That's why, since January 1st, 1918, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has carried seventy-three more pages of paid advertising than any other paper in the field.

Name of above film salesman on request. Why don't you, Mr. Advertiser, make a similar investigation before you spend your appropriation?

Willard Mack with Goldwyn

Famous Playwright Becomes Head of Scenario Department and Confirms Announcement of Pauline Frederick as Goldwyn Star

WILLARD MACK, well-known playwright and husband of Pauline Frederick, star of the screen, has taken charge of Goldwyn's scenario department, with his offices at the company's studios at Fort Lee, N. J. Coupled with his announcement of his assumption of his new duties, Mr. Mack gives definite confirmation of the report telegraphed recently from Los Angeles that Miss Frederick will shortly be seen in pictures produced by the Pauline Frederick Feature Film Company and distributed through Goldwyn.

The field of motion pictures is not new to Mr. Mack, who, during the past four years, has written some of the most successful stage plays of the past decade, among them "Kick In" and "Tiger Rose." His affiliation with the screen began in the days of the Biograph Company, and have continued virtually without interruption since that time. In 1917 alone twenty-seven of his screen plays were picturized and released.

"I should say that I am merely returning to the motion picture field in a newer and bigger environment," said Mr. Mack in connection with his announcement. "Further interest is added to the step I have taken by the fact that in the course of my work I have been able to select and secure for production the first three stories for Pauline Frederick, who, as you know, is Mrs. Mack. Miss Frederick, at the termination of her contract with the Famous Players, will be starred by the Frederick Feature Film Company, recently formed, and her productions will be released through Goldwyn. When she begins work she will be under my personal direction.

"I am particularly happy in forming my new association with the Goldwyn Pictures organizations, because in a single year Goldwyn has brought definitely new standards to the screen under the able guidance of Samuel Goldfish, who formed and founded the Lasky Company, at that time introducing new and hitherto unknown elements of quality and refinement in motion picture production. To my mind he is one of the big, imaginative factors in the advancement of this most important of the new arts, and in Goldwyn I am sure that he is going to make still greater advances, for he now has the opportunity to do the things he has always wanted to do for the screen.

"Goldwyn has an individuality all its own, and these new productions in less than seven months have by their quality compelled public recognition and won public liking. In assuming charge of its scenario department I am given the chance to draw upon the best of the world's dramatic output for our future productions, though it is hardly necessary to say this if you are familiar with the splendid literary and dramatic material already produced by this company."

Famous Players Makes a Record

Reports from Exchanges Bring Total in Liberty Loan Drive to Over Forty Millions—Stars Biggest Factors

IN addition to the $39,896,000 worth of Liberty Loan subscriptions credited to the various stars and units affiliated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the last drive, it is announced that a summary of the subscriptions taken by the exchange offices throughout the country and just compiled, brings the grand total well over the forty million mark.

Last week the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced that the various studios, stars and executives in the New York offices were credited with a total of $39,896,000, at which time it was stated that this company expected to bring the grand total up to forty million dollars when the subscriptions of the exchange staffs were accounted for. The final total is well over the expected amount—viz., $40,215,150.

The amounts reported by the exchanges are as follows: Minneapolis, $1,700; Portland, Me., $550; Boston, $4,950; Buffalo, $50; New York Exchange, $4,100; Fort Lee, $13,650; Fifty-sixth Street Plant, $15,300; S. A. Lynch Enterprises, $250,000; New Haven, Conn., $950; Twenty-third Street, New York City, $150; Kansas City, Mo., $3,150; Detroit, Mich., $1,950; Philadelphia, Pa., $14,700; Omaha, Neb., $200; Denver, Col., $550; Chicago, Ill., $6,100, and Salt Lake City, $100.

The biggest factors in bringing this grand total to such magnitude are, of course, the stars including Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite Clark and William S. Hart, who made personal tours in behalf of the Government's new Loan. Adolph Zukor Motion Pictures Day in New York City was another important contributory toward this total, the other subscriptions coming through stars, players and other members of the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern and Western Studios and offices, and the Ince, Arbuckle, Sennett and Morosco organizations.

Farnum Film Makes Hit in Washington

Applause from leaders in governmental officialdom, including President Woodrow Wilson himself, greeted the exhibition at Keith's Washington, D. C., theatre, of William Farnum's Liberty Loan boosting film. The picture was made at the William Fox Studios on the Coast, under the direction of Frank Lloyd, in spare moments and half-hours snatched during the period that "True Blue" was in work.

United Theatres Assembles Its Board

By degrees the Advisory Board of the United Picture Theatres of America is being assembled, President J. A. Berst having just issued an announcement containing the names of several exhibitors from all sections of the country who had already been appointed to places on the board. Among those named in Mr. Berst's announcement are Alfred S. Black, the president of the Maine Theatres, Inc., and the proprietor of the theatres in Maine, Vermont and Massachusetts: L. W. Brophy, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Oklahoma; Herman J. Brown, the president of the Exhibitors' League of Idaho; David Cohen, the leading exhibitor of Binghamton, N. Y.; Harry M. Crandall, proprietor of eleven theatres in Washington, D. C.; William Epstein, owner of the Royal in San Antonio, the Prince in Houston, and the Strand in Laredo; Thomas Furniss, member of the National Executive Commitee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the owner of the Strand and two other houses in Duluth; A. J. Gilligham, a prominent theatrical man of Michigan; Alfred Hamburger, of the Twentieth Century, the Ziegfeld and the Fine Arts in Chicago; S. S. Harris, owner of the Royal and the Crystal in Little Rock; Gilbert Heyfron, a leading Montana exhibitor; Ernest H. Horstman, president of the Princess Theatre, Inc., of Boston, and national treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; William Isenberg, a prominent Mississippi theatre owner; George A. Mank, proprietor of nine theatres in Arizona; Charles A. McElravy of the Majestic Amusement Co., Memphis; Hector E. M. Pasmezoglu, owner of the Mozart theatre, St. Louis, and R. D. Shirley of the Muse theatre, Omaha.

Metro Gives Two More to Uncle Sam

Voluntary enlistments have added two more stars to Metro's service flag. "Benny" Alexander, an employe of the shipping department, has enlisted in the Engineers and Hazen Ross, of the executive office force, has joined the Field Artillery. Ross enlisted on his eighteenth birthday. He was eleven pounds underweight, but in view of his excellent physical condition this objection was waived. Metro now has men in every branch of the service both at home and abroad.

Soriero Dines Employes of His Theatres

Thomas D. Soriero, member of the Advisory Board of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and general manager of the Strand in Lowell, entertained the staffs of both theatres and a number of other invited guests at a banquet at the Hotel Westminster, Boston, recently. An elaborate musical program was provided. During the course of the entertainment subscriptions were taken for Liberty Bonds, Mr. Soriero leading with four.

Legion of Death (Metro-Story)—"Fine production but story poor. Did not draw."

Unclaimed Goods (Paramount-Martin)—"Fair offering; good satisfaction." "This story was so impossible—just fair picture."

Woman and the Law (Fox Special)—"Everybody said this was fine." "Splendid." "Interesting story."

With Neatness and Dispatch (Metro-Bushman-Bayne) — "Very pleasing." "Best Bushman for a long time."

My Four Years in Germany (First National)—"One week. Extra big."

Over the Top (Vitagraph-Empey)—"Record breaker. One week."

The Biggest Show on Earth (Paramount-Ince)—"A dandy picture. Everybody liked it."

Editor's Note: The Box Office Report chart includes all pictures released within the previous eight weeks on which a sufficient number of exhibitor reports have been received to base a verdict. In the column "Average of Exhibitors' Reports" the term "Extra Big" indicates a picture which far surpassed expectations; "Big" means a picture doing better than the usual business for that day under average conditions; "Average" is the grading given the production on which business held up to normal; "Poor" indicates the picture falling below normal in box office and entertainment value.

TITLE, STAR, AND BRAND	AVERAGE OF EXHIBITORS' REPORTS	EXHIBITORS' OWN COMMENTS
AMARILLY OF CLOTHESLINE ALLEY (Mary Pickford—Artcraft)	Extra Big	"Excellent and well liked by all." "Pleasing picture, plenty of good laughs and satisfactory box office attraction." EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

" Her Decision "

Money to Pay the Doctor's Bill the Basis of This Story

(Triangle—May 12)

THERE is plenty of heart interest in this picture. The subject, however, is quite "shady," and although put over cleverly, it will prove objectionable.

The story was written by Lotta Gannet and tells of Phyllis, a girl who worked and slaved to provide for her younger sister, Inah. The latter became involved with a rich young man who betrayed her. As Phyllis needed money to help her sister out of her predicament, she tried to borrow from the man she was engaged to but he refused to let her have it. She then explains the whole affair to her employer, who had loved her all the while and offered to help her and her sister. She told him she was now ready to marry him although she didn't love him as that would be the only condition under which she would accept help from him. They marry and in the end she learned to love him.

Miss Swanson gets a whole lot of sympathy as the devoted sister, and does some fine emotional acting. This picture will appeal to the middle and lower class elements.

" Wolves of the Border "

A Roy Stewart Western with Thrills Aplenty

(Triangle—May 12)

YOUR patrons will find plenty of thrills in this Western drama if they enjoy this kind of stuff. The story tells of a hard feeling between two ranchmen, one of them being Roy Stewart, due to the intrigues of a conspiring foreman. In the end Stewart marries his opponent's daughter after an explanation clears their misunderstandings.

There is some daredevil riding in this picture that will help to make it thoroughly enjoyable, as everybody like horses and good horsemanship.

" Moonshine "

Arbuckle's Latest Pronounced " As Good as Any in the Past "

(Paramount-Arbuckle Two Reel Comedy)

"MOONSHINE" is as good an Arbuckle comedy as any ever released. There are several new tricks in this one that will prove very amusing. Mr. Arbuckle and Buster Keaton are the "terrible" revenue officers and Al St. John, the moonshiner. It is a clean comedy that will please any audience.

" Struggle Everlasting "

At Last—A Vampire Who Wins Your Sympathy

(Harry Rapf Production)

THIS is the first vampire play I have seen since I first saw objects moving on the screen that I could safely recommend even to those of you catering to family patronage. Although I am a strong advocate of clean pictures I have always believed it possible to produce a play of this kind and still be clean and free from vulgarity. My faith was justified after seeing this picture. Not only is there real dramatic art in it but heart interest as well.

In most plays of this character, you almost hate the vampire woman although you admire her for her art. This picture, however, is an exception inasmuch as your sympathy goes with her from the very beginning, and is intensified greatly towards the end. There are situations in it that will bring sympathetic tears to the eyes of the spectator, a strong one among them being the church scene. Though I always deem it wise to keep the religious element out of pictures, I must admit that in this particular instance it is used very effectively. If it is possible for you to secure a small church organ to play appropriate music to add the proper atmosphere I am sure it will increase its effectiveness a hundredfold.

Miss Reed portrays her role in a very dignified manner and at times she looks very beautiful. The supporting cast is splendid and includes such good players as Milton Sills and Irving Cummins. Some of the types fit so well in their roles that they will be the cause of no little merriment to your patrons.

The direction is splendid, and interior settings very beautiful, although the photography is somewhat dark.

This picture will undoubtedly have a strong appeal to the feminine element.

" Five Thousand Dollar Reward "

Franklin Farnum in Heavy "Weller" for a Change

(Blue Bird—May 29)

THIS is a well produced melodrama that will hold your interest to the end. As far as entertaining your patrons is concerned, however, it all depends on whether they will like a picture based on a murder.

The scenario was taken from the story "His Arcadian Wife," by Charles Wesley Sanders, published in All Story Magazine, and tells of a young man who quarrelled with his uncle on account of his gambling habits. The uncle is murdered that night and the crime fastened upon the nephew. He is arrested but escapes. Later he saves a girl from a runaway horse, falls in love and marries her. Eventually the real murderer is found. It happened to be a lawyer who committed the crime to avoid arrest for stealing certain of his uncle's securities.

Franklyn Farnum followers have been used to seeing him in light comedy dramas and I am afraid this one will prove too heavy for them. Why don't producers stick to the "Bringing Home Father" kind of stories for him as long as they appeal more to picturegoers?

The picture is clean and will please those who enjoy melodrama.

" Broadway Scandal "

A Drama Helped by Touches of Franco-American Sentiment

(Blue Bird—May 27)

THIS picture will please as it is rather interesting. The author, Harvey Gates, had the happy thought of inserting some Franco-American patriotic touches that are timely, and he has incorporated them so cleverly that they are bound to have a strong appeal and cause a sympathetic tear or two to trickle down the cheeks of your patrons.

Another clever idea is the elimination of the court room scene giving only a glimpse through the open door, thus cutting all the unnecessary details of the trial and the subsequent conviction.

Miss Myers makes a convincing young French girl, while Mr. Edwin August gets lots of sympathy as the young doctor and the lover.

" The Triumph of the Weak "

Alice Joyce Appealing in a Story of a Past That Will Not Down

(Vitagraph—May 13)

THE foundation of a good drama is heart interest and you will find this element in abundance in this offering.

The story was written by Edith Ellis and tells of Edith Merril (Alice Joyce), who is sent to prison for stealing to obtain money to feed her baby boy. When paroled, she seeks the orphanage where her boy was placed, steals him, and later marries. "Diamond" Mabel (Eulalie Jenson), who served time with her, recognizes her and threatens to tell the authorities and have her boy taken away from her unless she joins her and her pal in a certain crime. She later is forced to steal five hundred dollars of her husband's money and is arrested by a detective. Her past is now exposed to her husband, who is shocked, but when informed that she stole originally because of her baby, he forgives her and declares he will be waiting with open arms to receive her when she comes back after serving the balance of her sentence.

Miss Joyce does some very good emotional work. The supporting cast is excellent, Eulalie Jensen deserving special mention. As a whole it is a clean offering that will entertain any audience.

"Vengeance"

Montague Love in a Story of England and India

(World—May 20)

THE very best can be said of "Vengeance" is that it is an average program offering that will help fill the week's bill.

The story tells of a nobleman, an officer of the Queen's regiment, who through his brother's trickery is made to appear a card cheat. Thus humiliated he leaves for India where he marries a Hindu girl and a son is born. The father is killed while on a tiger hunt. The son, when grown, in going through some of his father's papers reads the story of his father's disgrace and decides to avenge him. He goes to England but shortly after his arrival his uncle is stricken and dies. He now discloses his identity, and although the rightful heir, he refuses to accept the title, preferring to go back to India.

The foundation of the story, that is the marriage of a white to an Asiatic, is not a popular feature with the American public at the present time, and it would be well if producers would avoid incorporating such a material into pictures.

"The Mysterious Client"

Irene Castle in a Rapid Action Mystery-Romance

(Pathe—May 19)

"THE MYSTERIOUS CLIENT" is an offering of the serial story type, nevertheless, it is interesting and entertaining.

The story, written by Charles Davey, tells of a girl who appeals to a young attorney for help against some mysterious enemies. After many thrilling events her queer actions and the mystery surrounding the case are explained to the young attorney as being a scheme conceived by her and her father to get for herself a husband who would prove to be a real man.

The element of heart appeal is absent from this picture, the entertainment being derived entirely from the mystery of the story, the suspense and the physical action, which is swift throughout.

It is an attraction that will give variety to your program.

"Pay Day"

The Latest Drew Production a Five Reel "Screen Classic Offering

(Screen Classics, Inc.—Released by Metro—Five Reels)

CLEVER handling saves this picture and I can safely assume that it will prove a success. The story itself, adapted from the stage play by M. Meaney and Della Bailey, is strongly dramatic and had it been presented in its original form it would have undoubtedly proven too heavy for most picturegoers.

The picture opens with Sidney Drew seated at a table and working on one-reel scenarios. Just then Mrs. Drew enters, takes the scenario Mr. Drew had just completed away from his hands and tears it to pieces to his great dismay. She then hands him one for a five-reeler stating she would rather work in such a feature as it gives her a chance to act. Mr. Drew starts to read it and the main story of the picture begins.

It tells of Kirke Brentwood (Sidney Drew), who induces Doris Fenton (Mrs. Drew), his sweetheart, to steal one thousand dollars from the safe of Dr. Grayson, her employer. She is arrested, and when she appeals to Kirke for the refund of the money he professes inability to come to her assistance. Rather than implicate the man she loves, she goes to jail for a term of two years.

In the meantime Brentwood has married a wealthy widow, but when she discovers he had affairs with other women she tells him she has decided to apply for a divorce and that in her will she will cut him off without a cent.

Shortly afterwards Doris, whose prison term has now expired, comes to the Brentwood home. Kirke has just strangled his wife and by a ruse he fastens the crime upon Doris. After a trial she is committed to the penitentiary for life. Embittered, Doris tells Kirke that some day he will pay.

Five years later she escapes and disguised as a nurse, gains entrance to the Brentwood home. Kirke is terror stricken when she appears in his room. A struggle ensues, during which Doris proposes to Kirke that they should try to forget and live the old life back again. Kirke agrees, they embrace and kiss. Doris then tells Kirke she is now revenged and that he will soon pay in full. Holding out her hands she shows him she has leprosy which she has given to him and that it means the leper colony for both of them for the rest of their lives, and she says, "Just as you used to say to me when I thought there was truth in your lies—'you and I together'—always you and I."

"Toys of Fate," with Mme. Nazimova

Nazimova Gets Acting Opportunity in a Strong Drama

(Screen Classics Inc.—Seven Reels, Released by Metro Pictures Corporation)

DRAMATICALLY this is a perfectly produced picture. This dramatic success, however, is attained at the expense of the entertainment, because there are some points in the story that will prove rather repulsive. For instance, it isn't pleasant to see a father, even if he be a gypsy, who would give his daughter as a wife to the very man that ruined his home by having induced her mother to follow him. Then again, drugs and drug fiends have no place on the screen, at least right now. I agree that in this instance the dramatic intensity sought for is attained, but to the detriment of the entertainment.

It is a gypsy story that tells of Hagar, the wife of a gypsy chief, who leaves Farros, her husband, and Azah, her baby daughter, for the wealthy Bruce Griswold. Soon he tires of her, and she kills herself by jumping from a window. The tribe, years later, in one of their wandering trips, camps on Griswold's property. Azah, now grown to womanhood, meets Henry Livingston and falls in love. He also is attracted by her beauty. Griswold, having a sinister purpose in view, induces her father to allow him to send her to school, stating he will marry her after she is educated. Two years later she returns from school just as Livingston, who thought Azah lost to him forever, is announcing his engagement to Griswold's daughter. Learning from Livingston's lips of the marriage agreement her father entered without her knowledge, she forces Griswold, who had no intention of marrying her, to abide by the terms of the agreement, and thus the ceremony is performed.

Later her father tells her the story of her mother's death and of Griswold's guilt. Horrified to think she is the wife of such a beast, she determines to commit suicide. She places three drug pills in a glass of champagne. As she goes to the window, temporarily attracted by her father playing on his violin outside, Griswold enters, drinks the wine with the poison and falls dead. Azah is arrested as the murderer and tried, but cleared through the efforts of Livingston, who has now broken his engagement to Griswold's daughter. Azah and Henry are married, and no longer the toys of fate, face a future of happiness together.

The story offers Mme. Nazimova, one of the best emotional screen actresses ever born, splendid opportunities to display her wonderful talents.

The supporting cast is excellent; direction, photography and lightings are of the highest standard. Most of the scenes have been taken outdoors and are very beautiful.

All of Cleveland Newspapers and a Generous Share of Theatres Strive for Publicity Always Before the Patron

LAST week we told you that Cleveland is "over the top" so far as newspaper co-operation and the advertising patronage of a good share of the theatres is concerned. We told you then what was being done with Sunday advertising, how the theatres of the better class were paying attention to preparing pulling copy and how the newspapers were encouraging them by printing real news matter—the sort of stuff that the "fans" want to read.

We want to give full credit to the theatre that does plan its display for Sunday and uses big space for the announcements, but the theatre that has done this has not done its full duty. If it is a downtown house running the same bill for a week, some managers may count on the patrons remembering the name of the star and the production, but the wise manager takes no chances on that. He keeps the bill before the patron who has planned on Sunday to go to a theatre on Wednesday so that he won't forget and that he won't forget which theatre to visit.

So, too, are we glad to credit the neighborhood houses which advertise their bill for the week on Sunday. Too many neighborhood managers simply announce that it does them no good to advertise in the daily papers and pay the rate for the full circulation when a comparatively small percentage of the people taking the paper live in their neighborhood. But it remains a fact that in every city where it has been tried and the newspapers have undertaken to afford co-operation, the really intelligent managers of neighborhood houses have been converted into regular advertisers.

We know, from experience in the daily field, that it is mighty hard to convert the average neighborhood manager into advertising at all and a great deal has been accomplished when he is brought into the Sunday issue. There he will use a small space and give his bill for the week. In mighty few cities, indeed, has the point of perfection been reached where the neighborhood theatre is converted to daily advertising. But that is the ideal state of affairs and it will pay the theatre where the newspaper shows desire to give intelligent co-operation. And the newspapers of Cleveland are certainly doing that and today exhibitors can take their example as the best that the country affords. If every newspaper in the country would do what Cleveland newspapers are doing there would be a growth overnight of fifty per cent in the motion picture business—and that is saying a great deal.

We have told you that the Leader is the Sunday edition of the News. The Plain Dealer is the only morning paper and the News and Press are the afternoons. All of these papers are following somewhat the same lines, all are affording co-operation and all are getting profit out of it. And more than that they are furnishing their readers interesting matter and we very much doubt whether any one of the three papers would be willing to drop this daily feature even if they did not get a line of advertising from it hereafter. We feel sure that if one of them did there would be such a demand from the readers that it would be speedily restored. This motion picture matter is just as much a feature of the newspapers as the sporting pages and we'll wager that more people read those departments than do the columns of baseball and prize-fight gossip.

What is the result of this co-operation so far as the dailies are concerned, omitting in this article all reference to the Sunday situation which was fully covered in the first article? Briefly, it is this: All the papers print the news and gossip each day and each one of them carries advertising of a large number of theatres, both downtown and neighborhood. The Press has 72 of these houses represented every day; the News 31 and the Plain Dealer 48. The larger number of theatres advertising in the Press is probably explained by the fact that the newspaper directories give it some 45,000 more circulation than its nearest competitor.

Let's see what they do. First, the Press. We are reprinting on the page opposite its Monday page. Here you will note the advertising grouped under headings "Photoplay Features" for the day. There is a short review of each of the new attractions at the first-run houses, not in extended detail, but enough to give the fan an outline of the picture. There is a cut used, in this case that of Charlie Chaplin's leading lady, Edna Purviance.

On other days during the week the Press runs a column or more of motion picture news. For instance, in a Friday issue which we have before us we find the gossip leading with a story about "The Caillaux Case," being made by Fox, one about Margarita Fischer discarding the German "s" in her name, and a lot of other gossip that the fans will relish.

On Monday the News leads its column with a discussion of the features of the news weekly which is issued by the paper in connection with Pathe, prints an outline of the subjects covered, with illustrations, and then devotes a five to eight-line paragraph to the new pictures shown at the various theatres.

One of the features of the News on Monday and every other day in the week is the "Ask Me" column, where several questions and answers are run. It is our idea that this belongs rather more as a feature of the Saturday afternoon edition or Sunday issue, but the paper probably had found that the people want to read these day after day and, of course, it knows the situation best.

Now, all through the week there is carried a special heading, "Moments in Movie Land," which consists of one main story illustrated generally with a half-column cut of the player being discussed, with sometimes a larger cut. This matter is signed by "Lottie Lee," but we are pretty sure that it is the work of the photoplay editor, who is of the opposite sex to that indicated by the name. This matter is written in gossipy style and is mighty good reading. For instance, in the page that we reproduce here is carried the news item that Chaplin has not been drafted, and then follows a lot of semi-humorous stuff about what would happen if he should be, and pictures the whole German army in flight with Charlie pursuing them with custard pies.

There is another column headed "Lenslights by Lottie" and in short paragraphs this gives the news of the industry as taken from the trade paper, together with original paragraph of observation on developments.

In another issue there is some gossip about domestic happenings in stardom, possibly matter that the producers would rather not have published, but the sort of stuff that the fans "eat up." Right here is one point where many of the publicity departments of film companies, in our opinion, make a serious mistake. When they have a real news item they generally try to hide it. We do not mean mere scandal, but actual happenings. Any publicity man ought to know that the newspapers that want this matter will get it, and they lose prestige with the newspapers by not frankly giving it to them.

The writer remembers, some years ago, when he assumed the motion picture editorship of a big paper that he wrote to the producers telling what he wanted in the way of biographical sketches and including in this whether the players were married. The press agents literally held up their hands in horror; they didn't want such matter printed under any circumstances; that sort of stuff would kill the popularity of stars, etc. Well, it was more trouble to get it, but the writer compiled a column and a half of names of husbands and wives and it was clipped all over the country. Publicity departments have progressed since that time, but they will do well to send out all the news that is NEWS even though it may not be exactly straight boost stuff. Failure to include any such stuff is why the batch of "news matter" from some com-

Will You Pay As Much For Short Film?

FOLLOWING the first symposium on "What Is the Matter with Pictures?" participated in by members of the Advisory Board there have come to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS so many complaints against padding features that we have addressed to the board members a second question: "Would you pay as much for a three or four-reel feature where the action was carried to only its proper footage as you are now paying for a padded five-reeler with the same star?"

The first question that the members of this board considered was largely general, but it brought out startling unanimity about what was the matter with present productions. There was apparent agreement that the people want pictures that will interest, that they are sick of the problem play, that the costume drama will not draw and that the fairy story has been overdone. There were faults to be found with inconsistencies of stories, with the failure of directors to familiarize themselves with the people that they were attempting to picture, with the result that the production was ridiculous to those who knew. There were many other points brought out, but the chief sin of them all was emphasized in every response—padding.

When the first five-reel picture was made it was more or less of an experiment, but the production was made in five reels because it required that footage to tell the story. It was not merely an attempt to achieve length. Exhibitors now charge that since the five-reeler has become a habit many of the producers undertake to make every story that they get into that length, regardless of whether the story justifies it. If there is not enough material for more than three or four reels of action, of story essential, they add the rest in more or less "artistic" padding—but despite the artistry padding just the same.

Naturally the solution of the problem—the ideal one—would be that the producer should not take any story that did not have five reels of action in it, but still there are stories that will make delightful amusement for three or four reels. The producer would have the salary of the star to pay just the same though it would probably take a shorter time to make the shorter picture, he would have the story to buy at probably the same rate as the longer story, and there would be the special settings and other things that would keep up the cost. So would the exhibitor be willing to pay as much for the three or four-reeler, chuck full of action.

It has been suggested that if the manufacturer limited the length of the picture to the real worth of the story it would be of greater value in causing longer runs. A particular star, it is held, would draw as well, or better, in a four-reeler that is full of action and would leave more satisfied patrons than result from audiences watching the same star through five, six or more reels of padded stuff. One of the contributors this week points out that one, two and three reels are sometimes taken in mere introduction. It is really not a part of the story; it is put there to get length. Certainly the picture that calls for three reels of introduction in order to explain the two reels of story that follows is not going to satisfy the audience and is not going to increase the popularity of the star or the prestige of the manufacturer.

It is pointed out, too, that some manufacturers are advertising each production of the star's as the greatest picture in which she has ever appeared. Exhibitors complain that this is deceiving the exhibitor and leading the exhibitor to deceive the public. The result, in the long run, is obvious. Methods of legitimate exploitation are weakened by this plan and the long run for the meritorious picture is made far more difficult because the public has heard the cry of "Wolf, Wolf" far too often.

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, wants the producers to leave alone stories that cannot be made into good features. He declares that even if the output of various stars should be limited it would mean a step toward longer runs and a satisfied public. He declares that the exhibitor will pay regardless of length, but he wants no padding in any case:

It has been suggested that one of the reasons that manufacturers encourage the padding process is because exhibitors will not pay the same price for a short "feature" as they might for one running five, six or more reels. The price of any commodity is regulated by demand. This same rule applies to picture productions. A feature's value can only be measured by the box-office returns, because ultimately the public pays.

Progressive stars like Douglas Fairbanks and a few others apparently have recognized that a feature should be measured by merit and not footage. For example, Mr. Fairbanks has appeared in "A Modern Musketeer," "Headin' South," "Mr. Fix-it," and a few others where the footage did not exceed much over four thousand feet and these productions gave complete satisfaction.

The writer doesn't mean that Mr. Fairbanks, Miss Pickford, or Miss Marsh should appear in two or three-reelers. Because Charlie Chaplin can pack a theatre with a two or three-reel picture doesn't prove that these other stars can do likewise. It should be remembered that Chaplin's productions are in a separate field and similar to a vaudeville act, are written principally to provoke laughter, which makes plot or story secondary. On the other hand, stars like Fairbanks generally appear in a sustained story which must be developed intelligently. It is generally understood that it is more difficult to write a good short story than a novel. The same rule might apply to the writing of motion picture scenarios. The scarcity of stories would not make it easier to present these stars in two or three reels than it would longer productions. There can be no objection to the length of a good feature. What the public objects to is drawn-out scenes and unnecessary detail. They want the stars and directors to stick to the story and eliminate "camouflage."

Stories that cannot be developed into good features should be left alone, even if less productions were made. The great fault with our producing system is that a star is expected to turn out seven, eight or nine features a year, the same way as one might order eight or nine suits of clothes.

Good stories cannot be thrown together to order and stars should refuse to appear in anything but good stories, no matter how hard they are to get. The public will repay the star and manufacturer by continuing to idolize the star, and the manufacturer will find that this method will be a step closer to longer runs for pictures.

Another fault lies with the method of cutting pictures. After a production leaves the studio it is then cut by the manufacturer. With a few exceptions the man who makes the cuts knows nothing about either producing or exhibiting, and naturally the result is unsatisfactory. The best paid job with a magazine or newspaper is the editor (the man who cuts). Every manufacturer ought to have an editor—a man who knows and understands the audiences that are expected to digest the feature.

There is the added danger that some exhibitors may themselves pad the program when the manufacturer's offering falls below the customary length. In the better grade theatres this situation would adjust itself. The progressive manager who watches his audience will use good judgment here. Either he will not add anything to his program or else will fill in with a short subject that will balance the show "just right." The theatre that sells quantity and pads the program just to get a long show doesn't count, because there is no future for it anyway.

There would be more "long-run" features if manufacturers would stop using meaningless adjectives in connection with their releases. It is decidedly old-fashioned to call every release the "greatest" production ever. How do you expect to hold the confidence of the public and exhibitor when you misrepresent.

Modern advertising is based on sincerity. Some manufacturers hire Broadway theatres to establish a production as a special "long-run" feature—and when it leaves New York to make good with exhibitors it generally falls flat.

The question of long runs always adjusts itself. If the patrons of a theatre want a picture bad enough, they turn out in such great numbers that any progressive manager must hold the picture over. On the legitimate stage productions run a week or sometimes a year, depending on its success.

In conclusion, Mr. Manufacturer, the exhibitor wants good pictures, regardless of length, and will pay you as much for a four-reeler as a seven-reeler, but it must be all solid—no alloys.

FRANK L. NEWMAN, president of the Royal and Regent theatres, Kansas City, would be just as willing to pay as much for a three or four-reel picture as a five-reeler, and he points out the way in which he would complete his program to the satisfaction of his patrons. To prove that this will be profitable he cites the interest of a show that lasted half an hour and left the patrons satisfied:

I have been giving this matter a great deal of thought, for just recently I saw two or three pictures which were about eight thousand feet long and I was wondering to myself just when were the exhibitors going to realize that footage was not the thing the public want, it is the story and action.

This brings to my mind, you take in the ase of Douglas Fairbanks' pictures, most of them have been round four thousand to forty-two hundred feet. We have never ad a complaint from our patrons saying that the subject was oo short because it was full of action and the public is not interested in the length of the pictures but solves itself that the public want quality and not quantity.

I believe at the present time the majority of the exhibitors throughout the country are using Current Events and I believe when anyone goes into the average picture show and sits still and looks constantly at a picture for an hour or an hour and a half, they really have had enough, so if the producers are making pictures that are four reels in length and this picture is full of action and no padding, the patron's attention is held at all times and then you add on a Current Event with this picture, the patrons are not worn out or tired out by a long subject and when they leave the theatre they leave fresh and have enjoyed the show, but you take pictures that the first two or three reels just simply introduce the characters and start working up to the plot, the patrons lose the interest and then finally when the story does begin to be of some interest the picture is over.

I for one would be willing to pay the same price for a three or four-reel picture as I do for a five, six or seven-reel picture if the story was carried out at the length justified and not padded just to make it a five-reel picture.

You take in my case, I have been running for four years, an hour and fifteen minute show, charging fifteen and twenty-five cents (fifteen cents the last nine months) and if we have a full five thousand feet I add on about four minutes of Current Events. If we only have forty-five hundred feet I add on five hundred feet of Current Events; in other words, I take the Current Events reel and add on whatever I can to make this hour and fifteen minute show.

If I get a subject that is more than five thousand feet I do not use the Current Events at all that week. In other words, I have made a standard for my houses of a show of an hour and fifteen minutes. I have been doing that for four years and my patrons have been very well satisfied. There have been very few instances where I had to change this schedule. Personally I do not think there are very many stories that cannot be put into five reels or even less, and I believe if the producer would keep in mind to make his plays short and sweet that they will hold the public better and will make them more hungry for pictures instead of keeping them in one place and wearing them out with one big eight or ten-reel picture.

In nearly every instance the producer will say to the exhibitor with each subject that it is the greatest story in which that star has ever played. They have said that so much that I do not pay any attention to it whatever and never make any announcement to my patrons until I personally see this picture myself on account of my houses running only first-run pictures in both of my theatres and I am unable to guide myself by what other exhibitors have done with their pictures and naturally must wait until the picture arrives before I can make any announcement to my patrons.

Just recently my competitor had on Charlie Chaplin in his latest picture and he has a theatre seating about seven hundred and he ran his show every thirty-five minutes. He was unable to take care of his people from eleven o'clock in the morning until eleven o'clock at night, and a great many people who saw this picture came over to my theatre and there was not one who complained of the length of his show. Now you can imagine people paying seventeen cents for a thirty-five minute show and being satisfied. I am citing this instance to you that the public want the show and not the length of time.

I am not saying this will fit in every case, but when you give the public an hour or an hour and fifteen minute performance for ten and fifteen cents, they are well satisfied, if you give them the quality. A great many exhibitors think that the more film they show their patrons the more business they will get. I believe they are mistaken. There are a few of course who will sit there all day, but the majority of the people are well satisfied with an hour or an hour and fifteen or twenty minute show.

I hope that more exhibitors will see this in the same light as I do and urge the producers to make pictures that will hold the interest from the first reel and do away with the added footage just to make a five-reel or six-reel picture.

Your Idea and Ours

G. F. FULLERTON always used big space in his displays, generally three or four full columns in his Sunday announcements for the Jessen and von Heberg theatres in Seattle, but when he gets a picture that he thinks is bigger than the others, he goes to it with page displays. Here is one that he used on "Tarzan of the Apes," which was the first picture that the company ever played for more than a week. It ran for eight days to packed houses. Advertising was responsible to a considerable extent.

LIKE the story the screen adaptation of Tarzan is unusual; New York eagerly stood in line for weeks during the sensational showing of this super-play; homage that is accorded few pictures! Massive, spectacular, seem weak in describing this feature play—in story, in unstinted and lavish staging, in terrific and death-defying deeds even to hand-to-hand encounters with beasts of the jungles (a whole menagerie of them roam through the play); Tarzan simply sweeps you off your feet—its entire eight reels, from fade-in to fade-out, are wonderful.

Note the liberal amount of white space in this advertisement. That is one of the things that "Hundred Per Cent" insists on in all of his displays. He never crowds the eye or confuses the reader. When he wants to "say more," he takes more room in which to say it — a mighty safe rule to follow, especially if it will keep you from saying too much. Another thing that stands out is the circus style of reading matter used here. It is justified by the spectacular character of the picture.

"Mine's better" never sold anything, unless you first told the public and then proved it.

FROM the specimens of advertising of the various theatres that we have seen, we don't hesitate to say that Louisville, Ky., is one of the leaders in being behind the times. This is an example that evidences it. We take from the Sunday Courier-Journal the display of the Walnut theatre on "The Kaiser," which was about to start a week's run.

NEXT WEEK—HOWARD HICKMAN IN "BLUE BLOOD"

You are familiar with the advertising possibilities of this picture and the fact that theatres all over the country are using the biggest space that they have ever used on it, averaging quarter pages and running up to full pages. But when this picture comes to Louisville, what does the Walnut theatre do? It uses the vast amount of two inches double column, buried down among a lot of other advertising. It does not make any play on the features of the film that will appeal to the general public.

We have been told that Louisville is a poor motion picture city. With such advertising we are fully prepared to believe it.

The chief trade-mark to put on your theatre is that of satisfaction to your patrons.

LAST week we printed a striking advertisement on "The House of Glass," work of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., which had just one thing the matter with it. Here is an ideal display on the same production, designed by the Eckel theatre, Syracuse. This occupies a space 6½ inches deep across three columns, somewhat smaller space than the Eckel generally uses. The black and white effect is cleverly used and the house built out of glass immediately attracts the eye to the display, while the picture of Clara Kimball Young is centered and stands out because of its surroundings.

Now one thing to be noted about this display is that there is the least possible amount of reading matter. In the first place, all around the advertisement is a quarter of an inch of white space and then the line effect makes the black and white stand out all the stronger. The display is so different that it will attract attention in any newspaper, even if thrown up against a mass of other motion picture advertising.

It's worth a lot to know, but it's worth more to tell the public, too.

HERE is an excellent advertisement, the work of the Zelda theatre, Duluth, Minn. Now the great trouble about all of the advertising in Duluth is the use of heavy black borders and heavy Gothic type. Every house seems to think that it has to use this material to be right and after a survey of the local advertising other than motion pictures, we are inclined to believe that the newspapers themselves are responsible for this custom. Either Gothic or open face seems to be the style. And it is true that these two styles are used by the Zelda, but here the heavier rules have been well used and the signboard effect is brought out for the reason that there is plenty of white space given.

Here is the very thing that we have said about the use of rules: Never use one unless you use it with a definite purpose. The designer of this advertisement knew just the effect that he wanted to achieve and he succeeded in getting it. That is what rules are for. Don't be afraid of them when you know how to use them; but by all means, if you don't know, keep off.

Bet the ordinary fellow who doesn't believe that motion picture advertising pays still has a lightning rod on his house.

USING a half page in the Hartford Courant, the Princess theatre, Bristol, Conn., has done some good advertising on "The Kaiser." Of course, the main thing is the employment of the cut furnished by Jewel Productions, but the designer has some good lines in "This Is He, the Mad Dog."

It is a good advertisement, but we believe that this would have been more effective had the space been taken up and down the page. This would have resulted in the left-hand portion of the display being used at the top and the eye would naturally have read down the column.

But this is only a slight improvement. The main lesson from the reproduction of this display is that the theatres everywhere are learning to appreciate the value of advertising, and big advertising at that. When a theatre uses a space in its nearest city paper like this it is a good sign, and it's a mighty good thing that big pictures are encouraging these big displays.

The fellow who advertises each production as "the greatest ever" is not one of those who is interested in raising the standard of productions.

VICTORIA theatre, Buffalo, one of the finest neighborhood houses in the country, recently devoted an insert in its house program to an appeal to its patrons to see that the law regarding the attendance of children at picture shows is enforced. In a statement addressed "To children and those who love them" Manager Edward L. Hyman asked that children under sixteen remain away from the theatre unless accompanied by parent or guardian and that grownups do not abet the breaking of the law by buying tickets for the children, escorting them into the theatre and then leaving them.

TO CHILDREN AND
THOSE WHO LOVE THEM

¶ Laws were made to be obeyed!

¶ That is why we are asking the Children, and the grown-ups, too, to co-operate with us in a matter of supreme importance.

¶ There is a law which prohibits a child under the age of sixteen from entering a theatre at any time unless accompanied by parent or guardian.

¶ Children often employ means to get within a theatre that the management cannot foresee, and for that reason we have been compelled to ask your co-operation in these specific particulars·

¶ Grown-ups are aiding and abetting in breaking the law when they buy tickets for children under age, escort them inside the theatre and then let them seek out their own separate seat Such lovers of children are as liable to prosecution as is the management.

¶ Do not buy tickets for children for either afternoon or evening performances unless you will keep them under your supervision and will watch and care for them. In so doing you are their guardian

¶ Parents and guardians of course may buy tickets for children if they remain with them inside the theatre

¶ Do not send your children to the Victoria Matinee performances unaccompanied The Victoria under the law is not allowed to admit them They MUST be accompanied with parent or guardian

¶ Do not bring your children to the theatre, escort them into the theatre and then leave them This is a subterfuge to defeat the aim of the law

¶ The Victoria shows nothing that it feels the child should not see, yet it intends to obey the law and it can only do so with your co-operation

Sincerely

EDWARD L. HYMAN,
Manager Victoria Theatre

This is unquestionably a genuine appeal to the patrons to see that the laws are enforced, but it is even more than that. It is a fine piece of constructive work from the point of view of the theatre. Everyone who reads this appeal is going to be convinced that the Victoria stands for law enforcement and that it appeals to the best in the community. Mr. Hyman recently became manager of a picture theatre for the U. S. at one of the training camps.

Put the "The" in your theatre.

WE have before us a number of advertisements of the Empress theatre, Owensboro, Ky. As a general rule we would say that the chief fault of most of them is in the heavy border and the black type used, but the Empress is able to get its displays placed next to reading matter, so that this is not serious, as it would be where the display was placed along with other theatre advertising.

While we do not especially like the border used, the Empire is evidently striving to have something distinctive for this same one is used on a number of displays. That is always commendable. We can see from the specimens sent in that the writer of these displays knows that something is wrong, and that he is trying to hit at the right idea. One thing to be remembered is this: With a heavy border you must have the maximum of white space or the crowded effect will be emphasized. Such is the case with the Mary Garden ad. Had the Empire used a Ben Day border running into the top of the cut and then starting off from the lower right-hand corner, it would have had an effect that would have made his reading matter stand out much stronger.

NOW that New York is just recovering from its hoarseness over cheering the Anzacs, the people here at least can appreciate that the Australians do things. And they not only produce good soldiers, fine, up-standing fellows, but they furnish now and then some good examples of newspaper advertising of theatres.

Here is a full page display that was carried on the opening of Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus." Of course, the picture is somewhat an old story over here by this time, but it takes time for the picture to get to Australia and the advertising to come back again. The display is a lavish use of cuts with the minimum of reading matter. A one-sheet sent out by Goldwyn was used for the ad.

This is the season for spring fever; it's bad enough temporarily, but it seems to become incurable in some exhibitors.

YES, it does pay, and pay mighty well, to hook every week's bill up with current events. It makes your theatre appear up to the minute, as we have told you once before, and the patron will quickly conclude that the theatre that is taking advantage of every event is pretty apt to be getting the best in photoplay attractions.

Thomas D. Soriero is one of the livest of managers in taking advantage of current happenings. This display reproduced here comes on the week of mother's day and by the use of the carnation and then the warning not to forget mother's day. All during the Liberty Loan campaign, Mr. Soriero directed attention to this, the week before the display consisting of a bull's-eye, with the warning: "If You Don't Want Your Favorite Theatre to Be Bombarded, Buy a Liberty Bond."

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

HOW the comedy can be made to stand out after a long and somewhat dreary feature is being exemplified at the Rialto this week with "Moonshine," the Fatty Arbuckle burlesque, where there is a regular score used embracing no less than thirteen different numbers. We believe that this is a world's record for a comedy, and it was certainly a splendid climax to the bill, which up to this point hadn't any approach to a laugh in it.

Rivoli bill is almost the opposite. There is good humor or action every moment of it, as near a perfect presentation as one would want to see. It embraces one of the most powerful musical numbers that we have ever seen on any stage, and though we have been on record as opposing national airs played as an incident to presentations, here is a case where the whole thing was set around a national air to give an inspiration, a coupling up of America and France in a manner that brings the countries all the closer together in our hearts.

So brilliantly is the "First Hungarian Rhapsody" played that the entire orchestra, under the leadership of Erno Rapee, is compelled to bow again and again and the applause is hardly stilled in time to make way for the scenic that follows. The lights are all in red for this with the panels around the stage in green. These fade away leaving onily a blue dome for the scenic, "Beauty Spots of the Empire State," released by Progressive Films.

Then comes "Jeanne d'Arc Speaks," a remarkable original number arranged by Dr. Reisenfeld and sung by Mlle. d'Espinoy, accompanied by the Rialto male quartette. This was fitting for the Joan of Arc anniversary Sunday. First there are several bars of music with the fanfare of drums and the rumble of drums, then the sound of bombardment and the flashing of red on the side panels. With the exception of the blue dome all the lights in the house are out. Then the curtains part as the call of bugles is heard from behind the stage and there is revealed in the night, with only the blue sky behind, the statue of the maid of France in a village, with four American soldiers resting at the foot of the statue. In the dim light the statue is apparently lifeless. Then comes a hum of voices from the soldiers and then they begin to sing "Old Folks at Home," and then after a pause Joan answers them, finally bursting into the "Marseillaise." Of course every one in the audience arose and even in the dim light we thought that we could see a tear of patriotism and of love for the afflicted ally nation of ours on many a cheek near us. During the singing of this there is just a ray of light on the helmeted form of she who was burned at Rouen, and toward the end the sky becomes pink with the coming of dawn and again the bugles call as the curtains slowly come together and the audience bursts into thunderous applause.

Rivoli Animated opens with Universal pictures of the "Blue Devils'" visit to West Point. There is hearty applause for the Frenchmen, and why shouldn't there be after the battle song of France had stirred every heart, but there are thunders for the boys who are soon to be our officers. "March Lorraine," another tribute to France, is used for this. Then come Gaumont pictures of King Victor reviewing French and Italian soldiers, another signal for great applause, shown to "Italian Royal March." "Wilson Helps Hoover" is the title of a Universal showing sheep in the White House grounds, and this and Gaumont pictures of sheep shearing in California are shown to "Causerie."

"Butterfly" is the music for Universal pictures of pigeons beating an express train, and then come Gaumont pictures of Esquimaux dogs on the war front in France and Hearst-Pathe views of breaking Western horses at Fort Dodge, with "Dance Circassian" played. "Cute and Pretty" is the music for Progressive Film pictures of the only fox farm in the country. Now the Animated is broken by a good laugh with Mutt and Jeff in "Superintendents." This is built around a heavyweight lady tenant who insists on working the player piano for all she is worth much to the annoyance of her neighbors. "Indianola," played by two men on the piano is used for the portion where she is playing and then "Lovingless Day." It is a riot. Gaumont shows the Camden plant breaking shipbuilding record to "Pride of Columbia," and then follow Ford pictures of making inner tubes to "Pierrot and Pierette." Gaumont pictures of the New York police parade follow, and then comes a smashing finish with Universal pictures, and then sailors at Pelham Bay in their white uniforms spelling a living "Victory," of Annapolis cadets drilling while the orchestra plays "Before the Mast."

With all the lights in gold then the orchestra plays "March of the Toys" from Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland," and it gets a big hand. This calling back of tunes popular a few years ago is a big hit at the Rivoli and it will prove the same with any exhibitor who tries it, even if he uses only a piano.

There is a splendid musical score for "Bill" Hart in "Selfish Yates." The audience likes the picture and when we saw it it got one of the biggest receptions in weeks. There is a storm effect in it that the Rivoli staff takes full advantage of with the drums and the lighting. "Zephir" is the theme used.

With an introduction by the orchestra, the Rialto made quartette, seated on the stage before the drop showing a Southern plantation sings that old time favorite, "The Musical Trust," and leaves the audience in laughter that scarcely has time to die down before the champion side-splitter, the Katzenjammer Kids in "Fisherman's Luck," released by Educational, is shown. These pictures are setting a new mark in animated cartoons and it is a solid laugh from start to finish. "A Little Peach," "A Kiss for Cinderella" and "Make Way" were the three musical numbers used.

Rialto has a novelty this week that it introduced during the overture, Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." After a few bars of the music comes a dramatic exposition of the theme read by Regan Hughston. Only the dome is lighted for this number, first in blue and then becoming green. On either side of the stage is a witch's cauldron and these flame up as the curtains part revealing the reader. This reading is effective and the entire number affords dullest play for the lighting effects, for after the speaker has finished the lights slowly merge into gold and then dim again, the dome becoming purple and the inner dome pink, both shading into heavier colors toward the end.

The main point of this number is its novelty—that fact that the audiences at the Rialto and Rivoli never know what to expect and that they are always waiting to be surprised—and delighted.

Rialto march is used for the opening flash and then comes a Beacon film picturing an unknown corner of Catalonia and this is carried by special organ music. Hearst-Pathe shows King George reviewing the boy marine scouts, which merge into American soldiers marching through the streets of London on their way to the front. Then follow Universal pictures of Canadians who survived the first gas attack, survived it by using handkerchiefs before their faces. They get almost as much applause as has just been given the Americans. "Rainbow Division" march continues through both of these numbers and then "Globe Trotters" is used with Universal pictures of the New York marathon, and Gaumont pictures of yacht races at San Francisco. Gaumont shows pictures of ninety trucks starting on a record run for Detroit, and here "Panama Exposition" march continues through Hearst-Pathe pictures of Gen. Wood arriving at Camp Funston. Now to get the punch in at the end Gaumont pictures of Gen. Pershing and Secretary Baker inspecting Red Cross units in France is shown, and this goes into a Hy Mayer cartoon showing Uncle Sam mixing from the bottles of Liberty, Honor, Love and Duty the element of Patriotism. "Fox Trail" is the music, and the end of the Animated gets a big hand and puts over a strong appeal for the Red Cross drive. Pictures of the police parade were added after we saw the show.

Before the Byzantine setting with all of the lights red, Emanuel List then sings "Invictus," and the feature, Mme. Petrova in "The Life Mask" follows. Miss Annie Rossner is the effective soloist in an aria from Verdi's "The Masked Ball."

Now comes the real feature of the bill, the comedy, because of the manner in which is was fitted with music. Fatty

This Week at the Strand

MME. NAZIMOVA in "Toys of Fate" is the feature at the Strand this week and as we left the house the lobby was packed with crowds waiting to get in. It is a tense story, but it is relieved with the spirit of youth in the girl that now and then brings refreshing laughter. The feature is given an excellent musical setting, including a number of the gypsy favorites, starting off with the tambourine effect and carrying the charm of the wild through the picture.

This week, as once before, there is but a few bars of music in place of the overture. The curtain rises on the full orchestra, with Conductor Carl Edouarde in his place and the setting showing the Greek temple revealed, and then the curtains come together for a moment only to part again, revealing the screen and the beginning of the Topical. In other words the overture is practically cut out.

This week's topical opens with Hearst-Pathe pictures of King George reviewing the boy soldiers and then the pictures of the marching Americans cause the audiences to roar. From the same source come pictures of breaking in western horses at Camp Dodge. Paramount-Bray then supplies some interesting studies in character analysis, the study being the hands, and then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of sailing boats at San Francisco. Paramount-Bray supplies an interesting cartoon showing the operation of depth bombs, getting quite a hand with an aeroplane "Hunting a Hun," and finally sinking the menace of the seas. Hearst-Pathe supplies pictures of Gen. Wood arriving at Camp Funston and the Topical comes to an end with Paramount-Bray pictures of Salvation Army work, ending with the women on their march to the steamer for service abroad, while the orchestra plays "Onward Christian Soldiers." The Topical closes with the waving American flag.

"A Mountaineering Memory" is the interesting and beautiful scenic, one of the Outing-Chester series. It is taken on Mt. Assiniboine and includes some wonderful shots of snowclad mountains. The human element is brought into it with the visit of a porcupine to camp and his attack on one of the party. There are some views of seemingly impossible mountain climbing, many of the shots being taken from above the climbers, looking down sheer precipices and others from the side. There is a clever effect arranged here when the storm comes up, for the lightning flashes are shown in the panels at either side of the screen and the effect of moving clouds is thrown over the screen itself, followed by the dashing rain. Of course this is an arrangement of lights and films, but it adds much to the picture.

"Here Comes the Groom," a Christie comedy with Bobbie Vernon, is full of laughs. The musical numbers are Miss Irene Audrey, soprano, singing "The Star" and "When You're Away," and Henry Miller, basso, in "God Be With the Boys Tonight" and "The Rosary."

Arbuckle, here is a burlesque, revenue officer, and the very strong element of burlesque is carried through the picture, frequent reference being made to the fact that all of this is being done merely to make a picture. There is an effective opening with "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and then comes a tympani rumble. "The Lullaby of War" is used as the scores of deputies emerge from the lone auto and then comes "Bugle Call Rag." Some of the other selections that are employed in the course of the picture are "Uncle Tom," "Little Buttercup," "Umbrellas to Mend," "Sympathy," "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry," "Deep in the Cellar," "Blame it on the Blues" and "Out There." In addition to this the manner in which the music is burlesqued can hardly be appreciated without being heard. For instance, a funeral march is played when Fatty is giving an imitation of Monte Christo, but it is all done with such good taste that it adds to the laughs.

There is a lot in making the comedy stand out like this. It is not necessary on most occasions, but Dr. Reisenfeld knew that he has a bill without a laugh in it and that he needed a big dose of fun at the end. He wanted to send the audience away laughing at the burlesque and humming the tune as they left, remembering this as the happy part of the bill.

Striking Lobby Display on "The Kaiser" Costs Theatre But $16.80

A. J. LAURIE, publicity manager of the Midway theatre, Montreal, is one of the leaders of the continent in striking big lobby displays. Many examples of his work have been published in these columns because of the fact that he gets splendid results from them at an expenditure that any exhibitor can afford if he will run the picture long enough to reap the benefits.

On "The Kaiser" he had a particularly effective display and the whole thing cost the immense amount of $16.80. The exploitation covered the full front of the theatre, leaving long enough room for comfortable entrance and exit for the large crowds. The big banner sign across the front of the house was 42 feet long and was illuminated with thirty-five electric globes which were connected with a flasher to give the running effect.

At either side of the lobby was a six sheet on the two current attractions, but the main display was in the center, fifteen feet long and nine feet high. There was a cut-out of the figure of the Kaiser showing his body and next to him was placed a monster beast, something of the Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde effect, showing the Thing killing women and children who beg in vain for mercy. It is particularly striking and every one "got" the intention of the designer.

At the two ends of the streamers were different pictures of the Hun ruler, one as he was represented before the great war and the other in the character that he has revealed himself. The entire effect was in black and white. Note the way that the separation of the word "The Kaiser" and "Beast of Berlin" on the banner, with the different pictures, brings out the same effect that is emphasized in the center display.

Depkin Puts the Motion Picture on New Plane in Baltimore and Wins Best Element

UNTIL a very few years ago there were thousands of Baltimoreans who had never seen a motion picture performance. This may seem strange in view of the fact of the advancement in film art, but it was nevertheless true. But fortunately this condition is now history.

Until about three years ago there were hundreds whom, upon the mention of motion pictures, thought only of the nickelodeon which was due to the fact that no one went out of their way particularly to educate this exclusive class. The miracle was brought about more through the effort of Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager of the Parkway theatre, than any other individual in the Monumental City.

When the idea of the Parkway was conceived by Messrs. George R. and Harry W. Webb, it was on a rather elaborate scale but it remained for Mr. Depkin to put the finishing touches to the enterprise which made it an unique proposition. From the time of the opening of the Parkway there has always been an atmosphere of refinement about the house which is not found in other theatres. From the opening night, which was over three years ago, every effort was made to interest the more exclusive citizens and this plan met with remarkable success.

Where a few years ago it would have been unusual to see anyone walk in a picture performance in evening clothes, at the Parkway it is now a very constant occurrence. As a matter of fact, there are now exclusive motion picture parties given, followed by dinners along exactly the same lines as in the case of the larger and most prominent legitimate theatres. At all times the audiences are composed of the more intelligent classes and the performances are selected to appeal to those who were formerly skeptics as far as the screen was concerned.

Norma Talmadge rises to really great heights of emotional acting in the portrayal of the two parts which fall to her in this production. Dual personality roles are rare because of the high artistry they call for, but in this picture Miss Talmadge verifies the praiseful verdicts her performances have always brought forth. First as Ruth Grahame, the poor little seamstress, and later as Jeanne La Fleur, the wanton Bal Tabarin cabaret singer, she delineates both characters with remarkable fidelity.

Style of program mailing card used at the Parkway

The success of Mr. Depkin has been due first to the class of pictures he selects. While he gets first run Paramount and Artcraft pictures, if the week's releases are not up to his idea of the standard for the house he does not hestitate to shelve the pictures and go into the open market to secure something that will appeal to his class of audience.

In connection with the feature production, a very interesting scenic is also shown with a weekly, a comedy or cartoon. There are the little touches about the theatre that while rather hard to describe in the aggregate make an especial appeal. Included in this are the novelty introductory films to the weeklies, the introductory film to the leading feature and other such touches.

The stage of the theatre is always decorated with potted plants, cut flowers and various evergreens. A Russian orchestra, with instrumental solos and organ recitals, gives the musical program a touch of individuality. At the entrance and again in the reception room on the second floor there are always containers of cut flowers, which touch is always appreciated by the class of patrons to whom the theatre makes its appeal.

One department in which the Parkway is decidedly different is in its children's morning performances, which take place on Saturday mornings. This was an innovation in Baltimore when it was first started, and the class of film selected was of the kind that appeal to children from eight to fourteen years. This class of performances proved very successful and other theatres followed the Parkway, but the Parkway has always kept far in advance of all competitors.

Another feature which is carried out by Mr. Depkin is that, in addition to his newspaper, billboard and screen advertising, he makes a direct appeal from a mailing list secured from "The Blue Book" of Baltimore when he has a feature that will appeal particularly to those of exclusive tastes. There is also a weekly mailing list in which Mr. Depkin gives his regular patrons the program for the current week and hints of coming attractions.

Mr. Depkin also directs the destinies of the Strand and the Wizard, and for all three of these he uses the highest class of matter for his mailing list. He is never content simply to put his imprint on something that the manufacturer has sent out and let it go at that, but all of this matter follows a general plan that he has laid out. The matter is generally printed on heavy plate cardboard just the size to fit into an envelope and printed in colors. These generally contain a picture of the star or a scene from the production, but these cuts are kept clean of advertising matter, manufacturers' trademarks and anything else that might mar the artistic effect.

In fact, Mr. Depkin carries the high character of his theatres through everything that he does—to the smallest, and that is one of the reasons for the unusual position occupied by the Parkway and the success of the Strand and the Wizard.

Canadian Exhibitors Protest Newspaper Treatment

Members of the Canadian Moving Picture Association at a meeting just held in Montreal voiced their indignation at what they claim is the unfair treatment given them by the Canadian press, especially in Montreal and Toronto. They declare that they are anxious to advertise, but that the rates charged are prohibitive. The immediate cause of the protest is the advancing of the rate in the Montreal Star to twenty-one cents a line.

In addition to these high prices, the exhibitors declare that most of the newspapers offer practically no co-operation. The Toronto World, which is quite generous, is held to be the only one that evidences any desire to help the theatre along. The position of the newspapers of that city on motion picture advertising is—take it or leave it.

The complaint in Montreal is that the vaudeville and legitimate houses are given space out of proportion to the advertising and that the motion picture houses are ignored. Columns are given in the Tuesday issues to the reviews of the various road shows, and the only mention that the picture house gets is a trite mention hidden away in some corner of the paper.

Gives Passes to Purchasers of Liberty Bonds

Manager P. E. Coe, of the Theatre Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La., and an exhibitor who is always pulling new ideas, helped boost the Liberty Loan by giving a free pass good for two weeks to the first hundred patrons who were owners of Third Liberty Loan bonds. The only requirement was that the patron should show the bond to the manager before May 4.

"The Boys" Show How to Win Success in Town of 5,000 Against Handicaps

HAVE you met "The Boys," of Cherokee, Iowa? If you haven't you've missed a couple of the most successful young exhibitors of the country whose methods of exhibition and whose ideals in motion picture are worth a great deal to the industry.

Four years ago Walter James was playing the trap drum at the Olympic theatre, Sioux City, and there he met Berry Sisk, who was attending the local high school. Both boys walk on crutches and they were attracted to each other, and they were friends from the start. They decided to go into business together and Berry suggested that his home town offered a good opportunity in what was then the Happy Hour theatre.

Then they started to work and they met with the worst of opposition. They heard that the manager of the other house predicted their failure, but they turned a deaf ear to him and gave their attention, not to what their competitor was doing, but to the interests of their theatre. That has been one of the secrets of their success, for since the day they took charge of the house they have not failed to keep a close watch on pictures and a hand on the public pulse.

The first thing that they did was to change the name of the theatre to the American. They declared that they knew at the start that many people thought that they were going to run the house on the patriotic appeal of the name, but what they wanted to do was to give the house a new name and at the same time give it a new personality. "We have succeeded in putting it out of the 'movie' class," they write. "Everyone knows the American as a photoplay theatre. People soon began to think of 'The Boys' as representing Cherokee's best entertainment, and we have always striven to keep up to the mark."

"The Boys" make their hobby. They put on the best pictures that they can get and they watch the MOTION PICTURE NEWS carefully to keep out any suggestive pictures. If a company insists on putting out such a one their policy is immediately to cancel the entire service.

Page advertisement used in the Cherokee papers to show that the American theatre is up to date

"We have told more than one salesman," they say, "that we did not intend to pay for his company's mistakes, and that if it made mistakes it would have to be the loser. Nine times out of ten they will see it our way, for one bad picture will kill the effect of twenty good ones. The exhibitor who does not stand firm against bad pictures is a traitor not only to himself, but to the whole industry, because every bad picture that you take plants the seed for more through the encouragement of the sale, the profit to the manufacturer. The real exhibitor must sell his show and he must have something that he can advertise truthfully. At present the whole industry is condemned on account of a few rotten sex films, but producers won't make these pictures as exhibitors refuse to encourage them."

That they do believe in advertising is evidenced on a page display that is reproduced here. Cherokee's population is given at less than 5,000 in the last census, and there is probably not another town of equal size in the country that has used similar space simply to list the attractions that it offers. Grouped around the border are the Goldwyn, Paramount, Artcraft, Paralta, Mutual and Select stars, which regularly appear at the American. The announcement is used to show to the people that no metropolitan city gets any better attractions than do the citizens of Cherokee. While the typing might have been a little better in some big city paper, we doubt if there has been a more ably prepared display than this, and one that was more convincing.

Sisk and James follow many of the ideas that we have suggested from time to time since the inauguration of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. Attention is called to one of these in this page display, and that is that the advertisements of the American theatre will always be found on page two of the semi-weekly Democrat with each issue, and that these displays are always enclosed in the distinctive star border. The theatre also uses its own name plate in all its advertising. These are two elemental things, but most small city theatres dodge their use because it costs a little something even though they may know, from the experience of others, that these little things will pay for themselves over many times in a mighty short time. Sisk and James are liberal and consistent advertisers, and they prove that advertising does pay, even if there is only a semi-weekly available. It is in advertising and many other things that "The Boys" stand out as examples to their exhibitors in smaller cities. And they are not content with their success, for they are now planning the construction of a $60,000 theatre that will give their city everything that the big city houses afford.

In addition to their excellent theatre they have built up a big music publishing business under the name of "The Boys" Music Publishing Company. They have written some fifty compositions and a number of these have been published, including "'76 to '17," "Head of the Nation," "Boy Scouts' Patrol," "Spuds," "Hip 'Er Up, Keep 'Er Up" and several others, but their biggest success had been the song which they have just written, 'It's Up to Uncle Sam" and for which they are getting big orders from all sections of the country.

"The Boys" have gone about building up their business in a systematic manner. They have not been content to merely get the patronage of the town itself, but they have gone out into the surrounding country after it, and with success. They are to furnish the material for other articles which will appear in these pages from time to time, and while Sisk and James do not undertake to teach others what to do, they have proven by their works what can be accomplished in a small city theatre and their success and their ideals ought to prove of value and interest to every exhibitor.

Here is another of the splendid stage setting that Harold B. Franklin used at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, on the Liberty Loan. This series of setting was given a big share of the credit for the showing made by Buffalo

Pays to Exploit Every Day Proved By Baltimore Papers and Many Theatres

panies goes direct to the waste basket unopened.

During the week the Plain Dealer does even more for the local theatres than any of the papers. It starts off on Monday with a three column layout covering five of the first run houses, and Tuesday two more are represented in pictures, with four on Wednesday, one two-column, one on Thursday, two on Friday and three on Saturday.

Monday's issue, besides the layout referred to, is largely devoted to general news of motion pictures, there being about half a column of this, and then follow short paragraphs about the offerings at each of the first run houses. On Tuesday the same policy is followed in regard to a number of the neighborhood houses, and on Wednesday some more of the neighborhood houses are covered. Thursday, the issue that we have reproduced here, is devoted entirely to general news, as is the case with the Friday and Saturday issues. This matter is written in a more serious style than the News, and it covers the field mighty, mighty well. Let us say right here that the readers of the Plain Dealer will be right up to date on the news of the industry. The paper doesn't wait for matter to get stale while it is being passed on by some film officials, but prints it now.

As a matter of fact so far as news matter is concerned Cleveland newspapers are far away ahead of any others that we have discussed. They deserve the fullest encouragement of every theatre in the city and we are distinctly sorry for the lack of foresight on the part of the theatres that fail to advertise regularly every day. The house that cannot afford to advertise in such excellent organs certainly must have a poor sort of clientele.

Which brings us to a point that we want to discuss—that of daily advertising. Let us say first that the form of "card" advertising that the Cleveland theatres have adopted does not appear to us as the best advertising for first run houses, for the simple reason that it makes the same announcement appear day after day without adding different appeals that would bring in more patrons. However, this is the custom in Cleveland, and so long as everything else is so lovely we are not going to try to break this up.

We are also reproducing the Photoplay Directory from the Press. It contains the ads of 72 theatres, most of them neighborhood houses, of course. The smallest of these is three lines and certainly that is inexpensive enough and at the same time this covers the feature bill for the day. The name of the theatre is given, and the location, which is desirable, the name of the star and the title. That is all that is absolutely essential.

Several months ago we printed an article here about neighborhood theatre advertising and we urged just such a policy as a large number of these Cleveland houses are following. The day has passed when you can expect your possible patron to walk around to your theatre to see whether you have a bill that he wants to see. It may be only a couple of blocks away, but you are going to find him turning to his newspaper and finding the picture at some other theatre and going there, even if it is a little further, because he knows in advance what he is going to see before he stops and studies the lithographs. And there's many a rainy night when the possible patron is not going to get out of his own free will when he would be dragged out if the wife and kiddies looked at their evening newspaper and found that some picture that they wanted to see was playing at your house for that day only. And another thing: Don't kick because the people pay street car fare and a higher admission price to go downtown if you are expecting them to come and see what you have—blind.

Yes, the program, the house organ has its uses and it is a mighty good thing to have around. But, after all, especially in the larger cities, it is only a supplement to the newspaper. And in cities like Cleveland we feel sure that the people have come to regard these pages as of as much importance as their telephone books.

And for the newspapers, we are sure that every circulation manager will tell you that he would never in the world consent to drop these advertisements. He will tell you that they are just as much a part of the newspaper as the editorial page itself.

You neighborhood houses present the problem to most newspapers because you refuse to advertise on the ground that "you can't afford it." There's not a theatre in the world that can't afford to advertise in papers that are doing as much for them as the Cleveland newspapers. And at the same time there is not a newspaper in the world that would not add to its prestige and be a more interesting newspaper to its readers by doing what the Cleveland newspapers are doing.

This Cleveland situation is worthy the study of every man who has a cent's interest in either motion pictures or newspapers. There's a lesson there. It's not a fad in Cleveland. It's a great, successful business venture for all concerned.

Last week we declared that Cleveland was "Over the Top." Yes, and in closing we want to add that she is there up on her toes, ready to meet any situation with which she is faced and that worries have little place with these Cleveland exhibitors that do advertise—for they are getting there.

Pathe Starts Big Campaign on "Yellow Ticket"

Pathe announces an unusual advertising campaign and many aids for the exhibitor on "The Yellow Ticket," starring Fannie Ward, which will be released June 2. Prints and advertising matter have been available in exchanges for a month in advance of the release date and the publicity campaign is already in full swing.

One of the business builders for this picture is a facsimile of the yellow ticket, printed in two colors on cardboard. These are available in quantities at all the Pathe exchanges. There is a complete plan book and a series of specimen ads ranging from a page down, together with half tones for illustrating these which can be obtained for less than cost price. Material for lobby displays, done by Madan, is unusually striking.

Advertising in the Saturday Evening Post includes a coupon which will bring to the reader an illustrated booklet giving further details of the production.

Quinn, With 900-Seat House, Proves It Pays to Use Big Newspaper Space

As the result of the visit of one of the officials of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation to the Pacific Coast and a careful study of the advertising and exhibiting conditions that obtain there, new attention is being directed to the work of a number of the more prominent managers.

One of these is J. A. Quinn, proprietor of the Rialto, a 900-seat Los Angeles house which is one of the leading advertisers of the country. Going through the morning papers, it is a common occurrence for the business man on his way to work to encounter a striking full page of some attraction about to open at this comparatively small theatre. In discussing Mr. Quinn's work, the Goldwyn exploitation department says:

"Every one recognizes that to carry a big feature production and the overhead in a theatre of this size the management must keep the seats filled from the moment the doors open until they close. And Quinn knows this better than anyone else in Los Angeles. Therefore, he turns to the daily newspapers to 'sell his show' to the public. He takes no chances. He uses big space and pays cash for it. He uses quarter pages without skimping or stinting. He goes the limit by jumping on occasion to full pages in the stronger newspaper mediums. He uses 'punch-'em-in-the-eye' advertising copy, but clean copy. He nails attention. When he starts to make an advertising drive in the dailies he goes right up under the guns with his bankroll and plays his competition off the boards.

"When he breaks loose this way you can usually count on it that it is 'a Quinn week' in Los Angeles—a Quinn week with a 900-seat house and with nearby competition ranging from 1,900 seats to 2,500 seats in other parts of the downtown section.

QUINN'S RIALTO, NOW

SHOWS at 11-12½-2-3½-5-6½-8-9½

The Rialto is right up to date on advertising. This is how it took advantage of a Goldwyn ad. in the Motion Picture News

"Like Jim Clemmer of Seattle, Quinn has a tremendously clever advertising man for the Rialto—a young man full of boyish enthusiasm, but of seasoned experience. His name is Bob Blair and he knows the show business. He knows the value of punch in advertising; he doesn't waste his time circling around his selling points in a picture. He picks out his bull's-eye, and he hits it oftener than most advertising men.

"Quinn trusts his advertising man. When he says, 'Bob, what do you think we can do with this picture?' he knows that Blair will seize upon the exploitation values in the production under inspection. An example of the splendid abilities of Quinn and his ally is found in the Rialto's experience with Goldwyn Pictures, which have their Los Angeles first run home at the Rialto.

"Today there have been nineteen Goldwyn Pictures released—one every second week. Quinn has played eight out of the nineteen productions two weeks each at the Rialto and one of these eight, 'The Cinderella Man,' for three weeks. In other words, when backed up by showmanship of a skilled and modern exhibitor, fifty per cent of Goldwyn's total of productions released have had runs of two weeks each.

"Mr. Quinn has more than a mere hobby—it is actually a plan about to be put in execution—that he can make any strong picture stand a run of three or four weeks, or longer, in Los Angeles. He made 'The Whip' run nine weeks at his Rialto to remarkable business. But he cannot do this without sacrificing the Rialto's fine established business. So he has leased the property immediately adjoining his Rialto and already is at work on a second theatre to bear another name. He could have torn out his side wall and doubled the capacity of his present house, but he didn't wish to do that. He wants to have two houses. He wishes to take a fine, strong picture, play it one week at the Rialto, link it up with newspaper advertising, and move it next door to the new house, and there let it settle down for as long a run as his showmanship and skill can obtain for it.

"When this time comes you may confidently expect that J. A. Quinn will advertise in his home town newspapers on the liberal scale employed by the department stores to move goods off their shelves. If advertising moves goods out of a store it will move a similar huge volume of people into a theatre, reasons Quinn, and you can imagine the co-operation he receives from his home town newspapers when he holds such opinions as these.

"'When Quinn loosens up and gets behind a show he has the spirit of a crusader,' said the owner of a big Los Angeles daily recently. 'In this mood he is the ablest amusement advertiser I have ever encountered. He makes newspapers pay him because he knows how to use them.'"

Exhibitor Uses "Eagle's Eye" to Get New Patrons

Value of a "word of mouth" advertising campaign has again been proved by A. Johnny Mack, manager of the Hill theatre, Newark, N. J. When he took charge of the house the gross receipts were greatly exceeded by the overhead expenses, and the first problem was to get more patrons and to get them quickly. So he changed his booking policy to earlier runs, improved the house and started an intensive newspaper campaign.

Nearly two months ago he booked "The Eagle's Eye" and immediately began to advertise that he would present in motion pictures twenty reasons why the United States is at war with the Huns. After he had shown the first episode he talked to his audiences about the menace of German spies in America, confining his statements strictly to events covered in the pictures. When the second was shown he used the facts of the attempt to dynamite the Hotel Ansonia, as told in the film, while it housed eight hundred American naval officers. He continued this with each episode. He declares that the result of the dramatic interest of "The Eagle's Ele," and the word-of-mouth advertising that he created through the discussions that he started that his receipts during those days have increased 40 per cent and that the results are permanent.

Pictures of Old 'Frisco Shown on Anniversary

Manager J. A. Partington, of the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, surprised his patrons on Thursday, April 18, the twelfth anniversary of the great fire, by showing them a picture of streets of the city made a few days before the fire. The scenes, showing the cable cars and the old time buildings, aroused a great deal of interest and created invaluable word-of-mouth advertising as well as commanding newspaper space.

Ready Made Ad Talks

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in "Passing of the Third Floor Back"

(First National Circuit Release—6 Reels)

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back," adapted from the popular stage play of the same name, produced by Herbert Brenon and released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is casted in the leading role and is surrounded by a supporting cast including, Augusta Gaviland, Molly Pearson, Alfred Hickman, Germaine Bourville, Ben Graham, Grace Stephens, Ketty Galanta, Robert Fisher, George Le Guere, Sydney Goldin, Thorton Bastion, Ricca Allen and Dora Mills Adams. "Passing of the Third Floor Back" was one of the biggest hits on the speaking stage a few seasons ago. It was written by Jerome K. Jerome and produced under the personal direction of Herbert Brenon who is responsible for "The Fall of the Romanoffs," "The Daughter of the Gods" and other big feature productions. The scene of the action is laid in London. To a dingy London boarding house in Bloomsbury Square, a house beset with misunderstanding, bitterness and rancor, there comes a stranger with a smile that seems to say that the possessor understands the trouble of all. Without meddling, this stranger, out of innate kindness, seeks to adjust the troubles of his neighbors and to bring happiness out of chaos. The landlady from whom he rents his room, is deeply affected by the stranger's kindness and she is reminded of her better past. Stasia, the slovenly little house-maid, listens to the stranger and she is prompted to give up her careless ways and work to better things. And so the stranger works miracles in the London boarding-house district. His kindness has literally swept the neighborhood from its feet and its inhabitants are struck by a reform wave which takes them from the narrow world in which they live to one of brightness and free from care and suspicion.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Frank Keenan in Strong, Virile Role in "The Ruler of the Road"—Pathe

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Frank Keenan's latest Pathe feature is titled "Ruler of the Road," produced under the direction of Ernest C. Warde. The screen version was made by Gilson Willetts from the successful novel, "Simeon Tetlow's Shadow," by Jeanette Lee. In the supporting cast with Mr. Keenan, Kathryn Lean, Thomas Jackson, Frank Sheridan, Ned Burton and John Charles. Mr. Keenan is one of the most able actors working before the camera. He is a distinct type, and his character work is considered by critics to be unsurpassed in its artistry. In "The Ruler of the Road" Mr. Keenan has the role of Simeon Tetlow, who manages the affairs of the Stillwater Railroad. Quick in decision, Tetlow shows the kind of metal he is made of, when he offers to make the run of one of the engineers of the road, Hugh Tomlinson, when the latter complains that he has been on duty for eighteen hours, and is ordered out to make another run. Shamed into making the run, Tomlinson falls asleep at the throttle, and a rear-end collision with a freight train is the result. Tomlinson is discharged, and when a strike is about to result from the action Tetlow reveals the engineer's guilt. The president of the Central Railroad, Nixon, tries to ruin the Stillwater road in a stock deal. Tetlow is taken with a nervous breakdown, but when he hears of the attempt of his competitor, he makes his appearance in public, and the stock deal results disastrously to Nixon. Tomlinson, unable to get another job, does his best to injure Tetlow. Tetlow, unbeknown to Tomlinson, acts as his silent benefactor, giving him money and assistance. When this is found out, Tomlinson and Tetlow are brought into the closest of intimacy, and Tetlow proves his confidence in Tomlinson by allowing him to drive his special train to Chicago.

"The Ruler of the Road," with Frank Keenan in the featured role, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Purple Dress," an O. Henry Subject One of the Author's Best

(General-O. Henry Release—Two Reels)

"The Purple Dress," one of your favorites from O. Henry's collection of popular short stories, has been adapted to the screen and produced by the Broadway Star Feature Company for release on the General program. The picture is in two reels. Agnes Ayres, Evart Overton, Adele De Garde, Mr. Wangeman, Mrs. Beck and Bernard Siegel. It is a comedy-drama, and was produced under the direction of Martin Justice, who has done such commendable work with most of this series. O. Henry was, perhaps, the greatest writer of short stories of his day. He could bring out the human incidents with a touch that no other author seemed to possess. The same touch has been transferred to the screen, and this two-reeler will afford entertainment to young and old alike. Maida and Grace, of the Beehive store, are chums, but rivals for the hand of Mr. Ramsey, head clerk and a fresh-air fiend. Old Bachman, the proprietor, always give a Thanksgiving dinner to his employes, and for this particular occasion, Maida has managed to buy the material for a purple dress. She tells Schlegel, the tailor, that she will pay a balance, owing, of four dollars, the night before Thanksgiving. That night she is turned from her room for failure to pay four dollars owing on room rent. The sacrifice is a bitter pill to swallow. After the dinner she leaves and goes to the tailor, and, to her surprise, he gives her the dress. She discards her old one and starts forth with the new purple beauty. On the way she meets Mr. Ramsey, and she makes such an impression on him that he decides now is the time to get married.

An O. Henry subject will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "The Purple Dress."

Bert Lytell in His First Metro Picture, "The Trail to Yesterday"

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Bert Lytell, who was so-starred with Hazel Dawn in Herbert Brennon's "The Lone Wolf," is seen for the first time under the banner of Metro Pictures Corporation in "The Trail to Yesterday," scenarioized from the novel of the same name by Charles Alden Seltzer. June Mathis did the continuity. Robert Kurrle was cameraman. Mr. Lytell has as leading lady Anna Q. Nilsson. In support are Harry S. Northrup, Ernest Maupain, John A. Smiley and Danny Hogan. Mr. Lytell belongs to the class of screen actors who are known for the "pep" they put into their work. This Metro offering gives Bert every opportunity to live up to his name as a "stunt" man. He has not been seen in many screen productions, but the few in which he has appeared have all proved winners and have been received by the public with a welcome. Ned Keegles, better known as "Dakota" to his pals at college, gives his father, the proprietor of a hardware store the shock of his life when word comes to him that "Dakota" has been expelled. The expulsion was not so bad, but when the old man learns that his son left with a long list of debts behind, his heart was broken. Keegles' partner, Langford, attempts to ruin him, and he learns of this on the night that Ned returns. A fight results from the quarrel between the two partners, and Ned, fearing that he will be accused, goes West. It is then that name, "Dakota," becomes prominent. Five years of life in the West makes him forget that he once wore stiff collars and fancy linen. "Dakota" buys a ranch, and the Mexican from whom he makes the purchase, plans to ruin him. His partner changes the brand on the cattle, and after "Dakota" comes into possession he accused him of "rustling" another's cattle. But a friend comes to his aid, and the Mexicans are beaten at their own game. One night while "Dakota" is resting in his cabin, he hears the voice of a woman, and, after investigating, he discovers that he has met for the first time the girl of his dreams.

"The Marriage Lie," Featuring Carmel Myers, Tells Unusual Story

(Universal Five-Reel Production)

"The Marriage Lie" features Carmel Myers. It is a Universal feature produced under the direction of Stuart Payton. The screen version was adapted from Blair Hall's story by Harvey Gates. In the supporting cast with Miss Myers, are seen Kenneth Harlan, Harry Carter, William Quinn and Joe Girard. Douglas Seward, a young engineer, applies to Terence Craver, contractor and builder, for a job on his construction work in South America. Carver's great failing was beautiful women. When Seward applies for the job, Craver tells him that he will not employ any except married men. He gives Seward a week to decide and tells him that if he expects the job he must bring his wife with him. Seward had never found time to marry and the proposition looked hopeless until one night he meets Eileen Orton. It developed that Eileen was even more desperate than Seward. Her father had died and left her penniless and an outcast in the world. She had not received training in any occupation and had lost one opportunity after another through her refusal to be a "good fellow." Seward puts the proposition squarely up to her, and promises to support her and give her half of his salary if she will go to Craver's office with him and pose as his wife. Craver becomes infatuated with her. Seward is sent into the swamps to do some surveying, and several months later returns to see how his "wife" is. He arrives just in time. Craver learns that Eileen is only posing as Seward's wife, and he makes unfair advances. Seward defends Eileen and teaches Craver a lesson that he never forgets. Seward and Eileen are married.

Louise Glaum in "An Alien Enemy," Thrilling Story of World War

(Paralta Play—Seven Reels)

Louise Glaum presents a dual role in her latest Paralta Play, "An Alien Enemy," written by Monte M. Katterjohn and produced by Paralta, under the direction of Wallace Worsley, with L. Guy Wilky at the camera. In the supporting cast are seen, Mary Jane Irving, Thurston Hall, Albert Allardt, Charles C. Hammond, J. Morley, Roy Laidlaw, Joseph J. Dowling and Clifford Alexander. "An Alien Enemy" tells the story of how a girl who had fallen into the hands of two German subjects, is forced to work in the interest of Germany but who in the end turns the tables and renders her country a noble service. Miss Glaum has the dual role of Neysa von Igel and Frau Meyer who is American born but who has been kept in ignorance of the fact all her life. Her father and mother were killed in Germany before the outbreak of the war by Emil Koenig and his fellow officers. The opening of the story finds her in America under the guidance of Koenig. The war breaks and she is instructed by Koenig to ensnare Major Putnam, U. S. A., and get from him valuable Government plans. Neysa's heart is with the American cause and the thought of having to work against her own conscience, is repelling. She purposely fails in her mission. Neysa is in love with David Hale who has an important Government position. They are married. Later David leaves for France. One day she meets Koenig and she is informed that she must get certain information for him. She consents and sends him daily erroneous reports. She learns that Koenig's partner has been killed in an internment camp. Finally she goes to Koenig and tells him that she has been sending him false reports. He attacks her and she stabs him to death. She turns and finds David watching her. She has done her bit for the U. S. A.

"The Lonely Woman"—Story of a Wife's Abiding Faith

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"The Lonely Woman," which comes to the screen of the ——— theatre on ———, is a story of the wonderful faith of a woman in her husband, who, innocent, has been sentenced to Sing Sing. More than a gripping, heart-pulsing play of emotion, it is a call to faith. It visualizes the power of prayer. It emphasizes the nobility of true womanhood. This remarkable photoplay is adapted from the story by John A. Moroso, master writer of short fiction, which recently appeared in one of the popular magazines. Under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron a superb cast, headed by Belle Bennett and Lee Hill, has interpreted it to the delight of picture lovers wherever it has been shown. According to the story, Martha Sellers, woman of mystery, arrives in a small town within an hour's ride of New York. Her reticence excites the suspicion of the village gossips, headed by Percival Peevy. She rents a small cottage and installs the village drunkard, Jim Ransom, as her handy man. Peering eyes discover that her mail comes from Sing Sing prison, and the report is spread that someone she loves is serving time there. This is true, for her husband has been convicted of an embezzlement of which he is innocent. Martha treats Jim Ransom with kindness and at last succeeds in breaking down his sullen reserve. In his effort to save a child Jim is injured and Martha nurses him. In his delirium he cries for the woman to be taken away, that he has hidden "the money" and that she will never be able to find it. Martha prays continually that Jim, in his conscious moments, will make a confession, and her prayers are answered. Restored to health, Jim's manhood comes to the surface and he bares the fact that he is the thief. Martha and her husband are then happily re-united.

Mary Miles Minter in "Social Briars," Story of Singers Rise to Fame

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Mary Miles Minter's late Mutual release, "Social Pirates," is one of the best yet. Henry King directed and he has selected for Miss Minter's support a cast composed of Alan Forrest, Anne Schaefer, Edmund Cobb, Milla Davenport, George Periolat, Frank Whitson and Claire Du Brey. The production is in five reels? Miss Minter has the role of Iris Lee, who has developed a sweet-toned voice, and who is the organist and leader of the choir in the little town of Dalton, where she lives with a relative of her dead mother, a Mrs. Kane. Mrs. Kane's son, Jim (Edmund Cobb), is in love with Iris. He teaches in the Sunday-school. Iris dreams of being a great singer and she longs to get away from the restrictions and convention of the sedate country town in which she lives. Mrs. Kane encourages a match between her son and Iris, and when Iris does not respond to the love-making of her son, Jim, she proceeds to make life miserable for her little ward. Iris can stand the life no longer and packs up her belongings and leaves for the big city. She misses the train, but is offered assistance by Jack Andrews (Alan Forrest). a wealthy young man who is passing in his car. Jack becomes familiar and Iris jumps from his car and returns to the station to wait for the next train. She finally arrives in the city and finds that all is not "peaches and cream." She is unable to get work. Passing a church one night she enters and makes her way to the choir. Her voice attracts the attention of Peter Andrews, Jack's father, and a pillar in the church. On his recommendation, she is given a position as soloist. Her fame reaches the theatrical district and she is signed as prima donna in a light opera company. Jack makes violent love to her, but his true character is revealed, and Iris returns to the little town. Later, Jack, who has reformed, finds her and she returns as his wife.

"Cyclone Higgins, D.D.," Another Triumph for Bushman and Bayne

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

William Christy Cabanne, the man who wrote "The Slacker" and "Draft 258," has contributed to the screen another masterpiece in "Cyclone Higgins, D.D.," which is announced as the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———. In this extraordinary production with a most unusual title Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, two of the best known and best liked co-stars of pictures, are featured. It is the story of how a fighting parson tames Yellville, a Southern mountain town of the roughest sort, and finds the girl of his heart. Mr. Bushman is the parson who by nature of his deeds becomes known as "Cyclone," while Beverly Bayne, of course, is seen as Sally Phillips, the belle of Yellville, who wins his heart. Many queer and quaint folk appear in this truly human story which opens with the arrival in Yellville of Cyrus Higgins, D.D., an itinerant preacher, with his faithful Chinese servant. One of the first girls he meets is Sally Phillips, the vilage belle who, though she laughs at him and imitates his pigeon-toed walk, really admires him. Jasper Stone, the deputy sheriff, has Abner Phillips, Sally's father, thoroughly cowed and one day tries to take advantage of Sally. Higgins sees him and forces him to apologize, thereby making him a bitter enemy. Goaded by his superior officer, the sheriff, to put an end to the robberies which have been frequent lately, Stone forces the simple-minded Abner Phillips to pose as a robber and then arrests him. With the father in jail Stone goes to the Phillips home to abduct Sally. But the girl has fled to the preacher's for refuge. The house is turned over to her for the night, Higgins and his Chinese servant rolling up in blankets outside. But Stone, finding where Sally is, spreads a scandalous story around the town. The result is a fight in which the parson wipes the earth with Stone and then offers up a prayer. Sally is subsequently taken in charge by "Cyclone's" sister Mary, who takes her away to give her the advantages of schooling and society. In her absence the preacher finds that he is really in love with her, while Sally finds that the polished youths of the city do not interest her after all.

THOSE LONG RUNS

They Didn't Come from "Blind" Advertising of Pictures

WEEK after week you are reading in these pages of long runs at this and that theatre—of records being broken and of new methods of exploitation established.

Possibly you cannot afford the newspaper advertising, the lobby displays, the stage settings that attended these exhibitions. But you can gather one lesson from them that applies to the use of the Ad Talks.

Before a single one of those managers put pencil to paper in planning his campaign he knew what the picture was about, and he set about making it clear to the public. He would still be running pictures one day only if he had not been familiar with them. And you cannot run with success a daily change house unless you know about your pictures and can answer inquiries.

June Elvidge Has Highly Dramatic Role in "The Oldest Law"

(World Five-Reel Production)

The story of a mountain girl who comes to the city and there has strange experiences in her endeavors to eke out an existence, is told in "The Oldest Law," which is announced as the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———. This picture has for its star June Elvidge, the charming young lady who has been making such a tremendous hit lately in World Pictures. In the role of Jennie, the mountain girl, Miss Elvidge has one of the biggest parts that has yet been assigned to her. Her supporting cast, too, is worth talking about. John Bowers is again seen as Miss Elvidge's leading man, and others are Captain Charles, Eloise Clement, Frank Andrews and Frank Norcross. In this interesting tale, Jennie Fox lives alone with her aged father in the Maine mountains and roams the woods and rocks at her own sweet will. All goes well until Jennie's father is killed in an accident and Jennie is forced to come to the big city to make her living. She becomes the housekeeper for Billy West, who is a divorced man. She is not long in finding out that Billy gambles for fearfully high stakes and she seeks to stop him from doing this, but without success. Finally Billy loses so much that he becomes financially embarrassed and then an opportunity presents itself to Jennie by which she thinks that she can save him. But it is a trap laid for her by a designing old man, and she is about to fall into it when she is saved by Billy's ex-wife. Then Billy reveals his love for her and they are happily united. A wealth of scenic effects of an exceedingly nature enhance the production. Many of the scenes were taken in the South in the early Spring and are notably beautiful. In fact, the whole production has been elaborately staged.

"Peg of the Pirates" Provides Peggy Hyland with Good Story

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

Old colonial days are vividly brought back in "Peg of the Pirates," in which Peggy Hyland, the beautiful English screen actress, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ———. One of the most interesting pages of our early history was furnished by the struggle against the pirates who made the sea so unsafe at a time when the struggle for existence here was a hard one. Miss Hyland does some fine work in this photoplay and makes one of the best looking boys seen on the screen in many a day. The scenic effects, too, are beautiful to behold. The picture was directed by O. A. C. Lund and the especially selected cast includes Sidney Mason, Frank Evans, Ajax Carroll, Eric Mayne, Carleton Macy and James Davis. Margaret Martyn (Peggy Hyland) lives in the days when pirates sailed the seas and were just as vicious as the pictures show them. Her uncle wants her to marry the man he has chosen for her, but Peg, being a romantic maiden, prefers Terry, a brave, upright young man. When her uncle refuses his consent she wishes that "the pirates might get her," which they do after looting her uncle's home. The pirate brig sails away and Peg has a terrible time with the buccaneers and finally feigns death by whitening her face with flour. The sea rovers take her ashore to bury her in their hidden treasure cave, superstitiously believing that she would protect their gold and silver and precious stones. But once in the cave Peg lets them know she is not dead, and seizing the jewels she starts for the boat, pursued by the captain and his murderous crew. They capture her and take her to the brig, but just then Terry, who has been in pursuit in a chartered boat, shows up with his crew and the pirates are killed and Peg rescued.

"Riders of the Night," Features Viola Dana in Kentucky Drama

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Viola Dana, that young and attractive actress who has acquired the reputation of being one of the most versatile of screen stars, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— in "Riders of the Night," a fascinatingly typical story of mountain life in Old Kentucky. The story was written by John H. Collins, who also directed the production, while Albert Shelby Le Vino put the narrative into scenario form. In support of the star are George Cheseboro, who plays the leading male role; Monte Blue, Russell Simpson, Mabel Van Buren and Clifford Bruce, the last named of whom gives a splendid characterization of a Kentucky mountain villain. Miss Dana is admirably cast as Sally Castleton, a daughter of the Old South, who lives in the Blue Grass region of Kentucky with her grandfather, a Confederate veteran, and her domineering aunt. The old man has made a hard fight against the obnoxious toll-gate monopoly conducted by John Derr. The latter is in love with Sally and forces his attentions upon her to such an extent that the old man is obliged to order him from the house. The excitement is too much for him and he succumbs, after urging Sally to keep up the fight. Sally has given her love to Milt Derr, John's cousin, whom he has managed to cheat out of his inheritance. A band of night riders, of which Milt is a member, smashes the toll-gates, but their rendezvous is betrayed to John by a man known as "The Killer." In their flight Milt loses his hat and John finds it. With it he forces Sally into a promise of marriage, threatening to send Milt to the gallows if she refuses. In his mountain retreat Milt sees an announcement of the coming marriage and hastens to prevent it. Sally tells him of John's threats and he leaves in a rage, vowing to kill his cousin. Sally, frightened, follows him, taking her grandfather's ancient pistol for self-protection. But "The Killer" has beaten them to the Derr homestead and in revenge for John's refusal to pay him for his dirty work has killed him. Suspicion falls on Sally and she is tried and sentenced to be hanged. But with the aid of Milt the real slayer is found at the eleventh hour,

Roy Stewart Has a Dual Role in "Paying His Debt"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

The Triangle trinity—one could almost call the term a double triple—has produced another triply successful Western feature. For the benefit of anyone who has not yet learned who the members of this triumvirate are we will recall the fact that Roy Stewart, actor; Cliff Smith, director, and Steve Rounds, photographer, produced in "Boss of the Lazy Y," one of the finest Western five-reel features ever turned out. Again they have collaborated and the result of their efforts, "Paying His Debt," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ———. The story, which is by Alvin J. Neitz, gives Mr. Stewart a dual role of a bandit and a "lunger" who has gone West in search of health. The story is handled beautifully, without any disagreeable details, by a fine cast which contains, among others, Josie Sedgwick, Dixie Doll, William Ellingford and Harry Yammamoto. Broken in health, Frank Borden seeks the dry climate of a Western town and there arouses the sympathy of Nan Christy, daughter of the owner of the Bar L ranch. One day he is found half dead by Pete Morton, his double, who carries him to his shack and nurses him back to health. Then Pete reveals himself as the bandit who has been responsible for the many recent holdups in the vicinity. He proposes that Borden go into the town on the days that he, Borden, decides to hold up the stage coach. Grateful to Morton for saving his life, Borden agrees to do it. During a stage robbery the father of Nan Christy is shot in the arm. He sees the bandit's face and swears he will shoot him on sight. Returning to the town where he has played the alibi role for Morton, Borden finds a child unconscious by the roadside. He takes the child to the Christy home and there Christy encounters him. Believing Borden to be the bandit he endeavors to shoot him. Borden escapes to the shack, where he warns Morton to flee, then gives himself up. He faces death by lynching until it is revealed that his double is the real bandit. Borden is then accepted by Nan Christy as her fiance.

Jewel Affixes the Price Tag

Aims to Try Out "One Price" Policy on a Combination of Six Productions—Six Weeks Allowed for Showing

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC., last week announced its intention of trying out a policy of unchangeable film rental prices.

While the new system has not as yet taken in current releases of Jewel Productions it does take in all of their well-known recent pictures. This is said to be simply a step toward the time when current releases also will be plainly price marked.

In the announcement to the exhibitors throughout the country, Jewel Productions say:

"Our entire group of productions starting with 'Come Through,' with Herbert Rawlinson; 'Pay Me,' with Dorothy Phillips; 'Sirens of the Sea,' with Louise Lovely and Jack Mulhall; 'The Co-Respondent,' with Elaine Hammerstein; 'The Man Without a Country,' with Florence La Badie, and 'The Price of a Good Time,' with Mildred Harris, are offered to you in combination at a cost that will allow you to make a profit on each production, give prestige to your house and present to your public a series of rare treats at a popular price that heretofore the single picture booking plan seemed to you utterly impossible.

"The advertising allowed on each individual plan will be spent in newspaper advertising before the first Jewel Production is exhibited, and will carry a list of pictures as they are to be shown. It is understood that the exhibitor will use the entire group of six pictures within six weeks from the date of the signing of the contract and the pictures will be used in order of their release dates. 'The Price of a Good Time' to be the final presentation.

"Jewel Productions will prepare and furnish without cost to exhibitors all advertising cuts, publicity stories, and necessary figures for newspaper productions. Leader strips from the different pictures will be furnished them to be used each week preceding the showing of the pictures scheduled for presentation the following week. Thousands of exhibitors have been making a claim that the distributing companies should put an unchangeable rental price on all pictures. Many of the leading distributors have insisted that such a plan was impossible. The experiment now being tried by Jewel Productions no doubt will give the answer. If the exhibitors like the plan and support the company by booking its pictures, the one price plan will be enlarged upon, and will be followed on every opportunity."

Franklins Engaged for Norma Talmadge

SELECT PICTURES announced last week that Norma Talmadge has engaged the Franklin Brothers to direct her next picture.

Among the men who have achieved success among motion picture directors the names of C. M. and S. A. Franklin are very prominent. The acquisition of this team of directors by Norma Talmadge is considered therefore another step in the perfection of her series of Select Pictures, in which she is presented by Joseph M. Schenck.

The Franklin Brothers, although both young in years, have had a full experience in the field of the screen. They directed Norma Talmadge in some of her earliest pictures, when the Select star was one of the screen players enrolled under the Triangle banner in the early days of the Triangle Film Corporation. Among the later productions which the Franklin Brothers have directed are "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," and other Fox productions.

The Franklins, not content with their achievements in the directing end, co-operate to an unusual extent with the scenario writer by actually collaborating with him in the preparation of the continuity. This experience is standing them in especial good stead in this production, for Paul West, who was retained to write the scenario, recently was called to sail for France and see active service with Pershing's men. His departure, therefore, has thrown almost the entire preparation of the script on to her directors.

Hodkinson Service Opens Des Moines House

The New Rialto theatre in Des Moines, Ia., opened with the Paralta play, "A Man's Man," as its first attraction. It is further announced that Paralta plays will be presented at the Rialto in the order in which they appear.

The new American theatre in Cherokee, Ia., one of the finest houses of the Middle West, also has announced that it will avail itself of the Hodkinson-Paralta service.

Essanay Offers Second Broncho Billy Series

The second series of ten revivified Broncho Billy dramas are now being offered by Essanay through the George Kleine Exchanges, and are rapidly being booked, it is said. The first set of ten, which began March 1 with "Broncho Billy's Leap" and ended May 3 with "Broncho Billy's Last Deed," had such a run that it was decided to issue the second block, beginning May 10 and running to July 12.

The second set of ten are: "Broncho Billy's Squareness," "Broncho Billy's Secret," "Broncho Billy and the Greaser," "Broncho Billy's Fatal Joke," "Broncho Billy's Grit," "Broncho Billy's True Love," "Broncho Billy and the Western Girls," "Broncho Billy Wins Out," "Broncho illy Trapped" and "Broncho Billy Rewarded."

"Thrift Day" at the Broadway

Patrons to Be Charged Only Amount of Ticket Tax, But All Are Expected to Buy War Savings Stamps in Lobby

WEDNESDAY, May 15, will be celebrated as "Thrift Stamp Day" at the Broadway theatre, New York, where the Universal special attraction, "The Bride's Awakening," is being shown. On that day the only money that will be accepted at the box office in exchange for tickets will be the small amount demanded by the Government as the war tax on theatre admissions.

The idea of "Thrift Stamp Day" belongs to Manager Nathan of the theatre, who has worked out all of the details. He has arranged for the placing of booths, at which thrift stamps will be sold, in the lobby of the theatre, and also is completing arrangements to have members of the Mayor's Woman's Committee on National Defence to be present and sell stamps.

Probably for the first time since the issue of the thrift stamps they will be used as a medium of exchange to the extent that they will be given as change. A person may tender at the box office a War Savings Stamp of the five-dollar denomination in payment of tickets and as change will receive thrift stamps of the twenty-five cent denomination.

The plan of Manager Nathan was made possible through the offer of President Carl Laemmle of Universal to accept all of the thrift stamps received at the Broadway box office, keep as many of them as possible under the law for himself and see that the balance are apportioned to other Universal executives and employes. Under the law no person may own War Savings Stamps to the value of more than $3,000.

Maintaining the F. P.-Lasky Standards

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation points out as a notable fact that, despite the general and decided increase in the cost of materials going into the making of pictures, there has been no decline in the quality of Paramount and Artcraft productions. The wonderfully high standard of motion pictures in general, moreover, has been quite uniformly maintained through a period fraught with many difficulties for the manufacturers.

In a recent attempt to elucidate this question, Milton E. Hoffman, studio general manager at Hollywood for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was asked frankly how the thing was done. Mr. Hoffman's reply was illuminating and may be taken as indicative of the general policy of the organization in this direction both East and West.

"It is simply a question of keeping track of every penny," declared Mr. Hoffman. "Whereas, in the past, there has been more or less waste, today, with our organization and perfection of the unit system of work throughout every department, there is no waste. That is the answer. For example—time was when there were delays in many departments all too frequently. And delays are not only dangerous in the film business—they are decidedly costly. If a high salaried star is kept waiting, with company and director and staff—for sets, stories, etc., there is a most alarming waste of money and time—which are identical in this work, even more so than in many other industries.

"Nowadays, thanks to the big stages, the efficient workmanship and the fact that the responsibility for each department is placed upon the head of that unit, there are no waits—or at least none that are serious. Every penny is accounted for also; not that we are penny wise and pound foolish, or niggardly in respect to requirements but that we watch for loopholes of waste and close them at once. Every cent goes, either directly or indirectly into the production and the exhibitor and his patrons get the benefit in perfect pictures. Thus, while costs of materials have gone up and up, during the war period, by effecting this tightening of gaps and avoiding unnecessary wastage, there has been no difficulty in keeping up the quality of the pictures in proportion to the increase in cost."

World Inaugurates a Trial Casting Day

ONE afternoon each week has been set aside at the World Studio for the purpose of trying out new material and making selections of material for the smaller roles in new productions of World-Pictures, thereby getting the variety in casts that the film fans crave.

A comprehensive and successful plan for the selection of these new people has been inaugurated. On the appointed afternoon the aspirants are gathered in the studio and are there tried out by the directors as to their quickness of perception, their ability to grasp the essentials of a scene and their success in depicting emotions. Those who prove capable along these lines are then given screen tests—that is, they are put through their paces before the camera by the directors. If they show up well when the tests are developed and printed they are hired for some production in which they will fit well.

Recently at one of these try-out afternoons thirty-five young ladies were given a trial. Of the thirty-five six developed enough ability to warrant screen tests and of the six, two were hired for work in new pictures.

Some New Comedy

When her new Pathe feature, "A Little Sister of Everybody," is released in June it will be seen that Bessie Love has developed a new strain in comedy-making. It is also declared that she arises to a striking emotional climax.

Cast of "Old Wives for New" Is Notable

With no particular star specially featured, the entire cast of "Old Wives for New," the forthcoming Artcraft special being directed by Cecil B. DeMille and written by Jeanie MacPherson from the novel by David Graham Phillips, is being pointed to as one of the most notable ever assembled in one production.

The players selected by Mr. DeMille for the picture includes Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley, Sylvia Ashton, Florence Vidor, Theodore Roberts, Helen Jerome Eddy, Marcia Manon, J. Parks Jones, Julia Faye, Edna Mae Cooper, Gustav Seyffertitz, Tully Marshall, Lillian Leighton, Maym Kelso.

Justin Fair with Pathe

Announcement is made that Justin Fair, recently dramatic and photoplay editor of the Newark Star-Eagle, has become a member of the Publicity Department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the New York headquarters. Several years ago, Fair was editor of the famous "Photoplay Pink" edition of the Los Angeles Record.

Allen Interests Buy Grand in Kitchener

The Allen interests in Canada, the company controlling the Paramount-Artcraft franchise for the Dominion, whose head offices are in Toronto, have again purchased another theatre to add to their rapidly-increasing string of houses in Canada. This time it is the Grand in Kitchener, Ontario.

It was just a few weeks ago that announcement was made that the Allen people had purchased two leading Ontario houses, the Temple in Hamilton, and the Majestic in London.

Director Albert Capellani and May Allison, Metro Star, Discussing a Scene

George Walsh, Peggy Hyland and William Farnum Are Three of the William Fox Stars Who Shine Exceedingly Bright. They Are All Bringing Out New Productions

Fox Retains Book Title for New Picture

ALTHOUGH it was believed at first at the William Fox offices that "Riders of the Purple Sage" would not be retained as the title of the William Farnum de Luxe production now in work in the West, Mr. Fox has definitely determined to keep the name of this Zane Grey novel for the picturized version.

The chief reason for this decision, Mr. Fox says, is the desire to let exhibitors profit from the wide publicity and word-of-mouth advertising that Mr. Grey's book received.

"There are undoubtedly thousands of persons throughout the country," Mr. Fox declares, "who will welcome the opportunity of seeing the story in film form although they never read the novel itself. They have heard of its power and were the title changed they probably would not recognize from billboard advertising that the production is really a faithful transcript of the book.

"The temptation was strong to call it 'Lassiter,' after the name of the vigorous and virile character that Mr. Farnum is impersonating. Mr. Farnum himself, however, was one of those who protested against any change from the original title.

"Consequently, we are using what is one of the longest titles that has ever graced any of our photoplays. We have been particularly careful in titling pictures that we did not employ many or lengthy words. Rarely have we exceeded three short words. In the majority of cases we run to two-word titles because they lend themselves so well to display on electric signs and on lithographs and in newspaper advertising."

Livingston in Triangle May 19 Feature

FOR the week of May 19 Triangle offers at the head of its program a five-reel drama, "Who Is to Blame?" featuring Jack Livingston and Maud Wayne. This is a screen adaptation of a story by E. Magnus Ingleton and was directed by Frank Borzage and photographed by Pliny Horne. A rickshaw driver, Taro San, is taken to America by his employer, Grant Barton. In the new land Taro San's loyalty is tested, when it becomes necessary for him to sacrifice the respect and admiration of his benefactor that he may save Barton from a life of sorrow and regret. Jack Livingston has the part of the American lawyer, Grant Barton, and Maud Wayne, the former Keystone beauty, will interpret her first dramatic part as Marion Craig. Jack Abbe, the talented Japanese juvenile, who had an important part in "Her American Husband," will be seen as Taro San.

The second release of the week is "Old Hartwell's Cub," featuring William Desmond. Mabel Richards wrote the story and the scenario is the work of George E. Jenks, formerly of the staff of the Saturday Evening Post. It relates the development of a young blacksmith, whose only objects in life were the love and admiration for his drunken father, from sodden indifference to one of the foremost citizens of the town, through the inspiration and love of a good woman. The play opens amid small town comedy and pathos, then jumps to the West, where the hero is rescued from a mob lynching as a horse thief.

William Desmond is Bill Hartwell, while Mary Warren, who so successfully played opposite to Desmond in the Triangle production, "An Honest Man," will appear as Mary Lane. Walt Whitman and Edwin J. Brady are also in the cast. Thomas N. Heffron directed and Alfred Gosden photographed.

"The Hand at the Window," a two-reel Keystone Comedy, formerly announced for release the week of May 12, concludes the week's program.

World to Produce It

"The Unveiled Hand," a story by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, has been purchased by World Pictures, and the work of preparing the continuity is now under way. Miss Forrester has long been a feature writer on the New York Sunday World and a contributor to leading magazines.

Uncle Sam Puts O. K. on "My Four Years"

Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has written a leter to My Four Years in Germany, Inc., in which he puts his official O. K. on Ambassador James W. Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," and personally endorses the production as patriotic propaganda. The letter, written on the official stationery of the Committee on Public Information, follows:

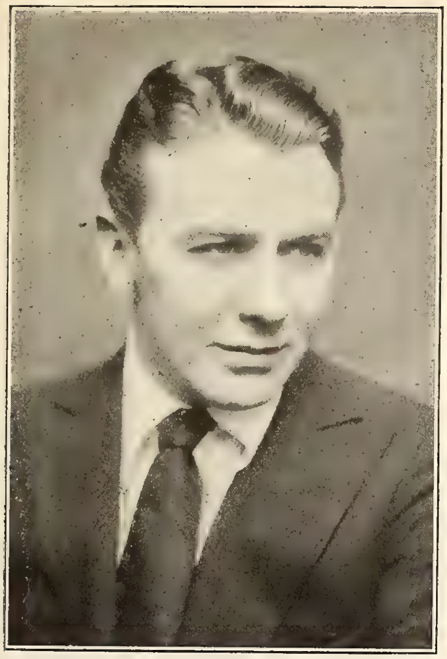
"Ambassador James W. Gerard's 'My Four Years in Germany' should be productive of great good throughout the country, both from the standpoint of showing German methods of warfare as well as stimulating patriotic activity on the part of our own people.

"This picture was reviewed by us officially in Washington. At the same time it was reviewed by Captain Shephard, Aid to the Chief Military Censor and a representative of the State Department. There was nothing seen in the picture at that time which was deemed subject to elimination."

Seyffertitz Not to Leave Lasky Company

From the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation comes the statement that, despite announcements to the contrary, Gustave Seyffertitz, one of the most valued members of the Lasky Stock Company, will remain with the organization, appearing in Paramount and Artcraft pictures. One of the rumors was to the effect that he was to become a director of stage productions for David Belasco.

Mary Warren Is Said to Give a Commendable Performance in Triangle's "An Honest Man."



Tom Moore, Goldwyn Player, Whose Popularity Is On the Increase

Tom Moore's Popularity Grows

Even though it is Goldwyn that says it, perhaps with a little partiality, inasmuch as he is that company's leading man, one is forced to admit that Tom Moore's popularity is growing. As a matter of fact, Moore has been fortunate in having been cast in Goldwyn Pictures in parts for which he has been well fitted. Playing a diversity of characters in "The Cinderella Man," "Dodging a Million," "The Floor Below" and "The Danger Game," he portrays Anthony Quintard in the first named play with precisely the same ease with which he assumes the quizzical crookedness of Jimmie Gilpin in "The Danger Game."

It is this ease more than any other quality which makes Tom Moore a player of the first rank. No matter what he elects to do, he is first of all entirely natural. Nothing of the conventional actor marks his work, and he is as much himself on the screen as he is away from it.

Underlying his ease of manner, Tom Moore's never failing sense of human nature is said to be responsible for his success. He knows people and can project what he knows because he is one of them. Without being a type he is representative of all types, and is equally at home as a careless man of wealth as he is a denizen of the slums.

When he finds time for recreation Moore plays golf or goes on long tramps in the country with some friend who knows more about the woods and fields than the intricacies of make-up or cutting a picture.

Screen Magazine Makes a Hit in India

Manager Jack Cohn reports that the Universal Screen Magazine is making a hit in India, according to a letter recently received from Harold B. Pereira, of Calcutta.

Goldwyn Changes Marsh Release

Substitutes "All Woman" for "The Glorious Adventure" for June 2 —Production Was Directed by Hobart Henley

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION announces the substitution of "All Woman," a dramatic story by F. Lloyd Sheldon, as its Mae Marsh release for June 2 in place of "The Glorious Adventure." The last-named production will be the subsequent Marsh release. "All Woman" has been cut and titled and within a few days prints of it will be on their way to Goldwyn contract customers in all parts of the country.

Hobart Henley, who directed Mae Marsh's picture, "The Face in the Dark," directed "All Woman." He is said to have provided for it the same quality of snap and punch that made the former subject so popular.

The new production is said to give Mae Marsh a stronger dramatic role than any she has had. "All Woman" tells the story of Susan Kildare, "the good girl who tamed a bad town." Every inch a woman —a real woman—is Susan, though the beginning of the story finds her a New York factory girl. She goes to a little Adirondacks town to claim an inheritance and finds herself in a tangle of exciting circumstances.

Instead of the splendid hotel she thought she had inherited the girl finds a wretched roadhouse, frequented by the worst element in the country. Susan decides on an immediate "clean-up." Miriam Strong, the sister of Austin Strong, a young political leader of the district, elopes with a worthless young man and they seek shelter in Susan's hotel, intending to be married the next day. When they have registered Susan begs them to reconsider and succeeds in persuading them to return home.

Then follows other troubles, but of course a happy ending is brought about.

Berman Issues Broad Challenge

General Manager of Jewel Wants to Know Name of Picture That Can Match "The Kaiser" as Box Office Winner

H. M. BERMAN, general manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., has issued a sweeping challenge to producers and distributors of motion pictures to name a feature that has made as much money for the exhibitor as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

"The number of bookings of a production before it has been shown," said Mr. Berman, "usually only is proof of the efficiency of the sales force. These advance bookings are no criterion in proving the value of a picture from a box-office angle.

"There have been numerous pictures that have been booked in thousands of theatres throughout the country as a result of circus advertising methods and intensive sales campaigns. The promoters of these pictures with great glee have told the exhibitors through the trade press of the tremendous booking success of the pictures. Naturally when these productions have failed to make money for the first-run exhibitors, the second, third and fourth-run exhibitors as a result of this fact have canceled the bookings. Nothing, however, has been said of the cancellations by the producers and distributors who pointed with such pride to the advance bookings.

"I now challenge any distributor of motion pictures to open his books, check his film rentals on his most popular production with the receipts of the theatres that presented the production and produce one single instance where a picture has made as much for the exhibitors of the country as has 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin.'

"The picture had a pre-release showing in Boston on March 15, where it ran for five weeks at the Globe theatre. From March 15 until the present it has been shown constantly all over the country, and I have kept in touch with the box-office receipts of every theatre that has presented it. Out of thousands of presentations but one exhibitor failed to make money and that man has acknowledged the failure was his fault and not the fault of the picture.

"In making this claim for 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' I don't even except 'The Birth of a Nation,' which is acknowledged to have played to greater total receipts than any other feature photoplay, even though 'The Birth of a Nation' until very recently was not presented along regular film rental lines.

"Present indications lead me to believe that in the near future I may be able to make the statement that 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin' was rebooked for repeat presentations in more motion picture houses than any other production. I do not make this claim, however, at this time because the picture has been released for less than two months, and it is a little early to make such claims, but the requests for repeat bookings are so large that indications are that I will be able to make and prove such a claim."

Sets a Record for Denver

A letter just received at the home office of Select Pictures from H. L. Knappen, manager of the Denver branch, claims that all Saturday attendance records for Denver had been broken at the America theatre by Alice Brady's latest Select Picture, "At the Mercy of Men." Wherever this picture has been shown, Select says, it has proved to be one of Miss Brady's most successful productions.

With a Flivver Like This, in "From Caterpillar to Butterfly," the Girls Flock Around Like Bees on a Honeysuckle. The One-Reeler Was Made by National and Is Released Through General Film

General Film Reports Progress

Organization Now Handling the Product of Thirty-one Separate Producers—Points to Efficiency and Economy of Service

GENERAL FILM COMPANY is now releasing the product of thirty-one separate motion picture manufacturers, tripling its list of producing clients since last fall. From a big program group of star releases down to a single-reel educational, the product handled by the company embraces every imaginable subject, while the distribution ranges from the whole of the United States and Canada down to single specified States.

"General Film Company is able to care for a multitude of accounts like this," said a prominent official of the company, "because its sole business is that of a service company. Any motion picture product of merit can find in General Film a route to its market. We are handling now a volume of business such as the company has not had in recent years. This does not show completely in regular weekly releases, because not all of our clients produce on the traditional weekly schedule. In fact, isolated special releases of all lengths are now being routed through our exchanges that formerly were sold through State rights exchanges of various ownership, various efficiency and various responsibility. The owners of these films are convinced that one statement a week from one responsible concern covering the whole field economically and intensively is just about the right thing."

"General Film did not start its service expansion at the easy end. It started with the biggest undertaking of its career with the acceptance of 'Hodkinson Service' of General Film as its medium for serving the country with Paralta Plays. Our company felt big enough to tackle this, and quickly proved itself to be in that our exchanges already have one and one-half million dollars' worth of business laid out on the product."

"Having thirty exchanges, each thoroughly organized and equipped, all directed from headquarters in New York and constantly inspected by a force of traveling auditors and supervisors, the organization finds its task simplified by the more product it handles. Every customer for one brand of product becomes a customer for additional product of another brand. If these brands were distributed through a number of exchanges in the same town, each sale would have to be made separately—at a compound of selling cost instead of a simple one."

General Film states that a great deal more of new product is under negotiation at this time, and that future announcements may be expected of considerable trade interest.

Viola Dana Returns to New York Studio

Viola Dana has returned to Metro's New York studios and has started work in a screen version of "Opportunity," a story by Edgar Franklyn, which was published serially in All-Story Weekly. John H. Collins, who has guided the little star in most of her pictures, is both the adaptor and director of this new production, and John Arnold is the photographer.

Her new picture is the second of Miss Dana's new series of screen comedy dramas, the first of which, "The Only Road," was completed just before she left California.

Cavalieri Play Renamed "Love's Conquest"

Under the direction of Edward Jose the last scenes of the Paramount picture version of "Gismonda," starring Lina Cavalieri, have been taken at the Fort Lee Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The production, claimed to be the biggest ever undertaken in the East, will be released under the title of "Love's Conquest." In it Madame Cavalieri wore her famous collection of jewels, said to be worth more than a million dollars.

During the film of a lion scene a near-fatality occurred, according to the assertion of the Famous Players-Lasky publicity department. A large lion with a bad record had been secured and, after it had been put through its paces before the camera, its owner and trainer, J. A. Cahill, attempted to drive it back into its cage. The animal turned on Cahill and would have killed him, it is said, had not John Abbott, Jr., one of the studio carpenters, come to the rescue with an axe. One lusty blow caused the lion to drop the body of the unconscious trainer. Two more equally lusty blows—one dead lion. Cahill's life was despaired of for a time, but he is now recovering in the Englewood Hospital, it is said.

"Dot" Farley Has a Good Chance to Shine

"From Caterpillar to Butterfly," the current Clover Comedy released by General Film Company, is said to afford "Dot" Farley ample opportunities to display her talents. Miss Farley is supported by "Bud" Duncan and "Kewpie" Morgan. The comedy for the following week is "A Widow's Camouflage." These one-a-week comedies are made by the National Film Corporation.

"The Cross Bearer" Used for Recruiting

June Elvidge Is In the Cast of World's "The Cabaret"

Parke and Cushing Work Out New Stories

Wiliam Parke, director, who has just completed the production of "The Yellow Ticket," starring Fannie Ward, for Pathe release, has returned to New York after a trip to Atlantic City, in the course of which he and Tom Cushing, who wrote the scenario of "The Yellow Ticket," worked out a number of stories which they had had in mind for some time.

Mr. Parks decided not to accept the offer of the Astra Company that he produce their next serial as he wants to stick to features. At the present time he has not yet decided definitely what he will do, and it is reported that he is considering several propositions.

Chaplin's Dog Is Dead

"Mutt," the white mongrel pup which, in the role of "Scraps," the world's champion thoroughbred mongrel," was costarred with Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," has shuffled off this mortal coil. His demise, attributed to a broken heart caused by the long absence of his master on his Liberty Loan trip, occurred the other day at Hollywood.

J. Barney Sherry to Have a Raffles Role

In "High Stakes," the concluding Triangle release on the May schedule, J. Barney Sherry has a typical Raffles role. In his long career on the screen Mr. Sherry has come to be associated in the public mind as a portrayer of only the so-called dignified parts, such as the politician, the lawyer or the millionaire. He has a fine presence and the force and dignity of his personality have always conformed admirably to the characterizations entrusted to him. His advent in a crook role part, therefore, will excite no little interest.

Included in the cast of "High Stakes" are: Harvey Clark, Jane Miller, a new leading woman who will make her first appearance with Triangle in this vehicle; Myrtle Rishell, Dick Rosson, Ben Lewis and J. P. Wild.

Tom North Wins a Promotion

Pathe Makes Him Division Manager with Jurisdiction Over Eastern District—Proctor and Wessling in Other Sections

TOM NORTH, one of the best known and most popular men in the Pathe organization, and editor of the company's official house organ, the Pathe Sun, has been appointed division manager with jurisdiction extending over the entire eastern district. Friends in the amusement world from coast to coast will learn with pleasure of Mr. North's promotion. Pathe now feels the eastern district is assured of a live, wide-awake expert with boundless energy, a remarkable personality and a business man who is strong on the "square deal." North's appointment follows closely on those of Ralph O. Proctor for the middle western, and W. S. Wessling for the southern districts, to work under the direction of Sales Manager F. C. Quimby.

For more than a score of years Tom North has been associated with ventures in the field of amusements. His first connection was with Price's floating theatres, showing on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. Then he was with Jule Walters' old-time melodramas. He was with Gentry Brothers' show, with Charles Whittaker, and with Lincoln J. Carter. He also conducted dramatic shows for Arthur C. Hastings, and was the director of the Lefley-Bratton Company. He was press man for the Ringling Brothers Circus for several years, and booked and directed road attractions for Harry Askin for three years. In San Francisco Mr. North organized and directed sixteen road companies at one time on five Kleine shows.

Later Mr. North was in charge of the V-L-S-E Seattle office. The movement for adequate advertising of motion pictures in the Seattle newspapers received its first impetus through him. Seattle still ranks foremost in the opinion of many as a result of the pioneer work done by Mr. North.

Tom North joined Pathe as manager of the Super Feature department handling special engagements of such features as "Les Miserables" and "The German Curse in Russia." When Tarleton Winchester took charge of all publicity, Mr. North became editor of the Pathe Sun and has handled this branch of Pathe's exploitation work with marked ability and consequent success.

Douglas Color Pictures for N. Y. Trade Showing

W. W. Hodkinson, who expects to return to New York the latter part of this month, has just announced to his home office that he is so impressed with the quality of the Douglas Color Pictures that instead of commencing immediate bookings in the various exchanges he has decided to bring the latest production, "Cupid Angling," to New York City for a large trade showing, and also public exhibition, so that the true quality of these pictures may be fully appreciated by both the trade and the public who will be invited to the showing.

The Douglas Natural Color Pictures are re-creations of the scenes that they portray; no colored rotary shutter, or hand-colored prints enter in the process.

The new process is the discovery of Leon Forrest Douglas, of San Rafael, Cal. The pictures have already been shown to the public in Los Angeles, where the Kinema theatre has secured the sole rights. Their showing would seem to bear out all the claims made for them, judging from the flattering criticisms received.

Mary Miles Minter in a New Ghost Story

AT the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Mary Miles Minter is now engaged in the filming of "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," from a story written for the Saturday Evening Post for Josephine Dodge Bacon. Rosy is a mythical person who is never seen by the lady who employs her, but who keeps the home and the silver in a state of immaculate cleanliness.

Under the editorship of Will M. Ritchey the scenario department of the American Film Company is providing many high class stories for the American stars and is keeping the productions up to the high standards set and maintained by this company. A number of well-known writers have been added to the scenario staff, among them:

Stephen Fox, author of "The Frame-Up," "High Play," "Shackles of Truth," and "Souls in Pawn," all released on the Mutual program. Mr. Fox's recent releases also include "The Japanese Nightingale," with Fanny Ward, and "More Trouble," with Frank Keenan.

Daniel F. Whitcomb, author of "A Game of Wits" and "A Bride's Silence," on the Mutual program. Mr. Whitcomb is also well known as the author of several of "The Mary Sunshine Series," including "Told at Twilight" and "Little Mary Sunshine."

Elizabeth Mahoney, who has recently adapted "Ann's Finish," "Beauty and the Rogue," "The Mate of the Sally Ann," "Molly Go Get 'Em" and "A Square Deal" for the Mutual program. She is also the author of "Limb of Satan" and "The Close Account," released on other programs.

William Parker, author of "Miss Jackie of the Army," "The Craving," "The Bruiser" and "Powder," all on the Mutual program. One of his recent releases on another program is entitled "The Nemesis."

Titles Chosen for Ray and Dalton Plays

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made of titles of several new Thomas H. Ince productions for Paramount release. The Charles Ray picture which probably will follow "His Own Home Town" has been named "A Son of the Snows." With Irvin Willat directing under the supervision of Mr. Ince, it is said that some of the best snow scenes in the history of the film excursions to Truckee, Ariz., which affords superior locations for winter scenes, were obtained. The new Ray picture recently finished has been titled "The Hand of the Hun." It has the war as its background. Ray is now engaged on still another story, written by Victor L. Schertzinger. Jane Novak is leading woman in both "A Son of the Snows" and "The Hand of the Hun."

Dorothy Dalton soon will be seen in a Paramount picture, "The Mating of Marcella," and later she will appear in "The Triple Cross," a mystery story of the present war. After that, Miss Dalton will be seen in a Southern play—something quite new for her. It was written by Ella Stuart Carson.

Variety of theme and treatment is said to mark the forthcoming Dalton pictures. "The Mating of Marcella" is a tale of a divorce problem with the star as a girl of exotic parentage; "The Triple Cross" is one thrill after another, it is said, with Miss Dalton as a Secret Service operative; the Southern story has to do with the emotion of jealousy largely. "Tyrant Fear," the current release of the Thomas H. Ince star, is a virile tale of the Canadian Northwest.

Enid Bennett is completing "The Desert Mating," her first picture for Paramount since she became Mrs. Fred Niblo. The picture is said to be admirably adapted to the Australian star's abilities. Jerome Storm is director of this production. Jack Holt supports Miss Bennett.

Jesse C. Hampton has resigned the position of business manager of the Thos H. Ince studio to accept a similar position with another studio. Mr. Hampton has been succeeded by John Kelly, who has been for a number of years a valued employee of Mr. Ince.

General Alternating Its Short Releases

THE Western releases known as Rancho Dramas, produced by the National Film Corporation of Denver, are being dated on alternate weeks with the Blue Ridge Dramas produced by Ned Finley, according to General Film Company.

This will enable the exhibitor to book a continuous weekly succession of two-reel out-door photoplays of the type that General Film says has already been demonstrated a big commercial success. In accordance with this arrangement of two-reel subjects, the current Blue Ridge Drama will be followed by a Rancho story said to provide an unusual number of thrills and suspenseful moments.

Similarly, the O. Henry releases, through General Film, are now dated every other week to alternate with the Wolfville Tales, by Alfred Henry Lewis, providing a succession of comedy-dramas of high literary calibre—the O. Henry subjects dealing with urban life and the Lewis tales with the unharnessed West.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Madame Olga Petrova Shows a Visitor Around Her Country Place on Long Island

Lawrence Again Directs Virginia Pearson

Edmund Lawrence, who directed Virginia Pearson's newest William Fox Feature, "Firebrand," is about to start work on another production featuring the same star, to be titled "For Gold."

Mr. Lawrence made his directorial debut with the Fox forces in the production of "A Daughter of France," which is said to have proven an immensely popular vehicle for Miss Pearson, although Mr. Lawrence screened most of the picture under the handicap of illness. Probably no director in the industry is more popular with his technical staff and company of actors than Mr. Lawrence, it is said.

Charlie Chaplin and his faithful hound adorn the front cover of The Lookout, the oldest and most exclusive of society journals published south of the Mason-Dixon line. This is an honor that is said never before to have been accorded a film player.

This unique publicity beat was put over through the enterprise of Frank H. Dowler, Jr., general manager of the Signal Amusement Company, of Chattanooga, where The Lookout has been printed for the past twenty-two years. Incidentally, Mr. Dowler did such remarkable business with Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" in both Chattanooga and Knoxville the first week of its release that he has been obliged to book the picture for a second run.

Steele in Petrova Play

In Madame Petrova's fifth picture, "Patience Sparhawk," the part of Beverly Peale is played by Vernon Steele, the young English actor who appeared on the legitimate stage with the Polish star in "Panthea." He has appeared on the screen as leading man with Clara Kimball Young, in "Hearts in Exile," and with Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus."

William "Smiling Bill" Parsons and His Leading Woman, Teddy Sampson Are Putting the Brand of Comedy Into Capitol Pictures For Goldwyn that Is Fast Winning Approval Throughout the Land

Choosing Cast for "The Demon" a Hard Task

The hardest job in the twelve years' experience of Horace Williams, Metro's West Coast casting director, so he declares, was the picking of a cast to support Edith Story in "The Demon," which was adapted by George D. Baker from the novel by the Williamsons. Choosing the principals, Lew Cody, Charles Gerrard, Fred Malatesta, Virginia Chester, Molly McConnell and others, was easy, but among those Mr. Williams was required to engage for "bits" and extra work were: One Sultan, and women of his harem; one Arab chief and followers; three dozen bewhiskered merchants of Algeria; one dozen Moslem and Christian slaves; one slave auctioneer; twenty fierce Corsican brigands; three Nautch dancers; ten Nubian guards; one hundred assorted tourists, the pick of Los Angeles; one goat, one donkey and one Ford!

Raymond West Suffers a Broken Arch

Raymond B. West, the Paralta director who has staged more of that company's productions than any other director, is suffering from a broken arch in his left foot. Mr. West believes that the fracture is due to natural weakness of the bone brought on by the constant use of his feet in driving his automobile. He is anxiously awaiting sufficient recovery so that he will be able to undertake the production of J. Warren Kerrigan's next Paralta play, "Toby," which he has been chosen to direct.

Fox Finishes Three More

Three pictures were finished at the Fox Film Corporation eastern studios and one in the western studios last week. Miss June Caprice completed "Blue Eyed Mary," "Peggy Hyland" and "Peg of the Pirates," and Miss Pearson wound up "The Firebrand." In the West Tom Mix ended his work in the interesting play of western life, "Ace High."

Parsons on His Ninth Comedy

Smiling Comedian's Capitol Pictures, Released Through Goldwyn, in Big Demand — Reichenbach Going to Europe on Sales Campaign

"SMILING BILL" PARSONS is now at work on the ninth of the twenty-six Capitol Comedies he will make this year for distribution through Goldwyn. Although less than three weeks have elapsed since the first was released, over six hundred theatres throughout the country have contracted for the comedies. These include the Jones, Linnick and Schaeffer houses, Ascher Brothers' circuit, Marcus Loew's theatres, the Mastbaum, McGurk and Sablowsky theatres in Philadelphia and the A. H. Blanck and Thomas Saxe houses throughout the Northwest. The two last named have booked the entire series.

Many of the best known comedy women on the West Coast will be seen in the Parsons pictures. Billy Rhodes is seen opposite the smiling comedian in "Bill's Baby" and "Bill's Predicament." Molly Malone, formerly featured with Universal, supports Bill in "Matching Bill" and "Birds of a Feather." Teddy Sampson (Mrs. Ford Sterling), formerly starred in World Film and Triangle subjects, will be Parsons' principal support in two releases, already completed, but as yet unnamed, while May Agnew, one of the Famous Players-Lasky featured players, is now working opposite Parsons in "Bill Bulls the Market" and has been engaged for another picture.

Through the Goldwyn foreign department, offers have been received from Scandinavia, Australia, France, Italy, Spain and Portugal, while Harry Reichenbach, the company's general sales and business manager, has received offers of outright purchases or franchise sales from Walturdaw and Jury's, Ltd., of London; from Williamson and Australian for Australia; from Di Luggo and Antemorra for Italy, Portugal and Spain and the Balkan states, and from Howells for the Orient.

No arrangements have been concluded for the foreign territories as yet. Mr. Reichenbach will leave for Europe early in June and contemplates handling the sales for all European countries from a London connection.

"Honor's Cross" Second Goldwyn-Selexart

"HONOR'S CROSS" is announced as the second Selexart subject distributed by Goldwyn. A cast of prominent players is featured.

Rhea Mitchell is seen in the stellar role of Jane Cabot, in turn a cabaret dancer, a seamstress and a waitress. Miss Mitchell, who formerly was on the vaudeville stage, has appeared on the screen in "The Three Musketeers," "Sealed Lips," "Gilded Youth," "Whither Thou Goest" and "On the Level."

To Herschell Mayall is entrusted the important role of Hon. Thomas Dolan, a corrupt politician, and he is said to be equal to the many opportunities of the part. Mayall is best known as a screen player for his performances in "The Renegade," "Sorrows of Love," "The Beast," "Civilization" and "Cleopatra."

Edward Coxen has the role of Lee Stevens, a sturdy mountaineer lured to the city by Dolan. For several seasons Coxen has been leading man in screen productions.

Roy Laidlaw, who did fine work in "The Gun Fighter," "The Female of the Species" and "The Patriot," is seen as "Gentleman Jim" Cabot, formerly a lightweight pugilist, but later a fighting heavyweight loafer.

Adele Farrington and Joseph J. Dowling are other players of note who have important roles.

Hopper Now Directs for Metro

Placed in Charge of Edith Storey's New Picture, "As the Sun Went Down"—Reicher to Direct Bert Lytell

METRO has added E. Mason Hopper to its directorial forces at the Hollywood studios and he has already started work guiding Edith Storey in "As the Sun Went Down," her next picture following "The Demon," which is now being assembled, cut and titled.

"As the Sun Went Down" is a screen version of the play by George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's Hollywood studios, who also wrote the continuity. Mr. Baker directed Miss Storey in "The Demon," and is now completing the picture. Mr. Hopper was engaged by Mr. Baker to direct Miss Storey in her newest starring vehicle because of the fact that Mr. Baker's duties as manager of productions are heavy without the added responsibility of the continual direction of a star.

With the departure of Viola Dana for the East, Frank Reicher, who directed Miss Dana in "The Only Road," will cut the film and prepare it for shipment, after which he will take over the direction of Bert Lytell in his next picture — his third for Metro — which will follow "No Man's Land," directed by Will S. Davis, and "The Trail to Yesterday," directed by Edwin Carewe. A. S. Le Vino is working on the new story for Mr. Lytell, who is still engaged in making "No Man's Land."

Mr. Hopper has served with Paramount and Triangle, having directed such prominent players as Vivian Martin, Gail Kane, Alma Rubens, Wallace Reid and House Peters. He was the creator of the George Ade Fables as interpreted on the screen. Before starting as a director he had been a newspaperman, cartoonist and vaudeville headliner.

Katherine Harris Barrymore and Henry Kolker Are Presented By Metro In "The House of Mirth."

Memphis Stampedes to See "Over the Top"

POLICE reserves had to be called out in Memphis to restrain the crowds seeking to see "Over the Top," at the Majestic theatre, according to a telegram received by the Vitagraph Company from Charles McElvray, of Memphis, general manager of the Majestic Amusement Company.

In Syracuse, N. Y., where it ran at the Hippodrome, it played to capacity business for two consecutive weeks, thereby recording the longest run of any attraction in the history of Syracuse, according to a wire from A. J. Sardino, manager of the Hippodrome. Syracuse is known in theatrical circles as a "two-day" town, so that this record for "Over the Top" would seem to indicate a remarkable appeal by the most remarkable picture Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, ever turned out. It adds another to the growing number of tributes which have come to Mr. Smith and Wilfrid North, the director, for their handling of Sergeant Empey and his book.

"Over the Top," by showing at the Majestic in Memphis for nine days, also hung up a new mark, according to the telegram from Mr. McElvray, which read:

"Congratulations to Vitagraph upon your release of 'Over the Top' which we ran for nine days with greatest of success. It is the only picture we ever ran for week successfully, four days being our maximum. After opening night it was necessary to call for police assistance to handle crowds. Results on "Over the Top" were revelation to us."

The Syracuse manager wrote in similar vein, his message reading: "'Over the Top,' the greatest picture ever made. I played it for two consecutive weeks to capacity business. This is the longest consecutive run of any attraction in the history of Syracuse. Some of my patrons returned four and five times. Am arranging for return engagement. Wish to compliment Vitagraph on its splendid publicity campaign, which was of immense assistance."

Fine Balboa Used for New Lytell Picture

A number of scenes in Bert Lytell's forthcoming picture, "No Man's Land," adapted to the screen by Mr. Lytell and A. S. Le Vino from Louis Joseph Vance's popular novel of the same name, were photographed on a big estate at Balboa Palisades, one of the summer residence sections on the Pacific Coast and overlooking the ocean.

"My Four Years" Continues Success

Reports to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit are said to indicate that the box-office success attained by "My Four Years in Germany" at its run at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York, is being duplicated in other large cities in the East and Middle West.

Managing Director S. Barrett, of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, was obliged to break a hitherto inflexible rule and continue the Gerard film for a second week, owing to unprecedented popular demand. Besides using half-page and quarter-page ads in the daily papers, one of the novel features of Mr. McCormick's campaign was the excellent use he made of a letter from Mayor Charles W. Jewett, in which he urged every citizen to see the film as a patriotic duty.

"My Four Years in Germany" has been filling the Tremont Temple in Boston since April 14. The Transcript, in a leading editorial endorsing the film, said: "This film should be seen at the Government's expense in every army camp and cantonment, every fort, every naval barrack, and on board every ship in the United States service to-day. It is deeply productive of the emotional energy indispensable to the courageous, relentless pursuit of the war to a positive victory."

At Fabian's Regent theatre, in Paterson, N. J., the picture rolled up a six-day box-office total of $8,106, which is likely to stand as a record in that city for some time to come.

An April 21, John Kunsky showed it to the biggest first-night audience on record at the Madison theatre in Detroit, and expects it will break the run record of "The Birth of a Nation" before the engagement is completed. Similar reports come from Providence, Minneapolis, Newark and many other cities.

Pathe Has Something New in Lobby Display

Pathe has notified all its branch managers that beginning with the release of "Kidder & Ko.," a new Bryant Washburn comedy, improved photographic sets for lobby display will be offered exhibitors. The new sets to be sent out with all Pathe feature releases following "Kidder & Ko." will comprise eight photographs and a title card and will be sold at cost. Each set will have an exclusive border design and will be printed in a distinctive color. "Kidder & Ko.'s" release date is June 16.

Henley Directs Mae Marsh a Third Time

Hobart Henley, who directed Mae Marsh in "The Face in the Dark" and "The Glorious Adventure," the latter set for June release, is now in the midst of directing the Goldwyn star in a third picture, the title of which has not yet been announced. Since Miss Marsh cast her lot with Goldwyn, more than a year ago, Mr. Henley is the only one to have directed her in more than one production. Goldwyn professes to be delighted with the success of the combination.

Aubrey M. Kennedy, President of the Kennedy Theatres, Inc., Enters the Exhibitor Field With the Symphony Theatre In New York

Aubrey Kennedy to Produce Comedies

Aubrey M. Kennedy, who in partnership with Thomas Healey, planned the new Symphony theatre on upper Broadway, New York, which is now nearing completion, has turned producer on his own, and within the week will commence production of his first picture. While Mr. Kennedy is unable as yet to announce the name of his star, owing to contracts entered into between the player and his present management, it may be said that he is one of the best known comedians on the American stage, having been in the limelight for fully twenty years. He was the star of one of Broadway's successes this season. Mr. Kennedy plans to put this star in two-reel comedies, a series of which is to be produced and issued monthly. Roy Somerville, well-known scenario writer, who has many successful comedies to his credit, has finished the first script.

Mr. Kennedy lays first claim to the institution of a novelty in putting a Broadway star of national reputation in two-reel comedies, just as he departed from the beaten path in building the Symphony theatre on such an elaborate scale. It will be the first neighborhood house in New York city to maintain a fifty-piece orchestra and to present first run pictures to its patrons.

In all probability the new comedies will first be presented at the Symphony theatre. The name of the star will be announced next week.

Jane Novak Again in Hart Picture

In "Selfish Yates," William S. Hart's newest Artcraft picture, produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and directed by the star himself, Jane Novak again appears as Hart's leading woman. B. Sprotte plays the heavy role and others in the cast are Harry Dunkinson, Ernest Butterworth and little Thelma Salter. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story.

About New Pictures

In her newest picture for Metro, "The Only Road," Viola Dana has a scene in which she makes a raid on the assorted clothing of half a dozen small boys, who are frolicking in a swimming hole.

Anita Stewart, with her director, Wilfrid North and members of Vitagraph Company working with her in "The 'Mind-the Paint' Girl," narrowly escaped death in an automobile accident last week when returning to the studio from location.

Having worked at top speed for six weeks to complete "De Luxe Annie," in time for advance, showing the middle part of May, according to the Select schedule, Norma Talmadge has plunged at once into a new production.

Madge Kennedy is busy at the Goldwyn Studios in Fort Lee on her newest production, an original photodrama by Charles A. Logue, called "The Service Star." This is not a war story.

Increased interest is added to the big production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a Paramount picture by the fact that Marguerite Clark is playing the dual roles of Topsy and Little Eva.

Emily Stevens has begun work in a screen version of Rachel Crothers' problem play, "A Man's World." June Mathis picturized the drama.

Baby Marie Osborne appears as a diminutive cowgirl in her new Pathe play, "A Daughter of the West," and rides her own little Shetland.

Attractive New Orleans locations are utilized in "Way Up in Society," the first of the Diamond comedies featuring Diana Allen, General Film Company reports.

Immediately upon the filming of the final scenes of "Merely Players," Director Oscar Apfel commenced the work of direcing Kitty Gordon, World star, in "Mandarin's Gold," an original story from the pen of Philip Lonergan.

Herbert Heyes, one of the best known leading men, has returned to the William Fox forces after a long absence, and will be seen opposite Gladys Brockwell in "The Bird of Prey."

Word comes from Los Angeles, where Astra is at work on the first episodes of the new Pathe serial, "Hands Up," that it will be the best "action" serial Astra has turned out.

For the new Victor Schertzinger picture, "A Nine o'Clock Town," on which Charles Ray is now engaged, a country street was required and oddly enough this was found in the heart of Los Angeles.

Wm. S. Hart is back from his Liberty Loan tour, and has resumed work on "Shark Monroe" for Artcraft, which he will complete shortly and then begin on a new picture, details of which are still absent.

Seldom has a story been screened with as few interior scenes as in "The Light of the Western Stars," which features Dustin Farnum. There are less than fifty interior scenes.

Lucian Hubbard and W. A. S. Douglas, who wrote Pathe's forthcoming serial, "The Wolf-Faced Man," have grouped together a series of adventure ideas, many of which are based on fact.

The staging of strike scenes at a candy factory, provided a half-holiday for the employes so that they might become players in "The Winning of Beatrice," May Allison's next Metro picture.

A new block of Judge Brown Stories is promised for early release through General Film Company by the Boy City Film Corporation. Four additional subjects have been completed.

Harry Carey, the star of "The Three Bad Men," a dramatic Universal picture of the open country, did a fantastic flip from a high cliff at Newhall, Cal., in which he scraped off most of his face.

"Over There," is said to be in such demand that, in order to be able to accommodate demands for showings of this picture, the Select Pictures Corporation has been forced to reprint the subject.

When "The Judge" is released by World Pictures, it will mark the return of Marguerite Gale to the screen. Miss Gale supports June Elvidge and John Bowers in this production, directed by Travers Vale.

Edith Storey Has a Character Role In "The Demon," a Metro Picture

Hayakawa Pictures to Be Made at U City

A leasing arrangement has been entered into whereby the Hayakawa Productions, which are to be released by the Haworth Pictures Corporation, are to be made at Universal City. The principal settings already have been built and the filming of the first of the productions has been begun.

Vice-President and General Manager Hawkins of the Haworth Pictures Corporation says that the company will carry out its intention of erecting a studio of its own later on. He has the plans in hand for the studio, which will be the most unique institution of its kind in the realm of filmdom, it is claimed, and especially adapted to the type of photodramas in which the Japanese star will be featured.

The new company's studio manager will be George Stout, who for a number of years was associated with Mack Sennett.

Petrova in Out-and-Out Melodrama

A radical departure from the type of role usually portrayed by Madame Olga Petrova is promised when "Tempered Steel" is released for public view. Written especially for Petrova, by George Middleton, author of the Broadway success, "Polly With a Past," Madame Petrova's fourth special feature is an out-and-out melodrama. The first production to mark the contract under which Ralph Ince has been engaged to direct the Polish star in a series of pictures, "Tempered Steel" is said to have all the "punch" elements for which Ince is noted.

The role of Lucille Caruthers, which Petrova depicts, is that of a young and stage-struck southern society girl, who suddenly finds herself involved in the mad whirl of theatrical life in Manhattan. Through a chain of peculiar circumstances she finds herself guilty, in the eyes of the law, of murder.

Rothapfel Gets Petrova Plays

Will Present Forthcoming Productions at Rialto and Rivoli—Praises Box Office Value of Previous Petrova Pictures

MADAME OLGA PETROVA'S next two productions, "The Life Mask" and "Tempered Steel," will be seen in New York at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres during the course of the next six weeks. This announcement is made from the offices of the Petrova Picture Company.

"The Life Mask," the third special vehicle in which Madame Petrova appears, has been booked by the managing director, S. L. Rothapfel, for an engagement at his Rialto commencing the week of Sunday, May 12. The picture is a film version of the novel of the same name by the celebrated, though anonymous, author of "To L. M. G."

"Tempered Steel," Madame Petrova's fourth special feature, designed as a screen medium for her by George Middleton, author of "Polly with a Past," and directed by Ralph Ince, will be presented at either the Rialto or Rivoli during the early part of June.

Frederick L. Collins, president of Petrova Picture Company, was recently in reecipt of the following letter from Samuel L. Rothapfel, relative to the third and fourth productions in which Madame Petrova appears:

Dear Mr. Collins:

Since our recent talk, I have been looking over my Rialto attendance records again and find that the Petrova figures are even better than I told you.

During the four months I have played two Petrova Pictures, "Daughter of Destiny" and "The Light Within," the former played to more money than any other picture, save one, which has appeared at the Rialto during the period; and the latter played to more money than any other picture, except "Daughter of Destiny" and the one picture referred to above. In other words, your two pictures rank second and third in point of box office value, over a period of eighteen weeks.

These facts, together with my great admiration for Madame Petrova as an artist, lead me to accept, with pleasure, your very kind offer to allow my theatres to continue presenting Petrova Pictures, notwithstanding the severance of my relations with The First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) S. L. ROTHAPFEL,
Managing Director.

Pathe Uses New Policy on Travel Series

BY virtue of an important deal consummated between Pathe and the Post Film Co., of which Albert Redfield is president and treasurer and Clyde E. Elliott is vice-president and general director, release throughout the country of a new travel series will be made by that distributing company in conjunction with daily newspapers.

Forty papers in the United States are parties to the contract, and as each film is shown in each city, a travel article corresponding appears in each newspaper. The subjects are in single reel form. The countries covered by the touring cinematographers are those with which most Americans are totally unfamiliar, hence should prove of paramount interest.

The first release will be on June 16 and affords a comprehensive picture of life in St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands, bought from Denmark by the United States last year.

The newspapers signed up to participate in this remarkable project are as follows: New York Evening Mail, Philadelphia Inquirer, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Pittsburg Press, Baltimore American, Detroit News, San Francisco Chronicle, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Chicago Evening Post, Buffalo Evening News, Minneapolis Daily Tribune, Los Angeles Express-Tribune, Milwaukee Journal, Denver News-Times, Portland Oregonian, Houston Chronicle, Atlanta Journal, Salt Lake Telegram, Dallas Dispatch, Charlotte Observer, Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, Duluth News Tribune, Grand Rapids Herald, New Orleans Item, Hartford Courant, Albany Times-Union, Topeka Daily Capital, Birmingham Age-Herald, Arizona (Phoenix) Republican, Des Moines News.

First National Shows Canadian Strength

ON a recent visit to New York, W. P. Dewees, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Ltd., of Vancouver, British Columbia, had the following to say:

"The co-operative idea behind the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has taken hold of our exhibitors in western Canada strongly. For a long while past the tendency has been toward the open market which gives the exhibitor freedom to select those productions made by independent men of genius who wish to do their own work in their own way. By securing features of such unusual box-office appeal as 'Tarzan of the Apes,' 'My Four Years in Germany' and 'The Fall of the Romanoffs,' together with the new Charlie Chaplin comedies, the executives of the circuit have made it not only possible but extremely easy for all wide-awake exhibitors to fill their houses with record-breaking crowds without contracting for half-a-dozen indifferent pictures in order to secure one big money-getter.

"At my own house, The Rex, in Vancouver, I am happy to say that we have done well on every First National attraction we have played to date, while with 'Tarzan of the Apes' and 'A Dog's Life' we literally 'cleaned up.' We are preparing to run 'My Four Years in Germany' soon, and judging from the number of inquiries we have already had regarding the date of showing, prices, etc., we expect to break a few more records with Ambassador Gerard's remarkable screen story of German intrigue."

"The Fair Pretender," With Madge Kennedy, Is a New Goldwyn Picture

Young to Direct an Earle Williams Picture

Tom Mills, who has directed Earle Williams in his last three Vitagraph features and is now completing "The Girl in His House," the Blue Ribbon Feature in which Williams will be presented June 24, will take a much needed rest after finishing the picture. Mr. Mills has never fully recovered from an attack of grippe, which he suffered some time ago. To take his place in the production of the next Earle Williams picture, which probably will be "The Man from Rodney's," by George Barr McCutcheon, President Albert E. Smith, of Vitagraph, has engaged James Young, one of the best-known directors in pictures. The selection of Mr. Young to direct Williams brings about a re-union of old friends, for Young directed the star several years ago at the Vitagraph Eastern studio, their chief production being "My Official Wife."

Mr. Young, with Mr. Smith, Eugene Mullin, editor-in-chief of the Vitagraph scenario department, and other prominent Vitagraphers made memorable the trip around the world five years ago, which is still remembered as one of the most enterprising undertakings in the industry.

Browning, Mont., Acclaims Elsie Ferguson

Elsie Ferguson and her company have gone to Browning, Mont., to begin the production, under the direction of Marshall Neilan, of "Hearts of the Wilds" for Artcraft release. Miss Ferguson, fresh from her successful campaign in behalf of the third Liberty Loan, was given a rousing reception, the local band and hundreds of citizens awaiting the train's arrival.

The company has taken possession of a large ranch, and nothwithstanding the shortage of labor in the West but little difficulty has been experienced in securing the large ensembles of people required for the picture. Surrounding ranch owners have gladly co-operated with the picture people in permitting their employees to work in the film.

After the ranch scenes have been taken the company will go into Yellowstone Park to film the scenes requiring the use of the soldiers and the military post.

Unique Features Claimed for "Blindfolded"

Many unique features combine to make Bessie Barriscale's Paralta play, "Blindfolded," one of the best pictures in which she has ever appeared, Paralta claims.

It is a story of the underworld and the plot is woven about the thrilling life of Peggy Muldoon, who is the adopted daughter of Patrick Muldoon, well-known among crooks as "The Ear," because of his remarkable powers of hearing. Before the opening of the story, Patrick Muldoon is blinded by a premature explosion of nitroglycerine, while he is robbing a safe. From this time on, he educates Peggy to believe that there is no wrong in robbing the rich.

At length Peggy is apprehended and sent to prison for two years, after which she finds employment as a companion to a wealthy woman and tries to go straight. There is a startling climax, which occurs when several of her former friends in the underworld find her after "The Ear's" death and threaten to disclose her past to her husband if she does not aid them in their crooked enterprises.

Constance Talmadge Back from Vacation

With more than a month's holiday behind her—a period spent chiefly in motoring over Southern California's sunlit roads —Constance Talmadge, Select star, is once more facing the camera. At the Hollywood studio, where Miss Talmadge's Select Pictures are now being filmed, daily routine of picture making is in full swing. Heavier by a few pounds, and with an added flush of sunburn on her fair complexion, "Connie," as the younger Talmadge star is known to her friends, has returned to her favorite occupation of breaking records for speed and efficiency in photoplay filming.

For the new production which Miss Talmadge is now making, Harrison Ford has been engaged as leading man, and Walter Edwards as director. The title and other details will be announced later.

Blackton Has Scheme

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has divided a new scheme for photographing scenes under water and he thinks it can be used to advantage by motion picture photographers. While filming "Missing," his next Paramount release, the Commodore took a trip in one of the glass-bottom boats at Catalina Island. He immediately conceived the idea of a special lens to be lowered into the water, the camera always remaining above.

Barriscale's Next

A brand new characterization is promised by Bessie Barriscale in her seven-act adaptation of Grace Miller White's popular American novel, "Rose o' Paradise," which is her forthcoming Paralta play.

The story concerns the adventures of a little optimist, Jinny Singleton, rightful heiress to a fortune left by her mother, but made victim of a chain of unpleasant circumstances by her scheming uncle.

Bill Hart in a Selfish Role

In "Selfish Yates," by C. Gardner Sullivan, Artcraft Star, Is Required to Completely Submerge His Own Nature

To portray an entirely selfish individual is no easy task for a man whose generosity is as great as that of William S. Hart, yet that is what the Artcraft star does in "Selfish Yates," his next Artcraft release following "The Tiger Man." The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, and in the beginning of the picture Hart is required to so submerge his own nature that he seems almost inhuman in his selfish egotism. Then a woman enters his life and he is entirely changed.

Inasmuch as the underlying theme of his new picture is the habit of selfishness someone asked Hart what he thought about it.

"I can't imagine what it would be like to be selfish," returned Hart, seriously, "because I never felt that way about anything that I can remember. Maybe it is selfish to get such a lot of satisfaction out of giving someone else pleasure, but certainly I have discovered the truth of the injunction— 'seek your own in another's good,' or words to that effect.

"This role I am playing in 'Selfish Yates' is that of a man who is so wrapped up in himself that he thinks the world and everybody in it was simply made for his pleasure. Just think of a man going through life like that! But when a real woman comes into his life he finds that he has been wrong all along and immediately changes his tactics.

"Selfishness is one of the worst evils of human existence, and most of our troubles come from indulging it. The selfish man is greedy, insincere, unreliable, unjust. And his house is built on sand — just when he thinks he's in the middle of a heaven of his own, the sand slides from under him and he finds he's headed for the other extreme.

"I think this picture is going to teach a big lesson. I try to have some such lesson in all my films. If it makes one man or woman do a little self-examining to discover if they've been selfish in their relations to others, it will have done all that I hope for. Of course, it will interest and entertain, I hope, also. I think there are few scenario writers who have a finer record for writing genuinely entertaining photoplays than C. Gardner Sullivan — and he's responsible for this story."

New Vitagraphs Are Announced

"To the Highest Bidder" and Another O. Henry Story for Alice Joyce—New Plays for Other Vitagraph Stars

Alice Joyce, who has about finished her work in "Find the Woman," the O. Henry romance of New Orleans, is about to start on "To the Highest Bidder," a novel by Florence Morse Kingsley, according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company. Tom Terriss will direct the production. Mr. Smith also has in contemplation for Miss Joyce another O. Henry play, the title of which he is not yet prepared to make public.

For Earle Williams, several strong plays have been picked out, his next vehicle after "The Girl in His House," being "The Man from Broadney's," which will be directed by James Young. This has been called the best story which George Barr McCutcheon ever wrote, and was read by millions in book form. Other works in preparation for him include "Out of the Dark," an original story by Roma Raymond and Jane Dixon; and "A Gentleman of Quality," from the pen of Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey. It is quite possible also that he may appear in "The Cambric Mask," a Robert W. Chambers story, before the summer is ended.

With "Baree, Son of Kazan" completed, Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman began work about two weeks ago on "A Gentleman's Agreement," by Wallace Irwin, and they are now said to be well advanced with its production under the direction of David Smith. Two other plays are in prospect for this company, one being an O. Henry play, "A Matter of Mean Elevation." This story has been specially built and probably will bear a more graphic title when it is produced. "By the World Forgot," a powerful story by Cyrus Townsend Brady, also is ready for this company.

Gladys Leslie, working under the direction of Martin Justice, will begin work this week on "The Rebel," an original story by Douglas Bronston. She completed "The Soap Girl" last week and no time was lost in starting her on the new feature, which is said to give her greater opportunities than any picture she has yet had.

Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe and a strong supporting cast under direction of Paul Scardon, is in the midst of "Tangled Lives," by James Oliver Curwood, and as soon as he finishes this feature will begin work on "Fiddler's Green." This story, written by Donn Byrne, ran in the Saturday Evening Post not long ago.

Lytell Slips on a Bunch of Wet Seaweed

Bert Lytell, Metro star, has suffered his first mishap since his arrival on the Pacific Coast a few weeks ago. While at Balboa on location for his forthcoming picture "No Man's Land," the story called for a chase over the rocks. A wave broke in front of the star and he slipped on the drenched seaweed and fell heavily between two boulders, giving his ankle a bad wrench and ruining his striped flannel trousers. Lytell spent two weeks in the Badlands of Arizona, working on his last picture, and rode bucking bronchos without receiving a scratch. But it remained for a little bunch of seaweed to turn the trick.

Paralta Plays in New Hands

Messrs. Anderson, Kane and Brown Dispose of Their Entire Holdings to John E. DeWolf, Herman Katz and Associates

PARALTA PLAYS, INC., is in new hands. By the terms of a deal which has been in progress for some time and which was finally consummated last Tuesday, the entire holdings of Messrs. Carl Anderson, Robert T. Kane and Nat I. Brown in Paralta Plays, Inc., and its subsidiary companies have been purchased by John E. DeWolf, Herman Katz and their associates. New officers, chosen by the Board of Directors immediately after the sale, include John E. DeWolf, president; F. M. Guinzburg, vice-president, and Herman Katz, treasurer, it is stated. In the complete reorganization which has already taken place Robert Brunton, who has been the chief executive at Paralta's West Coast studios, remains in his former capacity of manager of productions, and will retain his entire staff of directors.

Paralta Plays, Inc., made its entrance into the industry in March, 1917. A number of photodramas were produced before any were presented to the public and it was the first of last December before the first Paralta Play was released. This was "A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan as the star, and the excellence of that production immediately placed the new organization on a high plane. The second release, December 15, was Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale. At about this time Henry B. Walthall was engaged as a star of Paralta Plays and made his debut in "His Robe of Honor." The most recent addition to the list of Paralta stars is Louise Glaum, whose "An Alien Enemy" was released April 1. About nine weeks ago Mr. Walthall was released from his contract to permit him to go with David W. Griffith.

Eighteen productions have thus far been completed by the Paralta organization and it is stated that the work at the California studios will continue without let-up under the new executive direction. Mr. DeWolf and his associates state that it is their intention to produce in the future still larger and better plays. The new executives are now negotiating with other stars of prominence and expect soon to be able to announce important additions to their already brilliant list.

Each star will continue to make eight productions a year, to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Select Names a Field Manager

J. S. Woody Appointed to New Position—H. B. Dobbs Succeeds Him as Pacific Northwest General Manager at Seattle

J. S. WOODY has been promoted by Select Pictures from the position of Pacific Northwest General Manager to the office of Field Manager. Mr. Woody's new duties will take him to all the Select exchanges, thus enabling him to give his personal attention to specific situations in various fields, as the occasion may require.

Mr. Woody's promotion is a direct outcome of the showing he has made in the Seattle territory since the time, only a few months ago, when he took charge of Select's exchange located in that metropolis of the Pacific Northwest. The Seattle territory made a splendid showing under Mr. Woody's energetic campaigning.

Succeeding Mr. Woody, the Seattle Exchange will be under the managership of H. B. Dobbs. Mr. Dobbs has been with Mr. Woody ever since the latter entered the service of Select Pictures. It was Mr. Dobbs who won the soubriquet of "100% salesman" in this territory a short time ago. On one occasion Mr. Woody sent Mr. Dobbs, then a salesman, into sixteen towns in Montana with the request that he size up and do his best with sixteen "hard customers" in these several towns. After a period of hard campaigning, Mr. Dobbs returned to the Select Exchange in Seattle with sixteen contracts in his pocket, each one of the "hard customers" having signed for all of the pictures to be made by all of the Select stars. After that, Mr. Dobbs was known as the "100% salesman." Under his management the Seattle territory is expected to continue to thrive.

Mr. Woody's first scene of activity as Field Manager is the Los Angeles territory, where he is spending ten days in close co-operation with Bernard E. Loper, Select's Los Angeles Branch Manager.

Miss Barriscale Enthuses Over Her Pictures

Bessie Barriscale, Paralta star, who was recently called to New York by the illness of her sister, following the completion of "Patriotism" at the West Coast studio under Raymond West's direction, visited the home offices of Paralta and expressed great enthusiasm over her coming productions. She states that in her opinion they are the finest screen offerings in which she has ever appeared.

Howard Hickman, who will direct Miss Barriscale's next production, is busily engaged at the studios at the present time, preparing the scenes for the next Paralta-Barriscale Play, "The Rainbow," by William Parker. Miss Barriscale expects to return to the West within a few days to commence the filming of this production.

West's Latest Scheduled for May 15th

"Bright and Early," Billy West's late King-Bee comedy, will be released May 15. Billy has the role of a bell-boy in this late one. Babe Hardy, Leo Whie, Budd Rose, Rosemary Theby, and Ethel Gibson are in support.

"The Golden Goal," With Harry Morey, Is a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature

Universal to Re-issue Several Serials

UNIVERSAL is planning to re-issue several of its serials in the form of complete shows to be run in long episodes, equivalent to three or four of the present ones, according to the best judgment of the exhibitors. By these re-issues, made at the request of numerous exhibitors, Universal will fill the place of one serial on its present two-serials-a-week program.

Under the original plans, immediately upon the release of the eighteenth, the final episode of "The Bull's Eye," the first episode of "The Brass Bullet," featuring Juanita Hansen was scheduled for release. The release date for "The Brass Bullet" has been postponed until the first week in August when it will follow the final episode of "The Lion's Claws." Owing to the change in plans, from June 3 until August 1, the only Universal Serial on regular release will be "The Lion's Claws."

The serials to be re-issued in the new form are: "The Voice on the Wire," "The Perils of the Secret Service," "Liberty," "The Purple Mask," "The Gray Ghost," "The Mystery Ship," "Lucille Love," "The Trey o' Hearts," "The Black Box," "The Master Key" and "The Red Ace."

Numerous exhibitors have signified their intention of setting aside two days a week for a program to consist of serial episodes. In case the serial consists of eighteen episodes they will run the first four episodes on Monday, the second four on Thursday, the third four on the following Monday, the fourth four on the following Thursday. On the third Monday they will run the last two episodes of their first serial and the first two of their second, in this way giving eight serial episodes for several weeks.

This Is How June Caprice Illustrates "A Camouflage Kiss" In Her Wm. Fox Picture By That Name

Peggy Hyland and Farnum in New Fox Plays

All the feminine tricks known to pirate lore are said to be played by Peggy Hyland in "Peg of the Pirates," the current William Fox release. Penzance, in its palmiest days, never turned out a rougher, tougher crew than the bold buccaneers who kidnap the daughter of Sir Wyndham Martyn in this play, 'tis said. Supporting Miss Hyland are Carleton Macy, Sidney Mason, James Davis, Frank Evans and Eric Mayne.

"True Blue" is the title of William Farnum's latest Fox Standard release. It is said to be especially timely, being calculated to give fresh impetus to the real American propaganda intended to revive the spirit of the patriots who founded this "land of the free and home of the brave." Francis Carpenter, William Scott, Katherine Adams, Ada Gleason, Genevieve Blinn and Carrie Ward Clarke support the star. There are said to be some characteristic cowboy types and realistic rough-riding in the picture.

Five Stars Featured in This World Picture

World Pictures announces the release on June 10 of "The Cabaret," with a cast made up exclusively of stars. Carlyle Blackwell is the player most prominently featured, and associated with him are Montagu Love, George McQuarrie, June Elvidge and John Bowers. The picture is said to be a faithful transcript of the famous Bohemian section of New York City, known as Greenwich Village, and the majority of the scenes were photographed in that locality. Harley Knoles directed the picture.

The story deals with the adventures of four artists, all stanch friends until they meet Helene, a cabaret entertainer. They agree to submit portraits of her to a jury, thereby determining which is to have the right to woo her.

Coming Program Offerings

Fox Schedules Five for June

Promises Stories of Great Variety, with June Caprice, Tom Mix, Lee Kids, Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh as Stars

FIVE productions from the Eastern and Western studios are to be released as Special Features in June, by William Fox, according to the schedule which has been announced.

This is the order in which the pictures will be issued: June 2—June Caprice in "Blue-Eyed Mary," a girl's sprightly adventures in the field of love. Staged by Harry Millarde from the story by Frances Crowley. June 9—Tom Mix in "Ace High," a tale of adventure in the service of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police. Written and directed by Lynn Reynolds. June 16—Jane and Katherine Lee in "We Should Worry!" an impish, stormy comedy-drama written and staged by Kenean Buel. June 23—Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road," the drama of a woman's triumph over the wolves of society. Directed by Edward J. LeSaint from the story and scenario of Charles Kenyon. June 30—George Walsh in "The Kid Is Clever," a surprise photoplay built on an original dramatic structure.

In "Blue-Eyed Mary," June Caprice is supported by Helen Tracy, Blanche Hines, Bernard Randall, Thomas Fallen, Jack McLean, Henry Hallam and Florence Ashbrooke.

"Ace High" is said to be a perfect vehicle for Tom Mix.

"'We Should Worry!' is said to be the most expensive film that Jane and Katherine Lee have had," the statement says. "The unusually big cast was taken to the Southland for all the exterior scenes."

"Betty Schade returns to the Fox forces for an important characterization in 'The Scarlet Road.' The other principals in the cast are L. C. Shumway and William Scott.

"In 'The Kid is Clever,' the last Special Feature for June, we have provided the athletic George Walsh with another of the action and 'stunt' productions which have won him much high favor."

The first of the Sunshine Comedy releases in June will be "Wild Women and Tame Lions."

Three Comedies on Universal's Program

UNIVERSAL offers three comedies in its list of releases for the week of May 27.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are presented in another of their series of Star Comedies, a one-reeler titled "A Ripping Time." Universal executives state that the popularity of this brand of comedies is growing fast and it is only a question of time when the demand may be greater than the company will be able to supply. The two comedians have divorced themselves from slapstick as a means of extracting laughs. Another contribution to the week's releases is by Alice Howell, in "Her Unmarried Life," in two reels.

The Nestor Comedy for the week is "Who's Your Wife?" and features Gale Henry.

"The Bull's Eye" will reach its seventeenth episode under the title of "In Irons." In this episode Eddie Polo has the limelight very much to himself in stunts such as have caused exhibitors throughout the country to request another Polo serial in the near future, it is said by officials of the Universal organization.

"The Lion's Claws" is the other Universal serial offering. This serial, starring Marie Walcamp, reaches its ninth episode. In it the entire Universal City menagerie, consisting of lions, elephants, gorillas and monkeys, is used.

The regular weekly releases also include the Universal Screen Magazine, Universal Current Events and Universal Animated Weekly. One of the features of the screen magazine is a series of animated food conservation cartoons presented at the request of government officials. Another feature is the picturization of trained animal acts of the stage.

Vitagraph Schedules Drew Comedies Far Ahead

President Albert E. Smith announces a list of three months' releases of Drew Comedies, covering the months of June, July and August, as follows:

June 3, "Romantic Reggie;" June 10, "A Case of Eugenics;" June 17, "When Two Play a Game;" June 24, "When Greek Meets Greek;" July 1, "Cupid's Column;" July 8, "Boobley's Baby;" July 15, "The Honeymoon Baby;" July 22, "The Cub and the Daisy Chain;" July 29, "Their Agreement;" August 5, "Miss Sticky-Moufie-Kiss;" August 12, "Diplomatic Henry;" August 19, "By Right of His Might;" August 26, "The Professional Patient."

Marie Osborne in Pathe's Program Leader

"A Daughter of the West," featuring Baby Marie Osborne, heads the program to be released by Pathe for the week of May 26. This is a five-reel production, said to have Western thrills a-plenty.

The twelfth episode of "The House of Hate" is also released on this program. In it Pearl White is trapped in a gangster's den from which she sends a wireless to her hero, Antonio Moreno.

The week's comedy release is "Fireman, Save My Child," with Harold Lloyd as the leading funmaker.

Part Three of "Britain's Bulwarks" (one reel) shows the hardships endured by the British army in Mesopotamia, while the week's Pathe scenic shows the southern part of the Crimea, notably Sebastopol.

Hearst-Pathe News, No. 44, comes May 29 and No. 45, June 1.

Frederick Feature May 6

It is said that the interpretation by Pauline Frederick of the difficult role of Katusha in "Resurrection," the Paramount picture scheduled for release on May 6, is the best dramatic work she has performed in her career.

The double standard of morals, the cruelty and brutality practiced upon prisoners by Russian officers in the days of the monarchy, are the central notes of the book.

Program Glances

"Dolly Does Her Bit," Pathe's most recent Baby Marie Osborne release, is proving very successful. Clara Beranger wrote this story especially for Baby Marie.

"Shame," the seven-reel John W. Noble feature in which Zena Keefe is starred, seems to be ranking as a popular success since its general distribution was undertaken by General Film Company.

An invention of particular importance is illustrated in the one hundred and nineteenth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, released May 13, under the title, "Eliminating Train Stops."

"Pershing's Crusaders," the United States Government War feature, packed the Grand Opera House in Cincinnati at every performance during its week's run, beginning April 29.

Irene Castle's latest Pathe release is "The Mysterious Client," and branch offices are reporting a splendid advance demand for this feature.

Three Paramount comedies will be released during the month of May, presenting two subjects from the Mack Sennett Studio, and one from the Roscoe Arbuckle fun plant. The initial comedy of the month is "His Smothered Love."

Virginia Pearson is a Russian princess in "The Firebrand," the current Special feature release from William Fox's Eastern studios.

The romantic theme of his latest Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "Moonshine," released May 13, is counted upon by "Fatty" Arbuckle to make this the most popular picture he has produced up to the present time.

In Universal Current Events, No. 52, motion pictures of French artists and sculptors inspecting the ruins of the Rheims cathedral are shown.

Metro has set May 27 as the release date for Harold Lockwood's newest Metro starring vehicle, "Lend Me Your Name." The picture is a farce comedy.

"Cynthiana," the second of the two-part Wolfville Tales, a Broadway Star Feature released this week by General Film Company, is a story of the West.

The next Douglas Fairbanks production to be released as an Artcraft Picture following "Mr. Fix-It," is entitled, "Say, Young Fellow." In this subject the energetic Douglas appears as a "cub" reporter employed in a small city.

Viola Dana is "vamped" by a girl in her forthcoming picture, "The Only Road," which follows "Riders of the Night" and "Breakers Ahead" in the Metro program.

Carmel Myers, in the role of a sparkling vivacious French girl, stars in the Bluebird release of May 27 a five-reel feature, entitled "A Broadway Scandal."

Goldwyn offers to exhibitors a strong attraction in Madge Kennedy, as is proved by box-office reports throughout North America.

"Way Up in Society" will be released shortly by General Film Company.

There were many who went so far as to call "M'liss," the latest Artcraft Picture, in which Mary Pickford is starred, the best story the little star has ever had when it was given a special showing in Los Angeles recently.

"The Campaign in Mesopotamia," instalment of Pathe's war series, "Britain's Bulwarks," is No. 3, released May 26.

Louise Huff is again seen opposite Jack Pickford in "Mile-a-Minute Kendall," which is a Paramount release of May 13. As Joan Evans, Miss Huff has a particularly sympathetic role.

Pathe's Official British War Film, "The Battle of the Somme," released some time ago, has now been re-edited and condensed into a four-reel feature.

"The Mating of Marcella," which R. William Neill directed with Dorothy Dalton in the star role, is a new Paramount picture from the Thomas H. Ince Studio for May 20.

The capture of Messines and the surrounding territory which has since been wrested from the British by the Germans, is shown in the second episode of the great "Britain's Bulwarks" series, released by Pathe and giving graphic official scenes from all phases of the war.

"The Battle Royal" Next Sennett Comedy

In "The Battle Royal," the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy released May 20, Charles Lynn pursues Ben Turpin until both drop through a roof into a ring where a battle royal of dusky fighters is in progress. The new arrivals are welcomed by the battlers. Realism was added to the battle by the offer of Mack Sennett to the winner. The dusky fighters immediately proved that blood is thicker than water when they made a mass attack on Turpin and Lynn, who lost their front line trenches a number of times before they were able to effect a strategic retreat.

"The Little Runaway" Is Vitagraph Leader

President Albert E. Smith announces that "The Little Runaway" will be the Blue Ribbon feature on the Vitagraph schedule for the week of May 6. This is an Irish romance, written by Paul West and directed by William P. S. Earle, in which Gladys Leslie is featured. Jessie Stevens, Mother Mary Maurice, Betty Blythe, William Dunn and William Calhoun are in the cast.

The week's serial offering is the fifth episode of "The Woman in the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon. It is titled "The Hand of Mystery." The Big V Comedy is "Laws and Outlaws," and the Vitagraph-Drew comedy is "The Story of the Glove."

Three Stars in This

Agnes Ayres, star of a number of the most successful four-reel O. Henry pictures, makes her re-appearance in an O. Henry role in the current release, "The Purple Dress," said to be a diverting and highly interesting story of New York department store life. Two other O. Henry stars, Evart Overton and Adele De Gardes, are also featured.

In accordance with the new arrangement announced recently, General Film next week will release "Cynthiana," an Alfred Henry Lewis "Wolfville Tale," as the Broadway Star Feature, the Western subject hereafter alternating with the O. Henry subjects, to form a high class short-length series of pictured American literature.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

WE ENJOYED WRITING THIS

When Buck Helzfire, "so hard he bruises everything he comes in contact with," broke into Cactus Cafe, he thought he could put one everlasting dent into the outfit. So did Mendiz Ways, Buck's Assistant Hard Guy. And when the flashlights of the Big Chief Bad Man lit upon Gwendolyn Cookie, blooming sweetly in the alkali powder, it appeared to be all up with Gwendolyn and any dreams she cherished about a Noble Hero and Love's Young Dream. But of course Buck Helzfire had Another Guess coming to him, Gwendolyn got a Square Deal, and the Sympathetic Reader—no, we mean Onlooker—has the Surprise of his Life. We are not trespassing on Peter's prerogatives; this is not a review of the latest William S. Hart feature. It's a cartoon by Wallace Carson, and a roar from beginning to end. "Goodrich Dirt" is the stalwart champion ot the distressed lady.

We have been saving the above for two weeks, so we had to get it off our mind quick, but we are just as anxious to talk about the remarkable trapdoor spider whose home and habits are disclosed by the Pictograph camera. This insect, who ought to be drafted into the Engineer Corps, bars the entrance to his underground house with a door set on hinges which opens only from within and lines his living rooms with silk. No wonder the brood of youngsters who appear with Mother Spider ar so numerous and handsome!

American Sleeping Giants are disclosed as waterfalls, 92 per cent of whose power is as yet unused. They form a series of charming views.

INFORMATION PLEASANTLY CONVEYED

Universal Screen Magazine scheduled for release on May 24 manages to convey a lot of useful and interesting information without taxing the spectator's interest and enjoyment. We ourselves have been through a silk mill and studied at close hand the working of the jacquard loom, so we know how hard it is to convey a clear idea of the principle of this important mechanism. But with good close-ups and short, well-written titles, the Magazine editor "puts it over" successfully. This is an episode in the subject ot ribbon as a substitute for feathers in women's headgear. The artist is shown getting his inspiration for new designs in the wonderful bird groups of the American Museum of Natural History.

An appeal is made on behalf of Uncle Sam for his "Land Army" of willing workers in the field. Here are college men spending their vacation in spraying fruit trees, and Boy Scouts and school children planting and hoeing their own gardens.

The Attila Brothers, the world's greatest strong men, exhibit their grace and wonderful muscular development in groups of "living statuary." Marble for real statues, however, is still sought for, and we are shown the chiet source of the native supply in Vermont. Willie Hopkins contributes his "Miracles in Mud."

THE GLACIER, MASTER SCULPTOR

Robert C. Bruce has "come back." Not to civilization—we believe he is still following the "trail of the cayuse" in the wilds of the northwest. But he is on the screen with a new picture, "What the Ice-Age Left." The scene is the familiar Glacier National Park, but Mr. Bruce adds a new element of interest with an animated cartoon tracing the movement of the great ice sheet which reached down from Hudson Bay countless ages ago and cut off great mountain tops as if they were knobs of cheese. Following this graphic illustration, the comedy man has his innings and gives us his conception of what happens to the camera man, his pack horse and his dog, when they attempt to climb mountains that make for the sky in an almost straight line.

Needless to say, the photographic effects are equal to any of the fine scenics associated with Mr. Bruce's name.

INTERNATIONAL CARTOONS BOOKED BY VAUDEVILLE HOUSES

Under the careful handling accorded them by the Educational Films Corporation, the International cartoons featuring the "Katzenjammer Kids" and "Happy Hooligan" are rapidly achieving a wide popularity. Marcus Loew has booked these little comedies for his chain of theatres, using them on Saturday and Sundays. The Proctor and Moss houses find them an excellent attraction. The Duffield theatre, one of the big houses of Brooklyn, has substituted the International cartoons for the comedy it has been running.

OUTING-CHESTER PICTURES SUCCESS AT STRAND

The Outing-Chester pictures which Manager Harold Edel has booked for the Strand have proved one of the biggest attractions of this type that he has ever played. "Kaietur, the Pertect Cataract," went splendidly, and its success seems to have been duplicated by "A Cannibal Carnival," one of the finest and most entertaining travel pictures we have ever seen. Producers and film editors, as well as theatre managers, are beginning to realize that the mere name "educational" will not carry. Indeed, as a factor in entertainment, it is a handicap. The very interesting material in this last picture is made all the more enjoyable by titling as humorous as it is well written and in good taste.

Mr. Edel has booked twelve of the Outing-Chester Pictures, with an option on others.

UNIVERSAL OFFERS "CARELESS AMERICA" TO EXHIBITORS

With a "punch" every tew feet, in the shape of an automobile going over an embankment or headlong into the water, or a runaway or spill that holds the spectator to the edge of his seat in suspense, Universal's new free offering to exhibitors, "Careless America," drives home the lesson that reckless handling of automobiles sends each year an army of victims to death.

What happens when a car is backed sharply against a curb, when corners are taken at high speed, when warnings at grade crossings are disregarded, when chances are taken with a defective brake, when, most tragically contemptible, the driver is drunk—all these conditions, with their dreadful consequences, are illustrated in breathtaking episodes.

The picture was made at the suggestion and with the co-operation of H. S. Firestone, president of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, and is the product of the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It is being offered to exhibitors without cost and is receiving the active support of chiefs of police in all cities in which it is being shown. It is one reel in length.

"DER BLACK MITT" WORKS TWO WAYS

Are you lucky enough to have such a large and complicated income that you were nearly distracted trying to find out what you owed Uncle Sam on it? Then you will sympathize with "der Captain" in his agonies. Figures appear on the atmosphere, nice and clean, only to whirl and interchange till they become a hopeless blur.

And in the midst of it, "der twins!" With a blackmailing scheme, and "black mitts" tastened with every variety of devilish ingenuity to every specimen of wandering animal that the backyard afforded. When this Noah's Ark out of Nightmare Land trailed by the poor "Captain," even the dancing figures take the shape of black mitts, and the ink that in his agony he drinks is ejected and falls on the floor in the same horrid shape.

But vengeance is two-handed, and in the end a certain large "mitt" is applied where it will do the most good.

A winner of a cartoon!

LITTLE ANIMALS AT PLAY

Baby animals have exactly the same humorous and tender appeal that is possessed by human babies, and Curator Ditmars brings out their delightful qualities to excellent advantage. His list of youthful actors this time includes the Canadian porcupine, tiny mountain sheep who must learn to climb, baby deer playing with the grownups of the herd, a brood of little horned toads who use mother toad as a perambulator, and the always interesting tadpole, who goes through his various transformations on the screen. A reel such as this is welcomed and enjoyed by any type of audience.

"WILD BABIES" (with cartoon).

CARTOON CONSIDERED A "SAFE BET"

Nothing as hard to find as a good comedy. Nothing on which the exhibitor takes a bigger chance in the matter of pleasing his patrons [illegible] offending them.

But on a cartoon there is no chance. It is one hundred per cent good, that is not to say that all cartoons are of equal excellence. But there is never one of the so-called "cartoon comedies" that isn't good for a laugh at some point, and, the best of them, such as those reviewed elsewhere on this page, are concentrated tarce-comedy of the finest.

Furthermore, it is, indeed, a bad cartoon that offends against good taste. Like everything else on the screen, cartoons have followed the upward line in the matter of eliminating vulgarity, and it is seldom that the most fastidious can find reason for criticism. Indeed, there is something about a cartoon that makes it particularly popular with people who find most moving pictures banal and a bore. The mystery of "how it is done" piques their curiosity, while at the same time they readily succumb to the vivacity and the real humor and humanity that underlie the little dramas.

Among the Exchanges

First National Opens Buffalo Exchange

R. H. CLARK, treasurer and general manager of the First National Exchange, Inc., of New York, announced this week the opening of an exchange in Buffalo, to be managed by Dan Savage.

Offices are now being leased in the Lake City, it is said, and will be equipped with every convenience for facilitating business. The location of the quarters and the date of their opening have not been made known, but an announcement is expected shortly.

It is said the opening of a Buffalo exchange had been contemplated by First National officials for some time, but became an urgent necessity when the booking of "Tarzan of the Apes," the Chaplin comedies and the Petrova pictures began to overwhelm their then existing facilities.

William L. Sherry was expected in Buffalo last week to appoint a successor to Mr. Savage, who is a former manager of the Buffalo Mutual exchange and former president of the Buffalo Screen Club. He has guided the policies of the Buffalo William L. Sherry Feature Film Company branch for several years.

In announcing the acquisition of Mr. Savage, First National said last week: "Mr. Savage's appointment should meet with the approval of exhibitors in Buffalo and adjacent cities, for he is one of the best known and best liked film men in that part of the country, having always been associated with the distribution of highest grade productions on the market."

General Makes Further Exchange Changes

Simultaneously with the removal of the New York branch of General Film Company to the former Paramount exchange quarters in the Godfrey building, removals took place in three other cities.

The new exchanges are located as follows: Buffalo, 106 Pearl street; Chicago, 207 S. Wabash avenue; Washington, 6th and F streets, N. W.

The Washington move marks this branch's third location in six months.

General Film has also made a change at St. Louis, having installed F. J. Fegan as branch manager at that point. Mr. Fegan has been for some years in charge of the Standard Film Company at Kansas City. He succeeds H. E. Elder, one of General's veteran employes, who is to be transferred to another point.

Standard Keeps Busy on Sennett Laughs

The Standard Film Corporation reports that its various offices have been "rushed to death" by the inquiries on the two-reel Keystone-Mack Sennett comedies that organization is handling in the Middle West.

Phil L. Ryan, the general manager of the Standard, is highly enthused with the showing made by the various offices of the organization on these productions. "Our Minneapolis office," said Mr. Ryan, who has just returned to the home office from Minneapolis, "is surely meeting with a great demand for the Mack Sennett stuff. The exhibitors everywhere out there in the Northwestern states seem to feel that as a director of slapstick comedy Mack Sennett has never had a peer. And we hold, in common with the W. H. Productions Co., that these two-reel productions we are handling are the best that Sennett has ever made.

General Film Moves Into New Montreal Offices

The General Film exchange at Montreal is now established in its new quarters at 6 McGill College avenue, where it has obtained greatly increased facilities for the transaction of business.

The move from the old quarters at 243 Bleury street was made last week.

Three Cheers for Triangle!

"Over the top" for the Denver Exchange of the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

In the Third Liberty Loan drive the Triangle Denver office was one of the first to be reported as having subscribed 100 per cent.

They All Bought Bonds

Leo. F. Levison, Pittsburgh branch manager for Select Pictures, has a clientele of which he is proud, and rightly so. A recent canvass by his sales force showed that every Select Pictures exhibitor in the Pittsburgh territory had purchased a Liberty bond in the first week of the great drive. "This proves conclusively," said Mr. Levison, "the quality of the men in the Select Pictures family. Wide awake, keen business men, appreciative of the public's wants, and full to the brim with an active patriotism."

Have You Heard That—

Allen May, known on Philadelphia's Vine street as "Smiling Al," is now looking after that territory for the Metro Exchange.

Gilbert H. Penn, city sales manager in Cleveland for Famous Players Film Service, Inc., collected $2,000 worth of subscriptions for Liberty Bonds in one day.

Manager Ernest Boehringer, of Boehringer Amusement Company, New Orleans, has moved his offices to the new Liberty Theatre Building.

V. P. Whitaker, Select branch manager in Washington, was a recent visitor to Select headquarters in New York. He informed General Manager Kane that he is about to begin a sales drive in North Carolina.

E. Mandelbaum, president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio, with headquarters in Cleveland, came to New York to attend the annual meeting of the stockholders on April 15.

A. G. Buck has left the Hoffman Exchange in Philadelphia to become associated with the Select Pictures branch in that city.

The new Metro Exchange in Cleveland had its formal opening a few days ago. W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager, was in town for the opening, and introduced C. E. Almy, who will take the management of the office.

Phil Selznick, salesman in the Cleveland Exchange of Select Pictures Corporation, has a new way of going after contracts.

World Opens New Philadelphia Building

World Pictures has opened another of its branch office buildings.

Following the opening some weeks ago of its own building in Boston, World Pictures on May 2 opened to exhibitors and the public its new two-story branch office building in Philadelphia. This structure was especially designed and erected to house the Philadelphia World branch and it is one of the most up-to-date and completely furnished film exchanges in the entire country.

Sighting the Air-Craft Guns In "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," An Interstate Picture

Interstate "Zep" Feature Offered to Buyers

The Interstate Film Company announces that its production, "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" which was shown for private review recently, will be placed on the independent market and offered on a territorial basis. An official of the company said that after the showing he received a number of offers to buy the negative of the picture, outright, but that the company has decided to offer it through the regular channels of the independent market.

"Although the picture is to be offered as a two-reeler," the official said "the subject has sufficient substance in the way of real thrills and daring, to take rank with the five-reeler. For the first time the L-21's said on London, is depicted on the screen. In photographing the raid and the Zeppelin's subsequent destruction, enough film was used to make a ten-reeler, but we have sacrificed quantity for quality in cutting. 'The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21' is a strong box-office attraction."

The company announces also that work has been commenced on another picture, title not chosen, which will be a historical chronology of the life of President Wilson.

Popular Pictures Take New Offices

The Popular Pictures Corporation which formerly occupied offices at 218 West 42d street, is now located in the Candler Building, 220 West 42d street, New York. In its new offices, the corporation has installed a projection room.

Popular Pictures market features throughout the world. A. J. Bimberg, sales manager, announces that Popular's late picture, featuring Florence Reed, supported by Frank Mills and Jack Jackson, is nearly completed.

Pettijohn Expects Big Results

Affiliated Distributors' Corporation Doing Well He Says—Local Organizations Rounding Into Shape—Parke at Work

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel for the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which was organized a few weeks ago, announces that he will have the machinery of the organization running at top speed within a short period of time. In commenting on the progress made by this distributing company, Mr. Pettijohn said:

"Although incorporated only three weeks ago, this new co-operative booking movement has been received with unusual response on the part of exhibitors all over the country, and the work of completing the affiliation of the various independent exhibitors' booking associations that are now operating with this national body, is going on rapidly.

"Just as soon as these affiliations are consummated, the exhibitor organizers of the central body will take up the work of assisting exhibitors in territories where units have not yet been formed in the organization of their association."

Byron Parks, secretary of the Exhibitors' Committee which is responsible for the formation of the Affiliated, addressed a meeting of the Pittsburgh exhibitors on Tuesday night, and under the direction of Fred Herrington, the organizer of the Tri-State Exhibitors' Circuit, the Western Pennsylvania exhibitors are now completing the details necessary to join in this co-operative movement.

Following the meeting Mr. Parks left for Salt Lake City, to affect the affiliation of the exhibitors of the six Western States, now organized in the Exhibitors' Booking Association in the inter-mountain States.

Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Eastern Pennsylvania exhibitors are also lining up their forces, enthusiastic meetings having been held in Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and Philadelphia during the past week. The meetings in the first three cities were attended by Mr. Pettijohn and the one in Philadelphia by Sydney Cohen and John Manheimer of New York.

Shipman Announces Fifty-two Films a Year

ERNEST SHIPMAN's spring announcement carries the names of thirty-two pictures for the current year which include twelve from the W. H. Clifford Co., featuring Shorty Hamilton in his new five-reel comedy sensations; six from the Francis Ford Producing Co. which has already released "Berlin, Via America"; twelve from the Josh Binney Co., featuring Funny Fatty Filbert in a series of two-reel comedies; "A Nugget in the Rough," a five-reel western comedy drama; "Trooper 44," featuring the State Police of Pennsylvania; "The Tiger of the Sea," a seven-reel timely sensation from the pen of Nell Shipman, and six features from the Titan Feature Photoplay Co. of Spokane, Wash.

But twenty more pictures are necessary to reach the announced output of fifty-two pictures per year, and contracts now executed and other plans in the making give Mr. Shipman assurance of exceeding this number.

With the exceptions of Nell Shipman's "Tiger of the Sea" and the forthcoming productions of the Titan Co., territory has been disposed of on all of the pictures in hand, and in some cases almost sold out.

A system which first of all brings the selling value of the picture to a mutually satisfactory basis, and then guarantees to the buyers a strict fulfillment of all contracts, is enabling Mr. Shipman to dispose of the most of his territory without the necessity of screening the pictures.

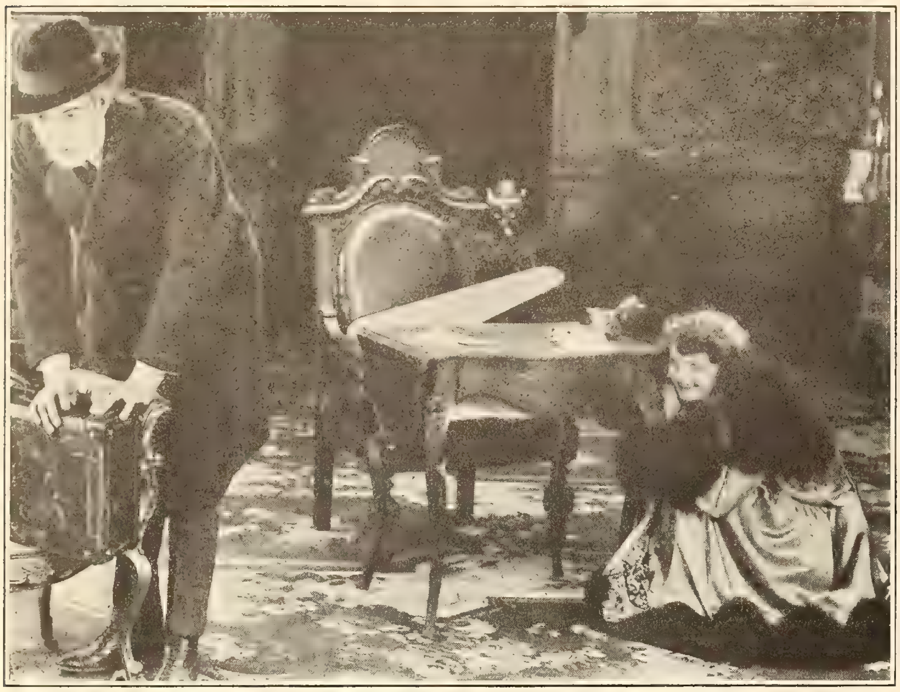
Thirty-four states have been contracted for on the Francis Ford feature, and with the exception of three buyers all have bought on the strength of Mr. Ford's reputation and the generally favorable trade-paper reviews, those who exploit the first Ford feature having the option on his other product.

Ernest Shipman aims to represent the Independent producers in the open market, and states he will only handle product which appeals to the active class of exhibitors and meets with the full approval of the governmental authorities at Washington.

"Wrong Flat" Scores for Jester Company

"The Wrong Flat," the May release of the Jester Comedies, has exceeded, it is said, all predictions for bookings from all points in the country.

In New York at its first showing, the Marcus Loew theatres went over the top solid for this release. Reports from all other points show that this is going to be a record breaker, according to the Jester Company.



"The Street of the Seven Stars" is Doris Kenyon's First Production for DeLuxe Pictures, Inc.

Hardin Begins New Campaign

Will Show Exhibitors Benefit to Be Derived from Billboard Advertising—Ideas Gathered from Recent Tour

EDWARD HARDIN, manager of the Motion Picture Department, Thomas Cusack Company, has begun an educational campaign to acquaint exhibitors, producers and public with the affirmative value of billboard advertising in connection with motion picture production and sales.

Mr. Hardin, a well-known figure in metropolitan cinema circles, has handled the outdoor advertising for some of the most gigantic features and serials that have been marketed, among them "The Perils of Pauline," "The Iron Claw," "Vengeance and the Woman," "Womanhood," etc., and his comments upon the billboard phase of national advertising campaigns are instructive and interesting.

"I have recently concluded a tour of the country," said Mr. Hardin, "and my broadened perspective convinces me, more than ever, that outdoor advertising—or 24-sheet posters—is the logical link to connect the motion picture exhibitor and his patron to advantage.

"The exhibitor and producer are already put upon a plane of intimacy and mutual understanding by trade paper advertising. The second link in this chain of the printed word is the binding of the patron to the exhibitor and it is my opinion, shared by some of the most notable men in the motion picture industry, that billboard advertising with its continuity and attractiveness of appeal surpasses any other medium for the sale of features and serials direct to the patron.

"It is consequently obvious that motion picture sales may be divided between the wholesale and the retail, or that of the producer to the exhibitor and that of the exhibitor to the patron. It is my opinion that trade paper promotional campaigns will continue to be the outstanding advertising feature of motion picture wholesaling, while billboards are to establish a new and surpassing factor in motion picture retailing."

Garrett Reports Sales in Foreign Fields

Sidney Garrett, president of the J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., exporters of films, has sold the Metro Specials, "Revelation" and "Blue Jeans," for Scandinavia. Mr. Garrett recently sold the entire Metro program under contract for Argentine, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay, Bolivia and Peru.

As president of the Bengar Picture Company, Mr. Garrett also sold "Brown of Harvard" for Brazil and the "Garden of Allas" for Java and the Straits Settlements, and has the entire Selig output under contract for Argentine, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay, Bolivia and Peru.

Webster's "Reclaimed" Now in Cutting Room

Harry McRea Webster, Harry McRea Webster Productions, Inc., announces the completion of the camera and directorial work on his first feature production for the independent market. The picture is in seven reels and is titled "Reclaimed." Niles Welch and Mabel Julienne Scott are co-starred. The picture is now in the cutting room, being assembled and titled, and is announced for private review and release within the next week.

"Reclaimed" is the work of Richard Field Carroll and develops the theme telling of the struggle between love and hate.

Miss Gentry Speaks of Educational Feature

Caroline Gentry, co-author with William Addison Lathrop, of Educational Film Corporation's first big educational feature, "The Romance of Coal," now under production, returned to New York last week after spending three days in Charleston, W. Va., attending the annual convention of the coal operators, West Virginia Coal Association, reports that a keen interest is shown by the people of this district in the first big picture to be made in its vicinity. Vice-president E. W. Hammonds, of the Educational Films, has guaranteed that every precaution will be taken in the production of this picture, to insure a faithful and accurate account of the production of coal.

Miss Gentry addressed the convention and told the operators of the progress that was being made with the picture. She stated that Director Frederic A. Thomson would begin active work, this week, and that the company would work in Charleston the last of the month.

Exhibitors of Cleveland Organize Exchange

Fifty Cleveland exhibitors have organized and filed incorporation papers under the corporate name, The Ohio Exhibitors Film Exchange, it is announced. The new organization will purchase special features offered on the independent market for distribution among its members in Cleveland. Plans have been formulated whereby the organization will extend its operations throughout the entire State of Ohio.

The officers elected are: H. H. Lustig, Erie and Angella theatres; D. Shulman, Yale and Dennison Square theatres; M. B. Horwitz, Globe, Fountain and Haltnorth theatres; W. J. Slimm, Marquise theatre, and Max Schachtel, owner of the Eclaire and "Y" theatres.

Pryer Pictures Considered Very Rare

This month brought the release of the first of the Pryer Pictures, which are considered by all who have seen them as exceptionally rare in their line.

Charles C. Moody, sole agent for Pryer Pictures, has opened an office in the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, to distribute these subjects in a series, comprising scenes in Latin America, chiefly Guatemala. The first release features the recent earthquake in Guatemala.

Carl DeForrest Pryer, the cameraman who secured the views, is said to be the only photographer who has been able to get into the city since the earthquake.

Other subjects of equal merit are promised in the future.

" Zongar " Placed in New England

Bernard Macfadden, of Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc., announces that further territory for the feature " Zongar," starring George Larkin, has been disposed of during the last week. The New England territory, comprising the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and Rhode Island, has been disposed of to S. V. Grant and J. E. Dunne, of the Grandum Film Company, 50 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass.

Frank Zambreno, president of the Unity Film Servicce, Chicago, Ill., has contracted with the representative of the Physical Culture Photoplays to market " Zongar " in the States of Illinois and Indiana. Western and Southern territory is all that is now left open on this feature.

" Mickey " In No Hurry

In commenting upon the method of distribution for Mabel Normand in " Mickey," a Western Import Company official makes the following statement:

" We are in no hurry to release ' Mickey ' until everything has been properly done to make it possible to give ' Mickey ' a most thorough foundation for a successful showing in every part of the world.

" ' Mickey ' will be just as valuable as a box office asset two years from now as it is today."

Whartons Finish "Eagle's Eye"

Last of Twenty Episodes Filmed at Studio in Ithaca—First Run Houses Have Reached Twelfth Chapter

THE Whartons completed the filming of the nineteenth and twentieth episodes of " The Eagle's Eye," the serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America, by William J. Flynn, at their studios in Ithaca this week. The twentieth episode brings the serial to a patriotic conclusion by showing the events which immediately preceded the declaration of war on imperial Germany by the United States.

First-run houses have now reached the twelfth episode of the serial, which depicts the attempt to blow up the locks of the Welland Canal, and reports which have reached the Whartons from the Foursquare Exchanges, which is releasing the picture, indicate that it is reversing the usual business of serials by increasing patronage as it progresses. Bookings on the serial for second, third, fourth and fifth runs are record breaking, according to M. H. Hoffman, the manager of Foursquare.

Many exhibitors are making special arrangements for the showing of the thirteenth and fourteenth episodes. The thirteenth episode, under the title of " The Reign of Terror," shows activities of Franz von Bopp, the imperial German Consul General in San Francisco. The recent conviction of Bopp for having fomented a rebellion in the British East Indies makes the picture so timely that capacity business is anticipated.

The fourteenth episode, " The Infantile Paralysis Epidemic," shows incidents in connection with the activities of imperial German spies in America, which raises a grave question as to whether the Kaiser's agents in this country should not be blamed for the various epidemics which have had such disastrous effects in the last three years.

Shipman Issues Warning

Ernest Shipman last week made the following announcement:

" Information has reached this office that certain parties are claiming the right to explain the Francis Ford Picture, entitled ' Berlin via America,' in certain territories, especially the states of New York and Pennsylvania.

" To avoid any possible misunderstanding and protect all parties concerned my office will publish in the trades papers a list of all bona fide buyers.

Territory not so listed is either only held under option or not sold, as no contract is bona fide until the final payments are made, and the prints delivered."

ERNEST SHIPMAN.

Canada Likes " Eagle's Eye "

Reports of the Foursquare-Superfeatures, Ltd. Exchanges which are handling " The Eagle's Eye," the twenty-episode serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America, by William J. Flynn, the recently retired chief of the United States Secret Service, indicate that the demands for the serial are extraordinary in Canada. Canadian exhibitors have seized upon the slogan of " Twenty reasons why America went to war " in connection with the picture and have found that it brings results anywhere in the Dominion, it is said by the company's officials.

Tourneur Sees Shorter Films

Thinks War Makes Them Preferable to Full Evening's Entertainment —Compares Features with Poetry and Short Stories

MAURICE TOURNEUR, the director who is now at work on his initial independent picture, "Sporting Life," which is to be a companion picture to "The Whip," believes that the world war is creating a trend towards shorter picture dramas.

"The movement, as I see it, is distinctly away from the full evening photoplay," declares Mr. Tourneur. "This is psychological in its cause. The world war, with its attendant excitement, sacrifices and worry, is playing upon the nervous system of the world. Whether we know or realize it, the war has keyed up our nerves to a high pitch. We are keenly restless, high strung, unable to concentrate for any length of time upon anything but the world's tragedy.

"This nervous reaction is reflecting itself in every walk of life. Short stories, requiring but fifteen minutes or so to read, were never so popular as now. Poetry, which is after all but the drama of life condensed into more or less beautiful particles, is tremendously popular, too. So it is coming to be with pictures.

"I am, of course, a steady patron of the film houses. It is part of my business to watch the progress of my fellow workers. I have come to note a marked unrest in audiences when a drama runs longer than six reels—or six thousand feet. Six reels requires about an hour and a half for adequate presentation.

Constance Binney Is One of Two Sisters to Appear In Maurice Tourner's "Sporting Life"

"I had a curious example of this nervous reaction presented to me the other night when I once again witnessed 'The Birth of a Nation.' This beautiful drama —a classic of the screen—did not seem overlong when first presented, but the audience of today reflects the war-time reaction. A man who sat just ahead of me remarked to a friend, 'It's beautiful, but just a little too long.'

"For my part, I do not intend to run my productions over six reels or seven at the very most, for the duration of the war. We must meet conditions as they are."

Inter-Ocean Agents for "Fulco" Product

PAUL H. CROMLIN, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, announces that Inter-Ocean has taken over the entire foreign distribution rights to the accessories and supplies made by the E. E. Fulton Company, Chicago, known as the "Fulco" line. In commenting upon the new arrangements, Mr. Cromlin said:

"While Inter-Ocean is best known as a film exporting house, through its exploitation of World, Paralta and other feature films in foreign territories, we have been exporting for the past year the Speer carbon. The results that were obtained with it made us decide to add a standard line of accessories and supplies, and we have been investigating the American manufacturing field for more than three months in an endeavor to secure a line that would best suit foreign requirements. This we finally concluded to be the 'Fulco,' and about two weeks ago our Mr. Eugene H. Kaufman spent several days with Mr. Fulton at the Chicago factory, following which contracts were signed.

"We are going into the foreign field with 'Fulco' gradually. We do not expect to throw the full line hurriedly into the full world market. At the beginning we will offer such 'Fulco' specialties as enclosed rewinds, bench rewinds, lugs, carbon savers and carbon adapters, and concentrate on their promotion. The Fulton business is about ten years old and is conducted by the founder, E. E. Fulton, in conjunction with his son, L. M. Fulton, who is superintendent of the factory. Mr. Kaufman, who managed our campaign for the Speer carbon, will be in charge of the 'Fulco" foreign sales drive. It is an odd fact that the day after our contract was signed with Mr. Fulton a small order for cement and tickets reached this office from Trinidad, and so the first 'Fulco'-Inter-Ocean sale was made without loss of time."

Inter-Ocean recently took over the entire office building known as 218 West 42d street.

Billy West-King-Bee Notes

Harry Hacker, traveling through Illinois, has closed with twenty-two exhibitors in that State for all the Billy West-King-Bee Comedies. Mr. Hacker was formerly with Triangle. This is his first trip on the road, and is proving a "live wire" for West Comedies.

Joe Zaretzky, city manager of the Bee-Hive Exchange in St. Louis, and assistant to Joe Levy, who has been in New York the past two weeks, writes that during Mr. Levy's absence he closed six new contracts on Billy West-King-Bee Comedies.

United Theatres Get Forces in Line

It was announced last week that with one or two exceptions the branch managers of United Picture Theatres of America are now installed in their own offices with the field forces fully organized, and booking days are being rapidly contracted for throughout the most populous sections from Boston and New York as far as Denver and Salt Lake City and from Minneapolis and Chicago down to New Orleans. The names and addresses of the local managers are as follows:

A. S. Abeles (eastern representative) and Aaron Corn, 1600 Broadway, New York; C. W. Bunn, 220 South State street, Chicago; Floyd Lewis, 2201 Olive street, St. Louis; Ernest H. Horstmann, 248 Boylston street, Boston; E. E. Erickson, 503 Renshaw Building, Pittsburgh; A. J. Gilligham, Empire Theatre Building, Detroit; D. F. O'Donnell, Chatham Courts, Washington, D. C.; N. I. Filkins, 324 Pearl street, Buffalo; C. C. Hite, Strand Theatre Building, Cincinnati; J. E. Schwartzbine, 447 Loeb Arcade, Minneapolis; C. E. Holah, First National Bank Building, Omaha; C. S. Edwards, Sr., (district manager) and C. S. Edwards, Jr., 1003 Commerce Building, Kansas City; K. A. Bugbee, 714 Poydras street, New Orleans; W. G. Underwood, 107 South St. Paul street, Dallas; C. R. Gilmour, Albany Hotel, Denver; I. P. Arnold, 30 Woodruff Apartments, Salt Lake City.

Schwerin Opens Own Exchange in Cleveland

Charles F. Schwerin, prominent Pittsburgh film man, has gone into the independent releasing field, and has opened his own state rights exchange in Cleveland, to be known as the Success Film Productions. Mr. Schwerin has already acquired the Ohio rights to "Nine-tenths of the Law" of which Mitchell Lewis is the star; the new edition of "The Spoilers" and "The Mask of Life."

Mr. Schwerin has a record of eight years in the film business. Five of those years were spent in the exhibiting end, and the remaining three, in the distributing branch. In Flushing, L. I., he conducted the Janice theatre. His exchange experience was acquired in Pittsburgh, where he has been connected with the World Film Corporation, Select Pictures, and most lately with the First National, from the management of which he recently resigned, in order to open his own exchange.

The Success Film Productions has taken space in 405 Sincere Building.

Jester Keeps June Release a Secret

A bit of mystery attaches as to what the title of the June release of the Jester Comedies will be. So far no announcement has been made as to what it will be called. The picture has been finished for some weeks, and just why the name has not been given cannot be said at this time.

Guess Big Bill Steiner has something up his sleeve.

W. H. Comedy Re-Issues Having Success

From advice received by W. H. Productions Company from exchanges throughout the country that are handling the twenty-eight Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies, these two-reel comedy subjects are meeting with success. The first five subjects have already been booked. The following is a list of the first twelve subjects:

"A Small Town Bully," featuring Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack Sennett and Owen Moore; "Friendly Enemies," featuring Sydney Chaplin and Chester Conklin; "His Diving Beauty," featuring Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Mack Swain; "A Polished Villain," featuring Al. St. John, Charles Arling and Mae Bush; "His Bitter Half," featuring Polly Moran and Charles Murray; "The Dynamiter," featuring Chester Conklin; "A Desperate Scoundrel," with Ford Sterling; "Soaked and Scorched," featuring Chester Conklin and Mack Swain; "A Farmyard Romeo," featuring Roscoe Arbuckle and Mabel Normand; "Looking Them Over," with Sydney Chaplin; "For Better or Worse," featuring Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling, and "The Hula-Hula Dance," featuring Charles Chaplin.

Sacks Books Series of West Comedies

Milton L. Cohen, general manager of the Bee-Hive Exchange selling the Billy West-King Bee comedies, has just closed a contract with Manager Sacks of the University theatre on Fordham road for all Billy West comedies starting Monday, May 11, with "The Scholar."

Twede-Dan Takes a Rest

Twede-Dan, featured in Jester Comedies, is taking a much needed rest. He is now four subjects ahead and feels that a little vacation will put him in shape to start on the last four comedies that will make up the first year's release of twelve.

Sherry Releases for Keeney

Former Distributes Latter's Productions in United States and Canada —First Picture Will Be "Romance of Underworld"

AN agreement has been effected between Frank A. Keeney, head of the Keeney Pictures Corporation, and William L. Sherry, formerly vice-president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and still one of its largest stockholders, whereby Mr. Sherry will be the sole distributor of the Keeney pictures for the United States and Canada. Mr. Sherry recently resigned as head of the purchasing department of the Paramount concern in order to carry out some large plans he had, including the distribution of the Keeney pictures.

The first release under the new agreement will be "A Romance of the Underworld." Applications for bookings are being addressed to Mr. Sherry at his temporary office, 501 Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue. The first release, which will be available to exhibitors in the very near future, is a screen adaptation of the drama of the same name by the late Paul Armstrong. It features Catherine Calvert, who was also featured in the play. She is supported by a cast including David Powell, Eugene O'Brien, Edwin Forsberg and Sybil Carmen.

The second release will be "Marriage," by Guy Bolton, one of the most successful of American playwrights. It is now complete except for the titles. The Keeney forces are working on a third picture which has not yet received its title. It is by E. Lloyd Sheldon, who wrote "The Forbidden Path" for Theda Bara.

"I am very optimistic over the outlook of the Keeney pictures," says Mr. Sherry, "because they are the kind of pictures the public likes. Their stories are wholesome and full of real heart-interest and the productions are in every detail artistic and accurate.

All three of the pictures star Miss Calvert. The Keeney productions are under the direction of James Kirkwood, one of the oldest directors in point of service.

Newman Arrives Safely Abroad

His Travel Series Will Be Issued as Usual Through Educational—Twenty-six More One-Reelers Coming

E. M. NEWMAN, the lecturer and producer of the Newman Travel Pictures, is now touring the Allied countries as a commissioner of the United States Government for the study of industrial and social conditions behind the battle lines. He sailed from an Atlantic port about two weeks ago, with the members of his staff and a flock of motion picture and still-life cameras.

News has been received of his safe arrival on the other side by Charles Mercer, Mr. Newman's representative at the offices of the Educational Films Corporation of America, 729 Seventh avenue, which releases his pictures in the United States.

During Mr. Newman's absence the Educational Films Corporation of America will continue to release his travel pictures. Four of them have already been issued: "The Forbidden Isle," "Our Hawaiian Army," "Tidbits of Travel" and "Our Egypt of the Southwest." There are twenty-six more one-reelers in the forthcoming series, representing the product of seventeen years of travel and exploration. In the course of that time the lecturer-photographer has been four times around the globe, visited almost every important city in the world, and explored some of its remotest wilds and recesses, accompanying the Roosevelt hunting expedition to East Africa and going up the crests of the Himalayas in the ascent of Mount Kinchinjunga with the Duke of the Abruzzi.

Gaumont and Graphic Ship for Convenience

The two independent news-reels, the Gaumont News and Graphic, are printed and shipped on Tuesdays and Fridays, and are ready for release as soon as they are received by the exchanges. This enables the exhibitor to be certain that he is showing only live news topics on his screen.

The current issues of these news-reels are said to be filled almost to overflowing with well photographed news events from all parts of the United States, South America and Europe.

Gaumont Graphic No. 6 has a baker's dozen of subjects. Perhaps the most interesting is that showing the fighting aeroplanes and some of the most prominent of the French "Aces," including Adjutant Garaud, a mere boy in appearance, who has twelve air victories to his credit, and Lieutenant Madon, who has brought down twenty-six German flyers.

Frank Hall Looks for Another Picture

With the completion of all preparations for the immediate release of the two new U. S. Exhiibtors' Booking Corporation productions, "Men" and "The Crucible of Life," Frank Hall is again keeping his committee of selection busy with a view to finding, at the earliest possible moment, another picture that measures up to his special production standards.

W. H. Official Defends Market Condition

IN commenting upon an article in the trade papers during the past week, from a prominent state rights producer, to the effect that the state rights market is becoming of less importance, an official of W. H. Productions Company made the following statement:

"The point emphasized was that the State Rights buyers were not anxious to acquire the rights to independent productions on account of the fact that they could not be booked in a majority of the first-run houses. This is true to a certain extent. However, the independent market is in just as healthy a condition to-day as it ever was, but there is a difference in the market valuation of features exploited independently.

"Although the great number of the first-run houses are practically tied up, as this producer states, still a State Rights buyer will invest his money now as before in exceptional special features, because the majority of the first-run houses will lay their regular feature on the shelf as soon as they realize they can secure an exceptional box-office feature to take its place. A production of this nature still retains its high value on the market, and can be readily disposed of, not only to the State Rights buyer, but also from the State Rights buyer to the exhibitor, the method of exploitation, of course, being taken into consideration.

"On the other hand, a fair or average production released independently can also be sold to State Rights buyer provided the price for the Rights is gauged according to the possible revenue a State Rights man can take in, allowing a fair profit on same.

"There are, therefore, these two distinct types of productions that can be sold easily and quickly on the State Rights market to-day, for the reasons above mentioned. But if a producer has only a fair picture and places a prohibitive price for the Rights to the various territories on same, he realizes very soon that there is no demand for the production, and consequently he blames the condition of the State Rights market.

"W. H. Productions Company have been in business since December, and have disposed of practically their present output on a cash basis to State Rights buyers—a million dollars' worth of cash business during this time, through the independent market. We have sold the entire country on all of the Wm. S. Hart reissues, the series of 28 two-reel Mack Sennett-Keystone Comedies, most of the country on the Bessie Barriscale Series and the Shorty Hamiltons, and upon deciding to release the series of 26 one and two-reel Charlie Chaplins, about two weeks ago, before being able to place our advertising matter, we have been able during this short period of time, by sending wires to the various State Rights buyers throughout the country, to dispose of practically the entire country on this series of Chaplins. This is the most remarkable sales record ever made in the history of film industry. And, in fact, all of our business was done without the solicitation of salesmen, which we attribute to the fact that we have made it a point to buy productions that are, without a question, box-office successes, good stories with prominent stars, so that we can satisfy not only the clamor for stars on behalf of the public, but at the same time give them quality productions that back up these stars. For instance, our Wm. S. Hart features with Wm. S. Hart as a star, our Barriscale features with Bessie Barriscale as star, Keystones and Chaplins with the great number of stars appearing in them have proven themselves of double value. We have been able to sell them to the exchanges, exhibitors and to the public on the strength of the names of the stars, and because of the success of our first releases we have been able to resell rapidly to the same exchanges, exhibitors and public other subjects of equal value.

"We are fortunately blessed with being able to pick box-office pictures. We buy with the thought of disposition, at the same time buying only those productions which we know the various exchanges and exhibitors will want and will buy because the public will buy from them. In addition to this we have given these productions an entire new dress, being reedited, retitled and reconstructed, and exploited with the most thorough advertising and service helps that it is possible to give any motion picture. Every one of the various exchanges throughout the country that are handling W. H. Produuctions Company's output have been obliged to order additional prints on nearly all of the various subjects, due to the successful showings to date.

"Mr. Leon Netter, general manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Cleveland, Ohio, who control the three big Harts for Ohio, states as follows: 'We have been surprisingly pleased at the phenomenal success of these subjects in this territory. Not only have we already booked the majority of theatres on the three Hart features, but a number of the exhibitors have taken return dates. W. H. Productions Company are to be complimented not only for releasing these subjects, but for the magnificent advertising campaign gotten up to help the exchange man and exhibitor to put them over.'

"The Wisconsin Film Corporations states: 'We have released Wm. S. Hart in "The Hell Hound of Alaska," the third of W. H. Productions Company. Hart super-features here in Milwaukee last Sunday at the Princess theatre, and this picture has broken all records without exception, whatsoever. It was a complete turnaway from 11 A.M to 10 P. M. In fact, the business done at this theatre on Sunday, so Mr. Cook informs us, was the greatest he has ever seen in any theatre in the city of Milwaukee.'

"Mr. Harry Siegel, general manager of the Globe Feature Film Company, states: 'W. H. Productions Company three Hart super-features are booked solidly for a long time to come. The Gordeon-Olympic Circuit of theatres have been booked on all of these subjects, having already played the first two which broke all Hart records in these theatres. For the first time in the history of our exchange we have been able to book almost 75 per cent. of the live exhibitors in New England on these Hart features without soliciting the business by salesmen. The advertising matter brought this business in. We are also meeting with exceptional success in booking the series of 28 Mack Sennett-Keystone Comedies released by W. H., and the first Bessie Barriscale feature, "Satan's Pawn," from the present outlook will also be a winner.'

"Mr. W. E. Drummond, president and general manager of the Special Features Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., who control a number of W. H. subjects for the South, upon a visit to New York during the past week purchased the Rights to the 28 Mack Sennett-Keystone Comedies and the 26 one and two-reel Charlie Chaplins. He advised that he made this purchase because of the fact that his W. H. Production-Hart features have met with more success than any other features he has released through his exchange, so that he felt this additional output would be just the proper thing to maintain a high standard for his exchange, and give the exhibitors in the South good box-office pictures for the summer season.

"This is also the case of Mr. Frank Zambreno, president of the Unity Photoplays Company, of Chicago, who control the big Hart Super-features for this territory. Mr. Zambreno purchased the Rights to the 28 Mack Sennett-Keystone Comedies, the 26 one and two-reel Charlie Chaplins and the series of Bessie Barriscale for the same territory, realizing that this product would help him materially in giving his customers good box-office pictures for the summer months.

"Magnet Film Exchange, who control the entire W. H. Productions' output for the New York territory, advises that business on these subjects is materially increasing each day, and that from the present outlook their product will enable a great many of the smaller exhibitors throughout Greater New York to keep their theatres open during the summer months, owing to the fact that these pictures have box-office drawing power and that the rental prices are fair and reasonable.

"W. H. Productions Company attribute the success of their output with these exchanges and with the exhibitors throughout the country to the fact that not only have the pictures been put out properly, but that the advertising matter was of a practical nature which enabled the exhibitors to display the productions to the best advantage of themselves and thus secure maximum returns and profits on their investment. And these W. H. Productions Company subjects, no doubt, will be the means of a great number of exhibitors throughout the country keeping their theatres filled during the hot summer months."

W. H. Buys More Rights

W. H. Productions Co. have acquired the foreign rights to two features for this market, viz., "Carmen of the Klondike," which is now being exploited in this country, and the special Triangle comedy, "The Siren in the House," starring Olive Thomas.

A number of territories have already been disposed of on "Carmen of the Klondike," it is said.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Educational Makes Series of Navy Subjects

Educational Films Corporation of America will release a series of subjects titled "Your Fighting Navy at Work and Play." The pictures, which have been completed, are now being titled with the co-operation of Lieutenant Henry Reuterdahl of the U. S. N. Mr. Reuterdahl is not only a celebrated marine artist, but also one of the foremost experts on the strength, resources and offensive power of the world's navies.

The aim of the pictures is to show the ships and the service as they are today, keyed up to the highest efficiency in the struggle with the submarine. The series will be different from a set of peace-time Navy pictures, for every form of fighting activity is illustrated: the guns at work, the battle evolutions of the fleet, the work of the submarines and destroyers, the firing of torpedoes and the building up of smoke screens. Other units of the series will illustrate the life of the bluejacket both afloat and ashore.

Secretary Daniels has written to the maker of the pictures, congratulating him on the fine results that have ben achieved.

Backer Gets Hadley's First Cinema-Symphony

George Backer has taken over the controlling interest in Hopp Hadley's "Cinema-Symphony," according to an announcement made by Mr. Hadley this week. Mr. Backer is associated with Foursquare Pictures and Bacon-Backer Film Company.

"The Lost Chord," Sir Arthur Sullivan's composition, is the subject for Mr. Hadley first cinema-symphony, and the symphonic arrangements are under the supervision of Sol Levy, and M. Winkler. The picture accompaniment is in five reels, and will be released through Foursquare exchanges.

Mr. Backer expressed his opinion that exhibitors will welcome this new innovation. "Exhibitors will welcome every chance," he said, "to let their patrons know of the standing of the musicians in the motion picture theatre. Many of the leading organists, pianists and orchestra leaders of the profession, are now engaged in guiding the destinies of the theatres' musical programs. In view of this, Mr. Hadley's innovation should be received with a welcome."

Webster Shows Broadway White Lights

Confining itself to the gay night life of Broadway, "The Devil's Playground" is said to be unique, in that its characters are all prosperous men and women, respected in their several communities, while the dark side of life, with its underworld characters, has no place in the drama.

Harry McRae Webster, who directed the production, and also collaborated with Dallas Tyler, in the writing of the story, saw in the gay life of the wealthy who flock to Broadway from all parts of the world, an excellent opportunity for a strong drama with exceptional spectacular features.

Vera Michelena, who stars in the Webster productions, is surrounded by a cast including Harry Springler, William H. Tooker, George S. Trimble, Robert Cummings and Lillian Cook.

"Triumph of Venus" Comes Shortly

Arrangements are now being completed for the release of "The Triumph of Venus" in New York, Atlanta and Boston at an early date, following which formal openings will be held in other large cities. Exhibitors in these three cities who have booked the film are said to be making elaborate arrangements for the presentation of the mythological story, with its swimming scenes that are said to challenge anything ever performed in the way of stunts for the screen.

The chief swimmer is Phyllis Beveridge, who is also cast as the goddess Diana. Wm. Sherwood is also one of the chief performers, his floating down a series of waterfalls while simulating death, being something never before recorded, it is claimed.

American Standard Takes New Offices

The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation announces that it has taken the entire third floor of the Leavitt Building, 126 West 46th street, New York. A projection room is included in the company's new facilities.

"Unchastened Woman" Now Ready for Sale

So many are the inquiries from throughout the country and so pressing the demands for an early release of "The Unchastened Woman," the Rialto-De Luxe production adapted to the screen from Oliver Morosco's play, that it has been decided to initiate the territorial selling without further delay.

Grace Valentine, who is starred in "The Unchastened Woman," will be seen throughout the country in one of Morosco's plays on the spoken stage during the summer and early fall, and it may be that the fact of exploiting the double publicity that her name will bring may perhaps have been in some respects the cause of the demand for an early release.

The success attained by the last pictures that Miss Valentine was featured in, which pictures were released in respective territories about the time that she filled the dates on the spoken stage in San Francisco, Los Angeles, the largest cities of the Mountain West, culminating her tour in Chicago, is bound to be increased manifold, for "The Unchastened Woman" has been considered by critics and the theatre-going public a dramatic hit.

Seldom if ever has an actress had the opportunity of being able to find out what people think of her when she simultaneously appears in diametrically opposite roles, for while in "Lombardi, Ltd.," Oliver Morosco's comedy in which Grace Valentine will tour the country, she presents the light and frivolous comedy work in "The Unchastened Woman," she is called upon to present some of the most difficult situations that are demanded from artistry.

" The Triumph of the Weak "

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Samuel D. Palmer

VITAGRAPH has a good box office attraction in "The Triumph of the Weak," a five-reel Blue Ribbon Feature from the pen of Edith Ellis. It abounds in heart interest, on the side of the pathetic, at any rate. Indeed, its pathos is its outstanding characteristic. There is not a line of humor in it. A young woman has stolen to keep her baby from starving and the picture's opening finds her in prison, finishing the third year of a five-year sentence. Released on parole she marries, only to struggle, through three and a half reels of film, to keep the story of her past from her husband and to elude the officers of the law who are seeking her for violating the terms of her parole by kidnapping her own child from an orphanage. Not a very pleasing story for the discriminating critic of modern picture plays, but nevertheless just the kind of thing Mrs. Average Picturegoer and her daughter still like to see.

As the heroine, Alice Joyce has a part which gives full play to her appealing style of acting. The role is calculated to draw the pitying sympathy of the audience and Miss Joyce, as might be expected, draws it with every look and every move. Her leading man, Walter McGrail, gives the finished performance of which he is capable and Eulalie Jensen handles the difficult role of a chronic offender against society who has done time and ought still be doing it, with true artistry. Tom Terriss directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Edith (Alice Joyce), a young widow, has stolen a ring from a jeweler in order to buy milk for her baby and finds herself in prison for a five-year term. At the end of three years she is paroled and by the terms of the parole she must leave her boy in the orphanage for the remaining two years. She kidnaps the child and finds employment in another city. There she meets Jim Roberts (Walter McGrail) and they marry. In the meantime Mabel (Eulalie Jensen), a former fellow prisoner, has found her and endeavors to get her to lead a wicked life. Edith gives her refuge in her house and Mabel, threatening to tell her husband of her past, prevails upon her to steal a large sum of money from him. She is caught in the act by her husband and his friend, Robert Jordan (Templar Saxe), a detective who has recognized her as the ex-convict who broke her parole. Edith's story is then told to Jim for the first time and although she wins his forgiveness she insists on going back to serve out the balance of her sentence, holding that they can never have true happiness until her crime is fully expiated according to law. When she has done this the long-withheld happiness arrives.

" Confession "

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

OPINIONS differ as to the best photodramatist in the field today but certainly no one can deny the fact that S. A. Franklin is right up at the top. His pictures have always been noted for their strength and "Confession," which he wrote and directed, is the most gripping picture the writer has seen in many a day, week or month. It will be plain to the man who sees films day in and day out that it is cut from conventional material. Its hero, convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence—the attempts of his wife and her father to prove his innocence, and the last-minute rush for the governor's pardon. It was of such stuff that many a popular, but no less frightful melodrama, was made in the past. And yet the manner in which Mr. Franklin has handled his material in "Confession," the many touches he has introduced, and the excellent work he has drawn out from the members of the cast soon makes one forget the age of the skeleton upon which he hangs his picture. He carries the spectator up to a state of emotional intensity that only a truly great director can produce. He makes him feel the suffering of his heroine and sit in constant suspense for the ultimate safety of her husband. And when, after all, her efforts to free her husband are not productive of the desired results, when the governor receives news over the 'phone that his order to stay the execution has come too late there is a moment of breathless suspense, before it is revealed that the action was a dream. This is a real surprise and not an illogical one as most screen dreams are.

Even the court-room scene has been handled to dramatic advantage . The close-up is handled so that its full power is felt. There is a particularly powerful stretch of action during the night when Mary believes the trap set for the real murderer has failed to catch the victim. The desperate despair of the woman is brought out by the actress, Jewel Carmen, with terrific force. Miss Carmen never before has acted with the skill she shows in "Confession." Her Mary is one of the best done characters the screen has ever brought forth. Mr. Franklin has brought the whole cast up to the exceedingly high pace set by the star. L. C. Shumway as the hero, Fred Warren as the father, and Jack Brammall as the hotel clerk have prominent roles, and Charles Gorman as the detective and Andrew Arbuckle as the governor do smaller parts in the same excellent style.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

After their marriage Mary (Jewel Carmen) and Bob Anderson (L. C. Shumway) beat a retreat from the wedding guests and depart for a country hotel. On the road crooks hold up their automobile and rob the honeymooners of all their valuables, including Mary's wedding ring. Arrived at the hotel the clerk (Jack Brammall) refuses to give them a room because they have no luggage. They are allowed to occupy the public parlor for the night. Just before dawn Bob stirs himself, and goes out on the piazza for a smoke. A woman's screams attract his attention. Rushing to the room from whence they came he finds a woman lying on the floor murdered. He picks up the knife, and when the clerk arrives is instantly blamed for the crime. He is arrested, tried and convicted of murder in the first degree. With her father (Fred Warren) Mary follows out the only clue which might lead to a proof of Bob's innocence. More hotel robberies are reported. Mary and her father together with a detective (Charles Gorman) return to the hotel. Mary is extravagantly dressed and loaded with jewels. With only seventy-two hours left before the hour set for Bob's execution, they breathlessly wait for the hotel crook to attempt to rob them. On the second night he appears and proves to be the clerk. Under the third degree he breaks down and confesses the murder. The governor (Andrew Arbuckle) is sought at the last minute. He calls the warden, but it is too late, Bob has been executed. Mary faints and is carried to a couch.

Then, in the parlor of the hotel, she awakes. Bob is asleep beside her. She slowly realizes that she has dreamed it all. Then her father arrives with the clerk to set matters aright for the honeymooners.

" The Mysterious Client "

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE MYSTERIOUS CLIENT," starring Mrs. Vernon Castle, is another mystery story, differing, however, from her previous pictures in that a comedy denouement supersedes the usual revelation that tails the mystery picture. The greater part of the five reels deal with the mystery and there would be almost too much of it if it were not for the vein of comedy that alternates with the mysterious action. This is supplied by the character of Tony Cavallo, an Italian who aspires to be a second Sherlock Holmes. His amateur enthusiasm and blundering tactics and his exaggerated recounting of his activities to his friends produce a steady supply of comedy. Caesar Gravina, in this role, registers a distinct success.

For the rest it may be said that Charles Dazey's story, from which the picture was produced, makes mystifying entertainment of a pronounced sort. There is a small amount of sustaining interest, but the adapter, Roy Somerville, by the introduction of the comedy note has made the absence of this quality felt only slightly. Mrs. Castle is always on the go as Jeanne Darcey, the mysterious client, and Milton Sills as hero, and Warner Oland in the other prominent role, complete the same trio of players that brought so much popular success to the serial, "Patria."

The direction by Fred Wright and the photographic work is well up to the exceedingly high standard always set in these two departments by the Astra producing forces.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Harry Nelson (Milton Sills), a lawyer with no clients, sits reading his bills one day when a gentleman giving the name of Boris Norjunov (Warner Oland), enters and offers him a fat bank roll to do a crooked piece of work. Harry refuses. A few minutes' later Jeanne Darcey (Irene Castle) enters hastily, and begs Harry to guard her, and a certain paper until the villains stop pursuing her. Harry agrees, and leaves the building with her. At the entrance he is knocked down and the paper stolen by a man previously seen with Boris. There follows a most harrowing time for Harry. He is cast in the power of Boris, and what is his surprise to discover Jeanne as one of his captors. She, however, seems to serve Boris through fear. Tony Cavallo (Caesar Gravina), proprietor of an Italian restaurant, who entertains ambitions to become a detective, gets a clue as to Harry's whereabouts, and starts to follow it up. This only leads him into all sorts of trouble from which he has difficulty extricating himself. At last he appeals to a private detective agency for assistance. They decide to take a chance and accompany him to the mysterious house. When, however, Boris and Jeanne are confronted with this serious menace, they give their game away. Boris is none other than Jeanne's father, in league with her to discover whether there was a chivalrous gentleman left on the earth. They selected Harry to experiment on, and needless to add he fulfilled all requirements.

"Her Decision"

THIS is a really pathetic story depicting the self-sacrifice of a hard-working girl for her flighty, wayward selfish sister who thinks more of finery and a good time than anything else, only in the end to realize her betrayal and believe suicide to be the only way out of her dilemma. It is a picture that carries its lesson and points its moral.

A really refreshing feature of the picture is the pure action of the girl's employer, who learning of the sister's betrayal, advances a sum of money that she may be sent away to recuperate.

The story is by Lotta Gannet, and was directed by Jack Conway, who has certainly put some pretty turns to the work.

Gloria Swanson in the chief role registers emotion, sadness and sympathy with equal readiness, while Ann Kroman as the wayward sister is equally convincing and interesting.

The photoplay is good throughout, and especially so is this the case with the old country mansion at Delaware Gap, where both exteriors and interiors are striking examples of the cameraman's art.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Phyllis Dunbar (Gloria Swanson), Martin Rankin's (J. Barney Sherry) secretary, is in love with Bobbie Warner (Darrel Foss). Rankin loves her, proposes marriage, and is regretfully refused.

Phyllis' younger sister, Inah (Ann Kroman), becomes involved with rich Billie Dexter and attempts suicide. Phyllis persuades her to give up the attempt and promises to obtain money to send her away.

Bobbie Warner refuses Phyllis a loan that she begs him to make her. She therefore offers to marry Rankin if he will let her have the money to send Inah away. Rankin offers to help her without marriage. Phyllis refuses his help without marriage, frankly confessing that she does not love him. Rankin agrees to the marriage.

The two live like pals rather than a married couple. Phyllis still bears a strong love for Bobbie Warner. Finally she asks her husband's permission to seek out Warner with the purpose of finding out whether she cares for him as deeply as ever. Rankin gives his consent. Phyllis finds Warner intoxicated and repulsive. Her love is killed. She returns to Rankin and declares, "Now I have found my real love." Incidentally, at the same time Billy Dexter has become conscience stricken, and marries Inah.

"Moonshine"

(Paramount-Arbuckle—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THERE is much in this two-reel burlesque of the once popular moonshiner picture to amuse. Fatty Arbuckle and Buster Keaton as detectives arrive in the mountains and attempt to apprehend the band of moonshiners headed by Al St. John and in which Alice Lake thrives. There are a number of good gags while the comedy of Fatty and the athletic funny business of his two supporting principals is excellent. The first reel is all that a comedy should be. It has originality, a plentiful supply of gags which bespeak the inventive genius of Arbuckle and his partners-in-fun, and is so obviously a burlesque of the old moonshine picture that it registers with every scene. The second reel slows up to a certain extent but no one can complain that it is the least bit tiresome.

BILLIE RHODES as Mary the irrepressible has been cast in many ludicrous comedy characters, but as the minister's daughter she is the limit. What with climbing over a ten-foot wall, drowning the members of a house party at the rectory with a garden hose and then being arrested with her sweetheart for speeding in his auto, she certainly shows herself capable of taking any kind of a risk, not quite in conformity with the decorum expected of a minister's daughter. But this single-reeler is full of ginger and will delight any but the most decorous of sober-sided audiences.

"$5,000 Reward"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

HERE is an interesting murder-mystery picture with Franklyn Farnum as the wrongly-accused party who becomes a fugitive from justice rather than risk the verdict of twelve good men and true. It is a picture that contains an amount of rapid action and a plentiful supply of sustaining interest due to the fact that the identity of the murderer is carefully concealed until the climax. The author has thrown suspicion on another character who might well be the guilty party and in this way has built up the interest and carried his story through to a successful conclusion.

The story, which is by Charles Wesley Sanders, first appeared in the All-Story Magazine under the title of "My Arcadian Wife" and was converted into scenario form by F. McGrew Willis, a screen writer who is well acquainted with the possibilities of his medium of expression and who has a thorough knowledge of picture values. Douglas Gerrard directed and has adequately realized the comparative values in the script. The locations and settings are appropriate and the photographic work of a high order.

Farnum is supported by Gloria Hope as the heroine, Wharton Jones as heavy and J. Farrell MacDonald in a character part. The performances of these players and the remaining members of the cast are quite satisfactory.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

After a quarrel with his uncle (William Lloyd), Dick Arlington (Franklyn Farnum) decides to leave his house. When he comes from his room he discovers the old man murdered. Dick's revolver lies by his side. He picks it up and is standing with it in his hand when Norcross (J. Farrell MacDonald), secretary to the murdered man appears. He believes Dick guilty. The police are called and Dick seeing that the evidence looks bad for him, beats a hasty retreat and hops a freight. Out in the country he stops the runaway horse of Margaret Hammersley (Gloria Hope). He is injured and is cared for by Margaret at her father's house. Ackley (Frank Brownlee), one of her local admirers, becomes jealous. He attempts to embrace Margaret and is knocked down by Dick. Furious, Ackley calls the sheriff, who recognizes him as the supposed murderer. Again Dick makes his escape and Margaret elects to go with him, soon afterward becoming his wife. Dick imparts information regarding his whereabouts to Tracy (Wharton Jones), his lawyer. Norcross, after an interview with Margaret, kidnaps Dick and holds him captive. Meanwhile Margaret entertains Tracy, telling him she only married Dick for his money and that she hopes he will be convicted when at last caught. Tracy falls into the trap and confesses killing Arlington when afraid that he would turn him over to the police for misappropriation of funds. This accomplished, Norcross reveals himself as a private detective before the astonished Dick.

"Peg of the Pirates"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS is a costume picture of pirates bold and of a young lady who quite mastered the villainous band until her lover came to the rescue. It has a supply of comedy, pieces of melodrama and considerable sentiment. Peggy Hyland is an attractive Peg and the old-fashioned gown she wears for the greater part of the film is a pretty setting for a pretty face. However, the author of "Peg of the Pirates" has introduced some touches that are neither romantic nor adventurous but foolish. Some of his work reminds one of a cup of coffee so heavily sugared that it is a sticky syrup. Perhaps, though, the coffee wouldn't have filled the cup by itself. Something had to be added to give a full portion. Sugar was used instead of cream—or even milk.

O. A. C. Lund gave the picture a production rich in atmosphere of bygone days. The pirate crew with Captain Bones and his hooked arm might have stepped from the deck of a real outlaw ship—or from "Peter Pan." The ships used create an atmosphere of complete illusion. The fight between the pirate crew and the rescuing party is done effectively. Some of the lighting is poor. Bars and light and shadow often cross the players' faces. Sidney Mason as the poet-hero gives a suitable performance. Frank Evans is Captain Bones and Carleton Macey, James Davis and Wally Walheim make up a good supporting cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sir Wynham Martyn (Carleton Macy) of the Carolina territory gives a betrothal party for his daughter Peg (Peggy Hyland). He plans marrying her to the rather ancient Mr. Arthur Elliott (James Davis) whereas Peg is deeply in love with a poor poet, Terry (Sidney Mason). Pirates break up the reception and carry Peg off a captive. Captain Bones (Frank Evans) considers her his special prey. The pirate mate (Wally Walheim) resents the disorder into which Peg throws the ship and is ever desirous of killing her. When her plight grows dangerous Peg feigns death. She is carried ashore and is about to be buried when she fools the pirates into believing that she is her own ghost. All goes well for a time until the mate discovers her deception. Things begin to get serious when Peg finds herself again a prisoner on the pirate craft. Terry, however, has come to her rescue in another vessel and after a fight the pirates are beaten. Safely home, the marriage of Peg and Terry is sanctioned by Sir Wynham.

" Wolves of the Border "

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

FOR plenty of pep and ginger and wild border life this picture can scarcely be beaten; and as a pretty little love affair is neatly interwoven it should prove an acceptable offering where Western stuff is appreciated.

The whole story is based on the jealousy of a ranch foreman, Pete Wright, who stops at nothing to prove in the eyes of his boss Joe Warner that the newcomer George Merritt is a cattle rustler and general crook. On these terms, then, one may readily see how numerous are the angles of the game open to the wily conspirator. None of these chances has, however, been overlooked in the production, and Jack Curtis as Pete Wright renders a good account of himself. Josie Sedgwick, as Ruth Warner the ranchman's daughter, always suspicious of her father's foreman and in love with the alleged "interloper," has ample opportunities to play the sweet, demure countryside girl. This she does very nicely, and on the other hand, when it comes to a rough and tumble game of catch as catch can with the foreman, she—well, she shows up far too well for such a frail girl with a burly ruffian.

Louis Durham as the Mexican bandit chief, Jose Mardones, makes up well for the part and acquits himself just as well.

The locations for the film have been selected with a fine regard for the theme, and the wild, craggy, mountainous scenery is realistic to a degree, and all are beautifully photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Joe Warner (Frank MacQuarrie) is a ranchman of the old type, honest to a fault, and with a keen dislike of such new-fangled notions as irrigation. His new neighbor, George Merritt, has up-to-date ideas and proceeds to put them into effect. Incidentally, he has his eye on Warner's daughter. Pete Wright, Warner's foreman, is in league with a Mexican bandit, and is helping drive Warner's cattle over the line and accusing Merritt of same. When, however, the Mexican band decide upon a raid on Warner's ranch on a larger scale, Pete makes old man Warner believe that Merritt is the malefactor. A stirring battle takes place, in the course of which Ruth is captured by Pete and carried off to the Mexican camp, only to be rescued by Merritt. The result is that Merritt is acknowledged a white man and Pete a scoundrel, and there it ends with Merritt and Ruth married and Pete fired.

THIS picture the central character of which is the son of an English exile, falsely accused of cheating at cards and for ever disgraced, who returns to avenge his father, has a plentiful supply of incident and with the varied scenes it offers should prove averagely interesting. It is not the acceptable photoplay when one enters upon technicalities. There is too much stress laid on minor action, and there are twists in the plot which are obviously artificial and introduced by way of convenient situations. "Vengeance" is, however, lavishly produced and is possessed of a realistic atmosphere of far-eastern India when the action shifts from England.

Montagu Love as the apostle of vengeance, the son of an English father and an Indian mother, plays impressively. Barbara Castleton, co-starred, does well in a role that is only slightly removed from a hit. Louise Vale puts life and appeal into the part of Nan, the escaped slave girl. Madge Evans and George MacQuarrie complete the named class. Travers Vale directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Cuddlestone (Montagu Love) falsely accused of cheating at cards by his brother Andrew, is turned from home by his father. Disgraced he journeys to India, where he takes a native wife (Lila Chester).

Years later Lorin (Montagu Love), John's son, about to enter the Buddhist church as a priest, learns of the wrong done his father, now dead, and determines to avenge him. He goes to England accompanied by Nan (Louise Vale), once an Eurasian slave girl, who is deeply in love with him. To obtain money for her passage and living expenses she steals jewels from the Buddhist statue, including its sacred eye. In England Lorin sets up as a Swami, and soon obtains entree into the best society. He is admitted to Andrew's club, and soon manages to show him up as a card cheat. When he goes to Andrew's home to demand payment of his debts which he has bought up, he again meets Lady Elsie (Barbara Castleton), Andrew's ward, who roundly upbraids him for his treatment of Andrew. Desiring to set himself right in her eyes he tells her the whole story. Andrew dies from the shock of it. When Lorin returns to his quarters he finds several of the Buddhist faith there to accuse him of stealing the valuable eye of the statue. Nan has pawned this for their living expenses. Lorin is given until dawn to produce the jewel. When Nan goes for it, the broker is nowhere to be found. He only returns in the nick of time and produces the jewel. His father avenged, Lorin returns to India with Nan as his wife.

" Men "

BACON-BACKER'S first venture in the producing field of the picture industry is represented by a screen version of Harry S. Sheldon's stage play, "Men," produced under the direction of Perry R. Vekroff, with Anna Lehr, Charlotte Walker and Bradley Barker in the stellar roles. The story tells of how environment affects the lives of two sisters—one reared in humble circumstances, the other nursed in the lap of luxury. The story considered as a whole, is a good subject for screen adaptation, and has been reroduced by Perry Vekroff faithfully. There are one or two situations, especially the one at the opening of the play where the mother gives up her child and promises never to make an effort to see or communicate with her, which are a bit far-fetched. In general, "Men" resents a good story, and its principal characters have been faithfully presented by a competent cast.

The principal appeal in this picture is its heart interest. Throughout the run, the human element stands out on the surface, and these touches, representing the human tragedies in the lives of the humbler classes and the superficiality in the lives of the rich, make this production a subject for the review and entertainment of all. The action moves in logical sequence, and, although the climax reveals the much-abused scene of the mother rushing up the aisle of the church and preventing the wedding ceremony, at the last minute, there are so many good points about this offering, that the minor defects, will pass by, without detracting an appreciable interest from the main body of the presentment.

The author's main situation in developing the plot of his story, is rich in possibilities, and Director Vekroff has not missed a single, advantageous angle. He has played up the heart-interest element and toned to proper coloring the situations which might have risen to heights of the risque in other hands. "Men" is a clean, straightforward, recital for screen presentation. It represents an offering which both the small-town and big-town exhibitor can book and cash a good percentage at the box-office.

Anna Lehr is easily the star of the picture. Her work is one of the high lights of the production. Charlotte Walker is not prominently casted. The little she does is done with appreciation. Gertrude McCoy overacts in many of the scenes calling for emo-

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mrs. Burton (Charlotte Walker) and her two little daughters live in humble circumstances. Mr. Fairbanks (William Tooker) and Mrs. Fairbanks (Wilette Kershaw) are of the wealthy class. Fairbanks is advised by the family physician that unless a child can be secured for Mrs. Fairbanks, the reason which has failed her through disappointment of her hope for offspring, cannot be restored. Mrs. Burton is approached, and consents to give one of her little daughters up and promises never to see or seek out the child after she parts with it.

Years later when the sisters are grown, the one, Laura Burton (Anna Lehr), living in humble circumstances with her mother, and the other, Alice Fairbanks (Gertrude McCoy), Roger Hamilton (Robert Cain) comes into their lives. He is the only son of a wealthy and vain mother (Ida Darling). Hamilton meets Laura, the poorer sister, while she is posing for Anthony Gerard (Bradley Barker), an artist. Later he is persuaded by his mother to win the hand of Alice, the wealthy sister. Neither sister know of the existence of the other. Tom Courtney (Huntley Gordon), a young engineer, is in love with Alice, and she tells him that she is going to marry Hamilton. She really loves Courtney, but decides in favor of Hamilton. Hamilton has promised to Marry Laura, and when he tells her that he is going to marry another, she reveals to her mother, the circumstances of her relations with Hamilton. Hamilton and Alice are to be married. Mrs. Burton goes to the church, and tells her daughter's secret. The ceremony is stopped, the sisters are united and married to the men they love.

Three Sennett Comedy Reissues

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THE first three of the series of Sennett-produced comedy reissues by W. H. Productions were shown for review last week, and if they can be accepted as criterions for the balance of the series, no one of the series will prove a disappointment: "His Diving Beauty," with Fatty Arbuckle, Mabel Normand and Mack Swain (some cast); "Soaked and Scorched," with Chester Conklin and Mack Swain, and "A Desperate Scoundrel," featuring Ford Sterling. These comedies are shown in two reels each, and each contains a bunch of laughs and some clever slapstick comedy.

The first named is the best bet for obvious reasons. It has strong advertising possibilities, as it shows three of the leading slapstick and straight comedians working before the camera. Fatty, Mabel and Mack turn some clever stunts. The action of the comedy is laid along one of the beaches on the California coast, presumably near Los Angeles.

"Soaked and Scorched" reveals some of the old-time slapstick variety, with Chester Conklin and Mack Swain dividing honors. It is a good laugh producer and full of action from the start.

"A Desperate Scoundrel" revives one of Ford Sterling's best works in the slapstick field. His adventures in a steam laundry provide a laugh-a-minute. All three are good bets and all three will be welcomed as the one best bet in the "filler" line.

"Pershing's Crusaders"

(Government War Film—Eight Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THE film division, Committee on Public Information, Government War propaganda, has assembled eight reels of the most interesting war film yet seen on the screen. Every branch of the Government's activities in the war has been covered by the camera, and there are numerous scenes showing action in the first-line trenches in France. "Pershing's Crusaders" is the title of the picture, and it presents a series of pictures of the utmost interest to an American audience.

The photography is not always the best, and the print shown for review gave evidence of poor laboratory work. But this is trifling, compared to the subject matter behind it all. Training camps, industrial branches, activities in the aviation camps, ship yards, action in the first-line trenches, the Kaiser reviewing German troops, doing the "goose step," President Wilson in a number of poses, General Pershing and Secretary of War Baker in France—in short, everything of interest in the Government's preparations and actual activities in defeating the Kaiser—is shown in this most interesting Government picture.

It is eight reels in length, but the American audiences will wish for eight more like them, after the final flash has crossed the screen.

State Rights Distributors, Inc., to Meet

SOL L. LESSER, president of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., has called a meeting of the members and directors of this independent organization, to convene in New York on May 16, for the purpose of discussing the general business of the organization and passing upon applications for new membership.

The State Rights Distributors, Inc., was organized about a year ago and since then it has developed into one of the most progressive and constructive organizations operating in the independent field. It was formed for the purpose of co-operative buying of negatives of special features for distribution through the exchanges of its members. It is announced that several big productions are under consideration and will be given a private showing for the members during the session in New York.

Following is a list of the members and their respective territories: Sol L. Lesser, of San Francisco, Cal., California, Nevada and Arizona; M. R. Rosenberg, of Seattle, Wash., Washington, Idaho, Oregon, and Montana; B. S. Cohen, of Denver, Col., Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico; D. M. Vandawalker, of Chicago, Ill., and Henry L. Dollman, of Indianapolis, Ind., Indiana and Illinois; Leon D. Netter, of Cleveland, O., Ohio and Kentucky; Harry M. Grelle, of Pittsburgh, Pa., western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Nathan Hirsh and Louis Haas, of New York City, New York State and New Jersey; J. J. Allen, of Toronto, Ont., Dominion of Canada.

State rights buyers whose territories are not listed above are invited to attend this meeting, to be held May 16, at the offices of the organization in the Longacre Building, New York City.

Webster's "Reclaimed" Ready for Showing

HARRY M'RAE WEBSTER, Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., has completed the assembling and editing of his first independent production, "Reclaimed," the struggle for a soul between love and hate, according to an announcement made this week. Niles Welch, considered by critics to be one of the best juvenile actors on the screen, and Mable Julienne Scott are co-starred in this production, which is in seven reels and was written by Richard Field Carroll.

Mr. Webster with the completion of his production was taken suddenly ill and is now confined to his home. When seen at the Yonkers Studio, where the interiors of "Reclaimed" were taken, Mr. Webster spoke with the utmost frankness about his picture when he stated to a NEWS representative that he did not consiler "Reclaimed" a wonderful production, but that he did think that the scenario submitted was one of the most consistent and best constructed scripts ever submitted for his consideration and reproduction.

"Mr. Welch and Miss Scott, with the assistance of a very able supporting cast, have interpreted Mr. Carroll's ideas of 'Reclaimed' with remarkable ability," said Mr. Webster, "and in my opinion there isn't an audience in the United States that will not leave a theatre where my picture is shown that will not be pleased with the entertainment afforded.

"The photography is 100 per cent, and Harry Forbes, cameraman, has turned out a piece of work that reflects credit on his ability. In the supporting cast are seen Anders Randolf, Mabel Wright, Frederic W. Peters, Warren Cook, Sidney Bracy and little Bobbie Connelly, a cast of players known to every picture lover. 'Reclaimed' will not alone please the public but will satisfy the exhibitor," concluded Mr. Webster, "and I will miss my guess if it is not one of the most consistent long-lasting sellers on the market."

The feature will be given a private showing for the trade and reviewers in the near future. Due notice of the showing will be given.

Sawyer Gets Letter Endorsing "Mother"

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, of General Enterprises, Inc., 1,476 Broadway, which organization is distributing via state rights the seven-part McClure feature, "Mother," was recently in receipt of the following communication relative to the production starring Elizabeth Risdon. Mr. Kimpton's letter may be taken as an indication of the attention being paid to the matter of proper musical settings by exhibitors throughout the country today:

Grand Theatre, International Falls,
Minnesota. (P. O. Box 567)
16th April, 1918.

General Enterprises,
1476 Broadway, New York.
Dear Sirs:

Referring to your kind favor of the 18th March last, it is with not a little satisfaction (I'll confess) that I am handing you One Sheets and Musical Suggestions for your remarkable feature, "Mother," which closed here last night after a two-day showing.

Especial care has been taken in compiling these suggestions. Several alterations were made before we finally agreed upon the selections chosen to "bring out" this picture. I inclose two copies as I thought you might like to run off a few. You are at liberty to use them to any purpose whatever.

In "Mother" you have given us a feature carrying with it a cast to lovers of outdoor beauty from start to finish. It is a picture which an exhibitor should try to get before people NOT accustomed to the horrid (!) movies; it will easily change an anti into a red hot Fan.

Macheroni's beautiful song, "For All Eternity," is a fitting climax to the musical setting. We worked the "die-away" effect (getting sotter and softer till the end) with remarkably good results.

Please accept my humble efforts as belonging to the movement for "better music for the film," and closing with my best wishes, I remain,

Sincerely,
HARRY KIMPTON,
Musical Director.

W. H. Productions Starts Campaign

W. H. Productions Company announced this week that it is starting a pretentious trade paper advertising campaign on the one and two-reel Chaplin pictures which it distributes to state rights buyers. This, it is made known, is for the purpose of aiding the various exchanges to secure a minimum of bookings.

The first three subjects of the Chaplin series will be two-reelers and are entitled "The Jazz Waiter," adapted from "Caught in a Carabet"; "His Dare-Devil Queen," adapted from "Mabel at the Wheel," and "The Roustabout," adapted from "The Property Man."

The entire series are being re-edited, retitled and reconstructed, with an advertising display of one, three and six-sheets for the two-reelers and one and three-sheets for the single reelers; also a lobby display of 8 x 10 photographs on each subject.

Abramson Shoots Exteriors on Famous Estate

Ivan Abramson, director general of the Graphic Film Corporation, has finished the interiors of his late production, "When Men Betray," and has left for Lakewood, N. J., where the exteriors are to be shot. Permission has been obtained to use the famous Gould Estate for these scenes.

"It will be the biggest picture I have ever made," he said. "The theme is strong and exposes the truth that small transgressions often lead to disastrous results. The characters are not mere puppets of an author's imagination, but are all types I have known and carefully studied."

Gail Kane is featured. The supporting cast includes Robert Elliot, Stuart Holmes, Sally Crute, Gertrude Braun, Jack McLean, Reed Hamilton, Dora Mills Adams, Tallulah Bankhead, Hazel Washburn, Lilian Berse and Julienne Moore.

Alice Howell Added to Universal Program

Alice Howell, in a Century Comedy, will appear once a month hereafter on the Universal program, her picture taking the place of the usual L-Ko Comedy on the list for that week.

Jane Novak Cast in Hart Picture

Jane Novak, with William S. Hart in "The Tiger Man," will next appear in the Artcraft picture, "Selfish Yates," starring William S. Hart, the Ince Western star, as Mary Adams, the girl whose sweetness and simple charm causes a thorough epotist to renounce his ways and become unselfish.

Later she will be seen in support of Charles Ray in the Paramount picture, "The Hand of the Hun," also an Ince production.

Versatility is declared to be one of the assets of the young actress.

Dorothy Dalton in Domestic Drama

Following "Tyrant Fear," her newest Paramount release, Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star, will soon be seen in "The Mating of Marcella," by Joseph Franklin Poland, produced under the supervision of Mr. Ince.

This is a domestic drama said to give the star every opportunity for the utilization of her gifts for emotional acting, and presenting a situation that is distinctly original, which is led up to gradually by a series of events, wherein suspense of the highest order is developed.

As an American girl in straitened circumstances who becomes involved in a selfish woman's plot for divorce and alimony, Dorothy Dalton is cast for a role that is full of subtleties and shades of emotion.

Fox Corporation Makes Changes

Several changes, already in effect, among the branch managers of Fox Film Corporation, are noted in an announcement from the William Fox offices.

William Jenner has assumed the managership of the Chicago exchange, while Lester Sturm is now in charge of the branch at Cincinnati, succeeding George Beihoff, who is no longer with the organization. M. A. Walsh has been appointed manager of the Los Angeles exchange.

Select Salesman Rallies Round the Flag

The selective draft which is recruiting the National Army to stamp out the Hun has called to the colors A. E. Rosenberg, a member of the sales force of the Pittsburgh branch. Mr. Rosenberg has been doing yeoman work for Select in his territory under Leo Levison, branch manager, and is a well-known figure in the film world of the Smoky City and its vicinity.

Given with Goldwyn

Herbert Given, formerly with Select Pictures, is now manager of the Goldwyn exchange in Philadelphia. He reports that Goldwyn pictures have been going over big in that territory.

Short Run Houses Change for "Revelation"

THREE theatres in the South, heretofore opposed to giving their houses over to week runs, have set custom aside and booked Screen Classics, Inc., super feature, "Revelation," starring Nazimova, for a solid week's engagement.

Harry J. Cohen, of Metro, who has returned from a whirlwind tour of that section of the country in the interests of Screen Classics, Inc., productions, cites the Strand, in New Orleans, and the Queen and Liberty, in Dallas and Houston, respectively as examples of the new policy houses. The strength and quality of "Revelation," together with the fame of Nazimova and the success of other Screen Classics, Inc., photo dramas throughout the country, are the reasons why these amusement houses have broken their long established rule.

Screen Classics, Inc., pictures in general, Mr. Cohen found, have taken the South by storm. Exhibitor and public alike seem pleased with the high standard maintained by these pictures. "Blue Jeans," with Viola Dana; "Lest We Forget," in which Rita Jolivet, survivor of the Lusitania, is starred, and "The Legion of Death," which shows Edith Storey as the leader of Russia's battalion of women warriors, have done well. Among the theatres which have projected these screen productions with success are the Trianon, in New Orleans, which played them for ten days, and the Criterion of Atlanta, which has used the first two mentioned with similar results. Wherever they are played the strongest opposition is pitted against them, Mr. Cohen says.

Agreements entered into by Mr. Cohen with other theatres in the South insure these pictures an even greater popularity in this part of the country. He also established a regular showing of Metro's All-Star Series productions in Atlanta, Houston, Dallas and other large cities.

"Distinction, Big Element in Picture"

OF the first independent production by the newly organized Bacon-Backer Film Company, "Men," under the direction of Perry Vekroff, George Backer, of Foursquare Pictures, which distributing organization wlil place this subject before the exhibitors of the country, has the following to say:

"Distinction is the element which every motion picture producer aims constantly to put into his photoplays. 'Men,' the Bacon-Backer six-reel photoplay, has in it that continually sought after and hard to obtain ingredient of photoplay success—distinction. It is not the intention, nor the desire, of Foursquare Pictures, Inc., to raise a hue and cry as to the excellences of 'Men,' though they are many. To understate, rather than exaggerate, the fine qualities in the pictures it distributes is one of the Foursquare principles.

"But this quality we are speaking about—distinction—happens to be part and parcel of 'Men.' It runs through the entire photoplay. You find it in the atmosphere of the production, in the settings which are the last word in this most difficult branch of feature-picture production, in the cast and the acting. The story itself, which was written by the celebrated playwright, Harry S. Sheldon, from his play of the same name, has distinction. And all this makes the Bacon-Backer photoplay something out of the ordinary—even among pictures which bear the impress of unusual quality.

"I took the time to supervise personally, the designs for the sets and furnishings. Made to fit a particular need, 'Men' was created with care, by a corps of experts. The aim was solely to create a picture to arouse the admiration of those who show a picture and who look at one.

"Foursquare has deemed it fitting to explain these various matters because exhibitors are steadily growing more appreciative of fine features. They seek those having heart interest and 'pep' and 'punch' but lately, also the features with distinction. And Foursquare is proud to be able to offer 'Men' to its patrons for the reason that it has all these essentials."

Mabel Normand Starts "The Venus Model"

MABEL NORMAND'S next picture, successor to "Joan of Plattsburg," is announced by Goldwyn as "The Venus Model," written by H. R. Durant. Goldwyn is authority for the statement that "no expense has been spared to invest the production with richness and beauty and to surround Miss Normand with a cast which could not be improved upon. The star's role fits her like the proverbial glove."

"The Venus Model" is being directed by Clarence G. Badger. The title of the play is derived from a bathing suit created by Kitty O'Brien, who is employed in the factory of Braddock & Co. The business is going to the dogs by reason of the old-fashioned methods prevailing, which means that the bathing suits manufactured by Braddock & Co. are without the snap and style demanded by alert buyers. Braddock, the head of the firm, has other troubles. His health is failing, for one thing, and his son, Paul, is wasting his time at college on friends who can do him no good. Kitty has her troubles, too. She has befriended a child whose father turns up at intervals to wring money from Kitty. Braddock has to go away for his health and Kitty comes to the front with the design of a new bathing suit, "The Venus Model," which turns out to be a big winner. In the meantime Paul Braddock returns, becomes greatly interested in Kitty and settles down to business.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Universal Newsettes

Several changes have been effected at Universal City with respect to the producing units. One provides that Joseph de Grasse shall direct the production of Grace Cunard, which is titled "The Spawn." This story was written by Kingsley Benedict and continuity prepared by Harvey Gates. "The Spawn" deals with the conditions resulting from the present world war, and especially the rape of Belgium. Another change concerns the production of "Nobody's Bride," starring Ella Hall, which is to be made by Tod Browning, who recently was affiliated with Metro, where he directed Edith Storey.

Mary MacLaren is starting work in a new film play, named "Bread," by Evelyn Campbell, and Ida May Park will continue as directress for this star.

Lyons and Moran, with Edith Roberts as their leading woman, have filmed a comedy named "Straight Crooks," which was originally known as "Honesty Is the Best Policy." "The boys" have an entirely new comedy situation that gives the story five reels of laugh in one reel of film. Fredrick Palmer has been engaged to write for the Lyons and Moran Company. He was formerly with this organization, and later served the Lehrman-Sunshine studios.

Douglas Gerrard is making the final scenes for "The Cub," a newspaper story starring Franklyn Farnum with Eileen Percy as leading woman, and Allen Holubar is almost through with the filming of "Discipline and Genevra," which stars Dorothy Phillips. Within a few days the Mae Murray production, "The Big Little Person," will be completed by Robert Leonard and company.

William Gibson, chief clerk of the scenario department, has been given a six-weeks' vacation by Manager of Production Henry McRae, which is the first time he has been off since beginning work for the Universal in the Kennedy administration in 1914. Gibson is the oldest man in point of service with the Universal western studios, now with the organization. He is spending the vacation at his former home in Texas.

Two leading women were added to the Universal staff last week. Eileen Percy, formerly of the Douglas Fairbanks Company, has been engaged to play opposite Franklyn Farnum, who is now working under the direction of Douglas Gerrard. A newspaper story is next to be filmed by this company, and for it a marvelous set, a replica of the interior of the Los Angeles Examiner office, is being constructed.

The Lyons & Moran Comedy Company is still at work on "The Woman Haters."

Dorothy Phillips Is Featured In the Jewel Picture, "A Soul for Sale"

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

Pending the return of Mary Pickford, Director William D. Taylor has been working on scenes in which the star does not appear for a photoplay titled "Captain Kidd, Jr." All settings are complete and ready for use, which will enable Director Taylor to complete this Pickford subject in a short time. Miss Pickford is taking a short vacation following her strenuous Liberty Loan Bond activities, and will be back in Los Angeles in a few days.

Douglas Fairbanks is back at work after a vacation spent near Butte, Montana, following his Liberty Loan tour, and under Director Joseph Heneberry is making the final scenes for "Say, Young Fellow," of which Heneberry is the author. A greater portion of this picture was filmed before Fairbanks left the first of April, and the principals of the cast are Marjorie Daw, Frank Campeau, Edith Chapman, James Neill, Jay Dwiggins and Bull Montana. This picture is the cause of a romance, which will not be seen in the film. Director Heneberry sought the use of a ranch of the early-day Mission type, and in addition to getting the privilege of making exterior scenes there for the picture, Heneberry also induced the daughter of the ranch owner to become his bride. The couple were married two weeks ago, and left immediately for Chicago on a honeymoon trip, which was combined with the business of getting an official O. K. on many of the scenes from Douglas Fairbanks, when he was in Chicago.

Vitagraph News Bits

Joe Rock leaped twenty feet once from one skyscraper to another in making a Vitagraph Big V. Comedy and this leap was his record until last week when he went it a full ten feet better. There was no director or camera to register the leap, but the way Joe tells it and the evidence he offers are most convincing. Joe was sunning himself outside his cabin on the side of Look-Out Mountain not so far from Hollywood, Calif. A ten-foot rattlesnake was doing likewise. The snake knew Joe was there but Joe's first intimation of the "propinquity," as the comedian puts it, was the song of the rattler. Then it was Joe made the leap in question and just as the snake struck at him. Joe turned the corner of the cabin still in midair and presently returned with his shotgun. Now, as to the jump being thirty feet. Joe was seated precisely where the snake's head fell when he shot it off. The snake, head and all, was ten feet long and it was just twice his length from the head to the corner of the cabin. And Joe went another ten feet around the corner. Between comedy scenes at Vitagraph lot, Mr. Rock will show you the rattles preserved in a box of cotton and tell you all about it.

There was another hurry call for carpenters last week at Vitagraph's Hollywood plant. A big stockade is being put up to be used for some of the most thrilling scenes in the forthcoming serial, "A Fight for Millions," being directed and starred in by William Duncan. An elaborate set also is being built for "The Woman in the Web" serial company, directed by Paul Hurst. This set, when completed, will occupy almost the entire light studio at the Hollywood plant and many of the later scenes will be staged there.

The Earle Williams Company is housed in one of Los Angeles's most elaborate residences filming interiors for "The Girl in His House;" William Duncan and his serial players are in Burbank, where, with built-to-order buildings and bridges, they are burning and hazarding in new super thrills, for Vitagraph's newest serial, "A Fight for Millions;" Paul Hurst, with Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon, and others in "The Woman in the Web" cast, are at San Fernando and with a burning bungalow all their own and galloping horses, speeding automobiles and unlimited daring, are photographing scenes for the last chapter of that serial. And not far distant but in the seclusion of their own Western street, the Wolfville Series Company is busy filming scenes for the fifth picture.

What's This! Snow in California? Yes, on April 2, When the Bluebird Company Was Filming "The Guilt of Silence," Featuring Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury

Live Triangle Items

Following the completion of the Triangle subject, "High Stakes," which was co-directed by H. O. Davis and Arthur Hoyt, Mr. Hoyt has been placed in charge of the production of a five-reel story now known as "Station Content," based on romance and heartaches of a theatrical career, with Gloria Swanson and Lee Hill as the central figures. This play will consist of about five reels, and a big cast has been selected for appearance in it.

Another new story, filming of which was started last week, is known as "The Heritage." It has an unusual plot, which provides that both leading characters, taken by Jack Richardson and Irene Hunt, shall play dual roles. The story opens with a romance of the South, which ends with the couple being separated. The second episode is laid in the West, and has thrilling action together with a romance of the son and daughter respectively of the lovers of the South. Jack Livingston and Dot Hagar are cast for important parts in this play, being filmed by Raymond Wells.

William Beaudine is filming a comedy at present titled "The Poor Fish," which deals with a speedy girl at the wheel of a racing car. Claire Anderson, Josie Sedgwick, Fritzi Ridgeway, Ed Brady and a number of other Triangle prominent players are cast for parts in this.

While at work on location filming scenes for "Prudence Pay the Piper," starring Olive Thomas, Director Frank Borzage was taken suddenly ill. He had a great number of extra people who had been transported with the company to a hotel thirty-five miles from the studio, and he attempted to finish the work laid out for the day, but finding this impossible, his assistant, Park Frame, completed the filming. Arthur Hoyt as his working companion. The title of the next picture has not been made known, nor is it stated the nature of the story to be used for this coming production.

The six or seven-reel subjects made under the special supervision of General Manager H. O. Davis are to bear his name and be known as separate releases from the regular Triangle program. At present it is the plan to call them H. O. Davis Productions.

This week's work was begun on two additional subjects which will be released under the H. O. Davis Production title. One is at present known as "Prudence Pays the Piper," and is centered about a modest Quaker maiden who invades a fashionable school for girls. Olive Thomas is to be the featured player of this story and the direction is in charge of Frank Borzage. The cast selected to support Miss Thomas includes Francis MacDonald, Claire McDowell, Edward Peil, Harvey Clark, John T. Wilde and several others.

The other new story put in production is temporarilly called "Mme. Sphinx." This is to be directed by Thomas N. Heffron, and will offer Alma Rubens in the stellar role. This story has an atmosphere of the Latin Quarter of Paris before war times, and some sets representing artists' studios to be built for this are marvels of beauty. In the filming of the first few scenes, an accident occurred which caused a fire in one of the sets, and the entire company and directors turned in and proved themselves vigilants in the matter of fire fighting. Supporting Miss Rubens are Wallace MacDonald, John Lince, William Dyer, Dick Rossen, Dot Hagar, Betty Pearce, and a number of other well known Triangle players.

With Pathe Players

The Fannie Ward Astra Company has finished the filming of "The Narrow Path," in which W. E. Lawrence and Mary Alden are the principal supports of the star. George Fitzmaurice is responsible for the direction.

The Astra serial company filming "Hands Up" for Pathe, has begun work with Ruth Roland and George Chesebro as leads. Already fifteen exterior location settings for this serial have been completed, and the equipment and properties purchased for the filming of the fifteen episodes now represent an outlay of more than fifteen thousand dollars. The direction is by James Horne.

Edna Mae Cooper Is In the Cast of Artcraft's "Old Wives for New"

Norman Manning is taking a vacation from his duties as business manager of the Astra, the first he has had since entering the picture field, and is touring Southern California in his new one hundred horsepower MacFarland.

The Diando Baby Marie Osborne Company has made the final scenes for "The Evidence" and work has been commenced on one of a fairy tale type which will be known as "Milady o' the Beanstalk," which is an adaptation from the story of the same name by Edgar Selden.

The first three episodes of "The Wolf Faced Man," starring George Larkin and Betty Compson, have been completed, and General Manager W. A. S. Douglas has taken the prints to New York.

Frank S. Beresford, who came West and served as scenario editor at Triangle for more than a year, has been engaged in the capacity of Production manager by Diando. Mr. Beresford has had a very wide experience in motion picture fields following an experience of a number of years on the legitimate stage in the production work.

Fox Studio Doings

A large portion of one block occupied by the Fox studio is now in use for a very pretentious Spanish Mission setting, consisting of street scenes, entrances to a hacienda, which will contain a half-dozen or more Spanish Mission buildings for the next Theda Bara special production, "Spanish Love," which is now in the making. The scenes required for this big setting are laid in the Philippines. Another big set erected for this represents the interior of the home occupied by the American ambassador, where a big ball is enacted. More than four hundred people, including a forty piece orchestra, took part in these scenes with Miss Bara and her leading man, Al Roscoe.

"The Bird of Prey" is the present title of a photoplay being filmed by Edward J. Le Saint, which stars Gladys Brockwell in the role of a female bandit. This is of a semi-western nature, and the company is now working on the exteriors in the vicinity of Elsinore Lake, which is located in some of the most rugged mountains of Southern California. Herbert Hayes, who recently appeared in "The Heart of the Sunset," is leading man for Miss Bara.

Director Lynn Reynolds has completed the filming of "Ace High," the Canadian Northwestern Mounted Police story starring Tom Mix, and is now starting work on a western picture with this actor. Director Reynolds is the author of the story as well.

Here and There

Victor Schertzinger is to direct the next Enid Bennett-Ince-Paramount film, and work on this, which is from a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, has been commenced.

Dorothy Dalton motored to San Diego last week, where she entertained members of an engineer corps of which she is godmother, and presented each member with a burlesque smileage book, which contained thirty-two small, smiling portraits of herself. The books were bound in leather and finished in gold.

David Wark Griffith has begun work on his first Artcraft release, which will not be ready for the market for several months. With the exception of Dorothy Gish, practically all of the people who took important parts in Griffith's "Hearts of the World" will play in this five-reel film now in the making. As with all Griffith productions, no information is given out as to the character of the play.

The German spy melodrama, made under the direction of Chet Withey and titled "The Enemy Within," was given a try-out showing one evening this week at Clune's Theatre at Pasadena. This is a story of an American lad, the son of German parents, who becomes a German spy in America after spending several years in Germany, where his teaching caused him to admire the German military system. While this picture was made at the Griffith studio, it does not bear the name of the master producer, and all credit is given Mr. Withey for the excellence of the picture, which consists of six reels.

Bert Lytell and Anna Q. Nillson are still working on the Southern California pioneer day story, "No Man's Land."

Viola Dana, who has been at the coast working in Metro subjects since last fall, left Tuesday of this week for New York, where she will remain until September.

Cecil B. deMille is next to film an adaptation prepared by William C. deMille from the Rupert Hughes book, "We Can't Have Everything." In this Kathleen Williams, Elliot Dexter, Sylvia Bremer, Thurston Hall, Alma Francis, Theodore Roberts, Tully Marshall and Raymond Hatton will have the important roles.

Another new production started at the F. P. L. studio is that directed by Donald Crisp with Wally Reid and Ann Little. This is an adaptation from a magazine story, the release title of which has not been selected.

Walter Edwards has completed the direction of "A Pair of Silk Stockings" starring Constance Talmadge, with Harrison Ford playing the opposite lead. This Select picture is from the play of the same name.

Viola Dana, who has been at the Coast for the past seven months, this week worked in the last scenes for her coming release, "The Only Road," and early in the coming week will depart for New York, where she will work until September at the Metro studios. This, the last Viola Dana subject made in the West, was directed by Frank Reicher.

"The Demon," starring Edith Storey, has been completed by Director General George D. Baker, who is busy with the preparation of the script for her next film, which is an adaptation from Mr. Baker's play known as "As the Sun Went Down."

The third Metro Company is still at work on the Bert Lytell picture, "No Man's Land," dealing with a land-grabbing situation in the early days in California.

All work on the D. W. Griffith supervised subject, "The Enemy Within," directed by Chester Withey, has been completed, and after a number of try-outs in small cities in and about Los Angeles arrangements will be made for its premier. The story, as the title suggests, deals with the German spy system in America, and interwoven into this is a pretty romance, with Dorothy Gish as the central figure. George Fawcett is another principal of this Griffith subject. Charles Gerrard appears as the German spy, or the heavy of this picture, and another player taking an important part is Douglas McLean.

C. Gardner Sullivan has written the story for the next subject in which Dorothy Dalton will be featured, and the work of producing this will be started early during the coming week. Director R. Wm. Neill will continue in charge of the Dalton Company. The other members of the cast have not been selected.

The Enid Bennett story which has had several working titles, is to be known as "A Desert Wooing." This film is now completed, and the company will start work within a few days on a new story, which is also written by C. Gardner Sullivan, and gives Miss Bennett the role of a vampire.

The Charles Ray Company has taken all scenes for "The Night o'Clock Town," written and directed by Victor Schertzinger, and the company, now being far ahead of their release on the Paramount program, will take a vacation of several weeks before beginning work on the new subjects.

Since Mr. Griffith's return from the East, where he personally attended the premiers of "Hearts of the World" at New York, Boston and Chicago, he has been busy making preparations for his first Artcraft release. The cast for this has now been selected, and includes Lillian Gish, George Seigman, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, and a number of others who have appeared in Griffith productions. He has had the company in rehearsal for the past several days, and active filming will be started shortly.

Realism that nearly resulted in a riot marked the filming of "Bombs and Blunders," a forthcoming Vitagraph Big V Comedy. An incident in the comedy is where the comedians, Montgomery and Rock, shoot a German spy up a flag pole, where the waving Stars and Stripes are dutifully kissed before the German falls some 100 feet to an asphalt grave. Montgomery and Rock did not need any urging when it came to pitching into the spies and the spies were game and fought back. It was a fair fight and a delight to Director Howe until the enthusiasm and patriotism of the two score spectators on the Hollywood lot got the better of them and they surged about the players demanding that the comedians kill the Huns.

Satisfied usually with a studio or a specially built building or street in which to tear things up generally, Vitagraph's two Big V. comedy companies are having the times of their lives just now, for they have the entire Hollywood plant all to themselves. Night has been turned into day, runways and breakaway buildings have sprung up, mountain lakes appeared as if by magic and a general commotion stirred up that bespeaks a new and even higher standard for at least two Big V's.

Metro Will Shortly Present Harold Lockwood in the Farce-Comedy, "Lend Me Your Name"

Grace Cunard is again back with the Universal, and is to play under the direction of Joseph DeGrasse. A play at present known as "The Spawn," which deals with the condition in Europe after the present war, will be the first subject in which Miss Cunard will appear. The story deals largely with the results of the conditions caused in Belgium, French, Italian and Russian territory, as the result of the invasions, and will point out the moral effect the many degenerate acts of the German army will have on posterity.

Allen Sears, who recently was seen as the young officer in "The Beast of Berlin," has been selected to play leading man role opposite Mae Murray in "The Big Little Person," which is now in production under the direction of Robert Leonard.

Other five-reel subjects now being filmed are "Nobody's Bride," starring Ella Hall; "The Eagle" with Monroe Salisbury, which is being directed by Elmer Clifton; and "The Shadow Man," with Ruth Clifford and Kenneth Harlan, directed by Rupert Julian.

President Carl Laemmle arrived in Los Angeles last week, and at the same time announcement was made at Universal City that there would be considerable more producing activities there, inasmuch as negotiations had been completed for a number of additional Pathe producing units to work at this producing plant. Mr. Laemmle's visit to the coast is made for the sole purpose of familiarizing himself more closely with producing conditions at Universal City.

MAY 25, 1918 NEWS MORE NEWS

California weather—nothing unusual.

Tod Browning is vacationing in our midst.

Bill Parker, the Santa Barbara bard, was in town last week.

Lyons and Moran have been mis-cast in the comedy, "The Women Haters."

Clifford Bruce is whiling away his spare moments in an attempt to perfect substitute for gasoline.

Art Rossen has a new hat, and he is camouflaging the price from a dollar fifty to fourteen dollars.

Hampton Del Ruth buys his automolies by the pound. The last one came to $2.15, and it's some boat.

Now that Monroe Salisbury is playing in "The Eagle," we may expect to see him unfurl the flag in the fith reel.

Milton Sills, as an actor, is a wonderful Liberty Loan Bond four-minute man, as he demonstrated in Los Angeles recently.

Latest reports are that Charley Chaplin could not find a woman who would buy a hundred thousand dollar bond, even if he would marry her.

Lynn Reynolds-Tom Mix production coming up is to be "Ace High," and the critics want to know if that's the title, or refers to the quality.

There are reports that "Scoop" Conlon, the gay publicity man about the colony, has taken to himself a bride. HOOKUM has not learned the name.

William Russell was in town last week. (HOOKUM could tell a story of him being pinched by speed cops, but that's not news—just a regular occurrence.)

Roscoe Arbuckle decided every pound of his body was worth two hundred dollars to the Government, so he bought sixty thousand dollars' worth of bonds.

D. W. Griffith is making a new record for himself in the matter of early rising and late to bed. The watchman says the lights are never out.

Frank Beresford, after several months of seclusion in Hollywood, has returned to active life in the film game—yes, he's production manager of Diando.

Bob McKim, as Liberty Bond speaker, called every one down for spending their money at Vermon with the admission that he knows they did it—he saw them do it.

W. Desmond Taylor is considered a wizard because he can make a Mary Pickford subject (or almost all of it) with Miss Pickford in another section of the country.

William Duncan is petitioning the Government to set the clocks back another hour, believing he can shoot for sixty minutes more if such another time change is made.

Edward Sloman just can't stay out of the limelight because he's a director. He played the star role in "The Wolf" at a Red Cross presentation at Santa Barbara this week.

Monte M. Katterjohn is having the interior of his car lined with Oriental draperies, so it will be possible to remain in that atmosphere for writing a Far East drama.

Charley Fuhr is responsible for the new name given Mary Pickford's publicity representative—Itzalie Cohn. Nobody knows why Charley insists on giving Al such a name as this.

Being the only direct representative of Pathe on the Coast, Jack Cunningham finds its a strenuous job to be production manager, author, continuity writer, screen critic, etc.

Grace Darmond, known throughout the colony as the most beautiful blonde, is finding the heat so intense that she is daily counting the hours when her rattler will leave for the East.

John Fairbanks, the day after the Lasky Studio fire, pointed out three holes in the lapel of his blue coat in an attempt to claim damages, but every one around the studio knows he wore a brown suit the afternoon of the fire.

Liberty fair.

Al Cohn's home.

Herman Katz is in town.

B. Ziedman's in town.

Jess. Lasky's in town.

Carl Anderson's in town.

C. Laemmle he's in town.

Viola Dana has gone east.

D. W. Griffith's back in town.

Bill Hart came back the 28th.

Carl Robinson's back from his trip.

H. O. Davis Productions looks good on the screen.

Jewel Carmen has been doing her New York shopping.

Doug. Fairbanks hunted in Wyoming after Liberty Bonding.

Roy Stewart has a deer skin vest with bear claw buttons.

Charley Chaplin is vacationing after a strenuous Bond campaign.

Robert McKim admits he's the meanest man in the world on the screen.

Mary Pickford knocked 'em dead in Pittsburg. She's back in L. A. too.

Now that so many have come home, our film colony seems to be normal, and a lot of film will be spoiled shortly.

Lieut. Bob Kane is furloughing from Camp Lewis, and spent several days in the mids of our well known film colony.

Here's a secret—Catherine A. Traynor is secretary to Margarita Fisher, and thereby answers practically all the letters.

B. A. Rolfe is to stick with the game even if he's not with Metro. There will be a new Rolfe producing company, we guess.

Henry McRae wore a business suit to U City the other day, and everybody wanted to know if someone had stolen his puttees.

William Farnum can now talk above a whisper, and therefore claims he is again good for the legitimate as well as the screen stage.

Bill Desmond wears a leather overcoat, but that don't mean he's an aviator. Bill's a regular guy even if he isn't a high flyer.

Bill Duncan has bought so many Liberty Bonds that he don't feel he can afford a haircut, and has again become proficient with a Gillett.

If motion picture stock was as easy to sell as Liberty Bonds, say a few promoters, over-production would be even worse than it is today.

Charley Christie lost seven pounds last week talking Liberty Bonds. Charley, you know, was chairman of the motion picture studio committee.

Doug. Fairbanks claims to have lived twenty days on the menu of parades, handshakes and coffee, but he didn't lose anything but his voice.

Dean Fiefield, publicity man at the American, has joined the army and is now at American Lake. A farewell was given Dean, and a good time had by all.

Henry Lehrman has started the making of a comedy that "promises to be extremely funny as well as thrilling and clever," and so we are led to believe Henry uses 3 in 1 oil on his scenario machine.

Paralta has a policy which provides officers shall not be mentioned in the public print, and therefore HOOKUM apologizes for mentioning the fact that President Carl Anderson, John deWolf and Herman Katz are in town.

Lloyd Hamilton is appearing before the camera this week in the nude—yes, he hasn't come forth without his mustache since nigh on to five years ago, when he and Ruth Roland played under the direction of Mickey Neilan.

Rumors: Pathe has merged with Universal, and Thomas H. Ince with Paralta. Verification brought out Pathe will lease space at U City, and Thos. H. will do the same at Paralta. Verification not by an official, therefore no verification.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

Olive Tell's return to the screen from the legitimate stage where she has been playing in "The Fountain of Youth" will be in Metro's new war picture whose working title is "The Monster of Europe."

John Sunderland will play the lead opposite her and will have a chance to show his skill in flying. He gained his experience in Belgium in the early part of the war before he was injured and discharged from active service.

Miss Kirmse, beloved adviser of so many stars, has installed herself and her little secretary in an attractive apartment on West Thirty-eighth street, where the business effect of Kirmse, Inc., has softened under the influence of hangings, rugs and shaded lamps, but not the business acumen of Miss Kirmse.

Rumor has it that we are to see a dual Marguerite Clark, a funny black-faced Topsy and a sad white-faced little Eva. No need to mention the name of the picture.

California Is Not the Only Place Where Outdoor Stages Are Used Successfully. This Busy Place Is the World Studio at Fort Lee

Spring pictures seem to follow out the spring desires of the female of the species to see the newest and gayest of fashions. "Society For Sale" is another picture which is a treat from this point of view. In it the lure is the intimacy of a fashion shop in which the heroine is a model.

One day when "The Danger Game" was being shown at the Strand there were ten rows deep of soldiers in uniform. At the point in the cafe scene when Tom Moore drank a whole seidle of beer without a stop the applause was so prolonged that had the picture been a stage play the action would have had to stop for fully five minutes.

That thing called star dust, sine qua non a star can scarcely hope to shine, has been very well defined as "grey matter" by an authority upon the subject. Proof of this definition was a citation of the names Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin.

Truly, Music Hath Charms—When Played by a Player Like Mabel Normand. The Whole Studio Turns Out When the Goldwyn Star Strikes Up a Tune on the Hawaiian Fiddle

Mae Marsh is an Eastern godmother to Company B, 145th Machine Gun Battalion, Camp Kearny, California. She was chosen by the unanimous vote of the company.

Jean Dumar, a former Edison ingenue, who has been off the screen for about a year due to a serious accident, is back again. She has been seen recently in Brady's "The Whip" and Vitagraph's "The Grell Mystery." She will appear next opposite Jack Sherrill in the next Frohman Amusement picture.

After Jack McLean and Stuart Holmes had indulged in a particularly strenuous fight in a cabaret scene for "When Man Betrays," Jack had to remain on the floor just as he was knocked out for some twenty minutes while lights and the camera were adjusted for a close-up. Seems to show that directors are more careful about technical flaws than the public sometimes believes.

Marion Davies as "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" makes a most bewitching golden-haired school-girl, judging by reports from visitors at the Biograph studio.

EXHIBITORS' PERSONALS

ARIZONA

D. H. Gibbs has resigned from the management of the Airdome theatre, Yuma.

CONNECTICUT

Sylvester Z. Poli is making such changes and improvements in the old Poli theatre at Hartford that are calculated to make it one of the best on the Poli Circuit. A new front is to be put in, two stories and a half high with a store adjoining each side of the entrance. The seating capacity is to be increased to 4,000, and the work will cost in the neighborhood of $350,000. Thomas McLaughlin, of New York City, is the architect.

The Plymouth, at New Haven, Mrs. Hagenbuch, proprietor, is to be opened as an outdoor theatre about May 15, after being fully equipped with new seats of latest design. This theatre is to cover 80 by 160 feet. It is strictly a neighborhood theatre, located at 161 Plymouth street, in a residence district far removed from the central theatres.

J. H. Rice, a veteran theatrical man, has assumed the management of Poli's Meridian playhouse.

FLORIDA

The Strand theatre, Tampa, has added the Paramount and Artcraft pictures to its program. Paramounts have not been shown in Tampa for some months now.

KENTUCKY

The Auditorium theatre, at Dawson Springs, has been reopened under the personal supervision of Manager Adams.

MISSOURI

Klaw and Erlanger, New York theatrical managers and producers have leased the Grand theatre at Kansas City, Mo., and will take possession of the property June 1. Walker Sanford will manage the Grand under the new regime.

MONTANA

Dayton Wheat, a jeweler of Augusta, has leased the Star theatre and will give shows each Saturday morning.

NEBRASKA

The Opera House at Merno has been leased by W. H. Jones of Dunning.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

E. J. Caron, manager of the Star theatre, Manchester, has acquired the sole ownership of the house and intends making extensive alterations and improvements.

NEW JERSEY

The City theatre, situated in the Raritan Building at Smith street and Madison avenue, Perth Amboy, has been leased by the owners of the Ditmas theatre in State street, and will be opened within a short time under the management of Ned K. Miller, of the latter theatre. Motion pictures will be the attraction at the house, and at the present time thorough renovation is going on, alterations will be made and the house opened in the near future, the date, opening attraction and policy of the theatre to be announced shortly.

NEW MEXICO

James Provas, leasee of the Paris theatre, Santa Fe, has installed his brother as manager in lieu of J. Paulantos, who has left for Albuquerque.

NEW YORK

The Pine Hills theatre at 241 West Lawrence street, Albany, has been leased by Harry Lazarus, a former well-known Albanian. George F. Wright, who conducted the Pine Hills theatre the past season, retired last week, since which time the theatre has been closed for renovations. Mr. Lazarus intends to make every effort to popularize the house and has arranged for showing all first-class pictures.

Announcement is made by James McFarlane & Son, proprietors, that the Liberty theatre, Canandaigua, which was recently damaged by fire, will be reopened on Decoration Day. A new theatre front, raised seats, decorations, new screen and projecting machines are among the improvements being made to the interior and exterior of the building. W. F. McFarlane spent the forepart of the week in Buffalo arranging for reels. Pictures at present are being shown in the Community Building.

NORTH DAKOTA

The Hippodrome theatre at Minot, is now under the management of Grace M. Russell.

M. J. Lakie, leasee of the Lotus theatre at Red Lake Falls, has arrived with his operator, Louis Hoffman, from Barnesville and has reopened the motion picture theatre which has been closed for several weeks by order of the state fire marshal. Extensive improvements have been made and safety devices installed.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Bailey Motion Picture house located on Wood street, California, has been reopened under the management of I. M. Whiteman, who recently obtained possession of its lease.

Frederick G. Nixon-Nirdlinger has purchased the West Allegheny Motion Picture theatre, South Philadelphia, for a price reported to be close to $50,000, subject to a mortgage of $25,000. It is a two-story theatre with a seating capacity of 1,000.

RHODE ISLAND

C. R. Lynch and T. Vietri, both of Newport, have bought the Bijou theatre, Newport, from Mrs. E. G. Dunbar.

SASKATCHEWAN

Sherman theatre, Moose Jaw, has been renovated and enlarged, the seating capacity having been increased from 460 to 800.

The Gaiety theatre, which has been closed for a few weeks, was reopened recently, under the name of The Grand. W. B. Sherman and Miller Evans are the new managers. Mr. Evans was, until recently, manager of the Princess theatre, Calgary.

VIRGINIA

C. M. Casey, has installed a pipe organ in his theatre, the Isis, Lynchburg, at a cost of $10,000.

The City Council of Suffolk adopted the proposition of the Chamber of Chamber and took over the City Hall theatre.

Portable Film Standard

WITHOUT comment we publish the following letter which we have just received from a subscriber to Motion Picture News who is interested in the adoption of the new standard width film for home and portable projectors:

May 3, 1918.

Mr. E. K. Gillett,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Gillett:

A few days after the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, I happened to be in Cleveland and learned to my sincerest regret that the Rochester meeting, which I had intended to attend, slipped my memory.

Your article in this week's issue in Accessory News is certainly a surprise to me to say the least as I cannot conceive of any logical reason for any member of the Society going on record to recommend a special width film for Portable Projectors unless it's the manufacturer of theatre machines who is willfully determined to retard progress and possibly eliminate competition of the portable in fields where the portable enters into competition with them and other things equal would win on account of portability. They know from past experience that the ——— Home Projector, ——— and others who, while still doing business, are dangerously ill and are doomed.

This is the way I size the proposition up and I am sure I can hold my own against any reasonable argument against the use of standard size film for use in all types of Projectors.

I should think that those who are sincere in their convictions of the off-standard for Portables would have learned from experience of others who tried to pull it over and spent sums of money and then finally had to quit would suffice to teach them the impracticability and impossibility of the idea.

As you probably know, we have spent quite a few years in the portable game and a great many more years in the industry in general, and from the time we first expressed our thoughts in words, we were accused of everything from being crazy on up and down, but the fact remains that we are on intimate acquaintance with the pulse of the greatest American industries as far as the movies are concerned which you can see from a list of our clients and incidentally selling and have in use probably more portable Projectors than all manufacturers of Portables and semi-Portables combined, and we want to go on record as saying that if the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the country in general work along the lines suggested as far as the movies for other than theatre purposes are concerned, will progress like China did when she built the great wall and narrow gauge railway.

If you can find something safe for the portable why not extend this same protection to the big machines? Don't the numerous fires in film exchanges, theatres, etc., warrant the action of condemning the film rather than the machine? Little France pulled it over in a sensible and consistent way as per copy of letter enclosed. Can't we profit by the experience of others rather than try the hit and miss method?

I am enclosing copy of letter brought to my notice a few days ago with the request to use our influence in the same direction. This you will notice is the expression of the public and user's viewpoint and incidentally one who knows the movie situation as well as we do. It's the same verdict with every blessed individual or company who have practical experience with the movies for other than theatre purposes.

I am also enclosing a piece of off-standard film. I won't mention any names, but it fits perfectly and will run fine on a machine whose makers boast of safety in off size and Underwriters approval. The film is inflammable. (I can send you more if you need it.) The machine manufacturer will undoubtedly claim it isn't their film. I know the connection and can prove it, but what does it all matter—the fact remains and this film proves that off-standard is no solution of the problem of making portables safe.

With best personal regards, I hope to remain.

Very truly yours,

———————
President.

P. S. We have been wrestling with this problem with the Underwriters for some time. I am enclosing copy of a letter of today which may be of interest to you.

May 3, 1918.

Underwriters Laboratories, Inc.,
207 E. Ohio street,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

We thank you very kindly for your courteous response of May 2nd in acknowledgment of our letter of the 30th.

In the May 11th issue of Motion Picture News there is an article on page 2873 covering a recommendation of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers who are recommending the use of a non-standard film for Portable projection.

It is impossible to understand why in heaven's name the thinking individual of today can, for one moment, consider the continued use of inflammable film as long as it is within the possibility of man to produce one that is non-inflammable. If they can make it non-inflammable for the Portable Projectors to safeguard our children in the schools, why in God's name don't they use the same non-inflammable in the theatres and make them just as safe for our children? The same individuals that go to school, are the same individuals that go to a theatre. A panic in a theatre is just as bad as a panic in school and vice versa.

The absolute silliness and thoughtlessness of a group of individuals suggesting that we use only non-inflammable film in the restricted sense and allow the continued, unlimited, practically unrestricted promiscuous use of inflammable film, is assuredly the height of folly. I think any body of intelligent people would question the sanity of any individual who, for one moment, would make such recommendations that are so inconsistent. It is just as necessary to make safe film that all are safely protected as it is necessary to utterly destroy Prussianism that the world may be made safe for democracy.

The world knows beyond any question of a doubt that film is going to be as universally used as paper that is printed upon in spite of any short-sighted individuals who endeavor to stem the tide of progress. Anybody with ideals realizes that their value in this world is only in proportion to their service to their fellowmen; realizes that the best way to serve mankind is to make unlimited the dissemination of thought in a manner comprehen-

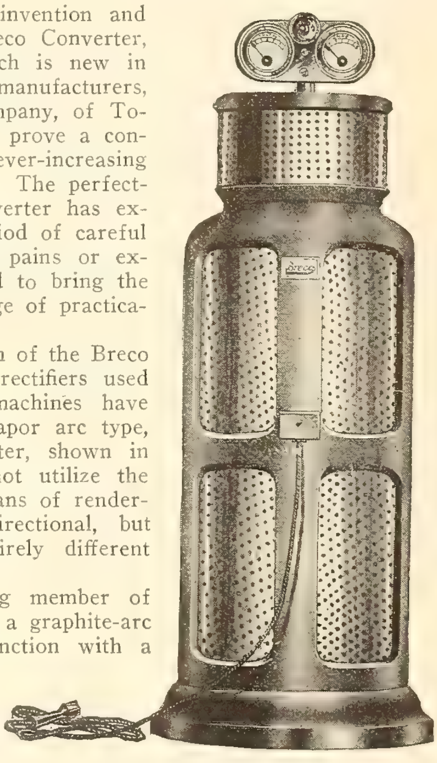
Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Breco Converter

THE converting, or rectifying, of electric current from alternating to direct by cheap, simple and reliable means has long been one of the problems confronting the electrical engineer. An appreciation of the growing importance of this problem, and a study of existing apparatus for this purpose, led Mr. T. J. Murphy, an inventer and designer of electrical devices, to seek for another solution.



The Breco Converter.

The result was the invention and development of the Breco Converter, a current rectifier which is new in principle, and which its manufacturers, the Breco Electric Company, of Toledo, Ohio, believe will prove a considerable aid to the ever-increasing use of electric current. The perfecting of the Breco Converter has extended over a long period of careful experimenting, and no pains or expense have been spared to bring the invention to a high stage of practicability and efficiency.

Up to the introduction of the Breco Converter, all current rectifiers used with motion picture machines have been of the mercury-vapor arc type, but the Breco Converter, shown in the illustration, does not utilize the mercury arc as the means of rendering the current unidirectional, but operates upon an entirely different principle.

Briefly, the rectifying member of the Breco Converter is a graphite-arc valve which, in conjunction with a commutator and a special electrical timer, only permits current to flow in the right direction. In operating the Breco Converter the current is brought from the main line to a transformer located in the bottom of the casing. The voltage is stepped down in passing through this transformer to that required for operating the arc, and is then led to a specially designed commutator. The commutator is attached to a perfectly operating synchronous motor of special design, which drives the commutator in absolute step with the pulsations of the alternating current. The alternating current is rectified, i. e., converted into direct current, on this commutator and passes thence to the arc of the motion picture machine.

Adjustments are made for the line current voltage, when the Breco Converter is installed, after which, except for a slight adjustment of the graphite electrodes, nothing more is necessary for operating the device except to connect the device to the arc lamp, and close the starting switch. Two wires carrying the A. C. are connected to two terminals on one side of the Converter and the D. C. is taken from two other terminals on the opposite side.

The Breco Converters are made in two sizes, or capacities, for motion picture work, their ratings being as follows: Model B, supplying current for one arc lamp, is rated at 3 K. W., can be supplied for use on either 110 or 220 volt A. C. circuits, and supplies from 25 to 30 amperes D. C. at 75 to 90 volts. Model C, supplying current for two arc lamps, is rated at 5 K. W., can be supplied for use on either 110 or 220 volt A. C. circuits, and supplies from 40 to 50 amperes D. C. at 50 to 75 volts. The Breco Converters are equipped with ammeter and voltmeter, a transformer to vary the voltage, fuses, switches and a relay to cut out the D. C. side in case of failure of the A. C. line voltage. They are shipped completely assembled and ready for service.

Has Halo Around Screen

Mr. Chas. Patrick, Paris, Mo., writes as follows: "I have been an operator for over two years and have always gotten along fine until very recently, and I now need help. I am using a Power 6A with rheostat. The throw is 63 ft., making a picture 13 by 9 ft. 10 in. We use alternating current, Cycles 60, Amperes 10, Voltage 110. Carbons ⅝" White A. C. Special.

Now here is the trouble I am having. If I have the lamp-house back as far as it will go, I get more light than at any other place I can set it, but with it pushed all the way back I have a light circle all the way around the picture, about three feet from the picture, and if I push the lamp-house forward until this light around the picture disappears, I then have a dark spot on the screen and the light in the picture is not so good. We use two 7½" condensers. Kindly help me out of this trouble and I will be very much obliged."

In Reply: So long as the correspondent uses a rheostat in his A. C. arc circuit he is working under very unfavorable conditions, indeed, in so far as the production of a good screen illumination from a given amount of current is concerned. It is generally known that the use of a rheostat is very wasteful of current, and in the case of the A. C. arc it can be replaced to good advantage by a transformer, or economizer, as such devices are usually termed. The economizer, if properly chosen and installed, will effect a great saving in current, and in addition will give a screen illumination more free from ghosts than is generally secured through rheostatic control when A. C. is used. If a really excellent quality of screen illumination is desired, such as can only be secured with the D. C. arc, a Mercury Arc Rectifier could be installed to advantage. Either a transformer or a rectifier would soon pay for itself from the amount saved on the current cost incident to the correspondent's present mode of operation. Before leaving the subject of current, we note that the correspondent specifies that he uses 10 Amperes. This it appears must be a misstatement, because we cannot conceive of any one trying to project a 13-ft. picture with only 10 Amperes of A. C.

Passing next to the manner in which the correspondent is troubled with a circle of light all around his projected picture, when his lamp-house is moved back as far as it will go, this is easily explained, although it might seem somewhat puzzling at first glance. When the lamp-house is in its rearmost position stray light from the front surface of the condenser system escapes past the sides of the machine head and is projected through the machine port to the screen, where it is noticed as a halo surrounding the picture. The intensity of this aberrant light from the condensers can be much diminished by painting the inside of the condenser mount dead-black, while it may be entirely prevented from reaching the screen by inserting a piece of sheet metal into the machine port, which is provided with two round holes of just sufficient diameter to allow the M. P. and the stereo beams to pass uninterrupted to the screen.

Prevention is, however, better than cure, and it appears that the correspondent could secure a much more intense and satisfactory screen illumination by making a change in his condenser system, which is at present incorrect for the objective which he is using. From the data submitted, it appears that the projection lens is 4¼" or 4½" E. F., and it is likely that a 6½"-7½" condenser combination would improve the screen result very materially over that which the correspondent now secures with the two 7½" condensers. Not only will the 6½"-7½" combination permit the lamp-house to be moved closer to the aperture, thus gaining in available illumination and preventing the halo from appearing around the screen picture, but the shorter focus condenser system will also allow the arc to be brought closer to the rear condenser, with an attendant gain in the flux collected at this point.

The correspondent's optical troubles may be easily remedied, but his fundamental requirement is an economizer or rectifier, or some other device which will enable him to secure a really brilliant illumination from his A. C. supply.

This League Member Brings His Work to Attention of Exchange

WHEN an operator becomes a member of the National Anti-Misframe League he pledges himself to remove all misframes, bad joins and other worn or mutilated sections from the films which he uses each day, which naturally means that the films must be carefully gone over after their receipt from the exchange but prior to screening them in the theatre.

Not only is it the duty of every League member to examine and rehabilitate his films before projecting them, but improving the running condition of the films is the self-appointed task of every up-to-date and professional operator, because it is a fundamental principle of successful exhibiting that in order to please the audience a smooth-running show must be presented.

That the efforts of members of the National Anti-Misframe League in all parts of the country are warmly appreciated by the exchanges has been attested by frequent communications which have appeared in these pages, and various methods have been set forth by which the attention of exchanges was attracted to the work of the League members, resulting, of course, in valuable co-operation from the exchanges.

After careful inspection the following were found and cut out:

Exchange..

We have on the present occasion to draw attention to a new method of securing exchange co-operation, which has been devised by Mr. Jacob Sheetz (League member No. 545), of Northampton, Pa., who has provided himself with a supply of manila paper envelopes, inscribed as shown in the cut, in which he returns the misframes and mutilated sections removed from his films to the respective exchanges whence the films were secured. In this way Mr. Sheetz is able to convince the exchanges that when a film is sent to his theatre it is in good hands, for the time at least, with the result that the exchange gives him the best prints which are available. It is clear, therefore, that if an operator busies himself with improving the condition of films, and brings his work to the attention of the exchanges in the proper manner, he will eventually win the confidence of the exchange to the extent that they will favor him with selected prints of the films booked by his manager, so that in the long run his work in repairing film will become much lighter than is now sometimes necessary in order to fix the films sufficiently to enable them to pass through the projecting machine.

Trading Upon the Exhibitor's Patriotism

Mr. M. Barnes, Fillmore, Cal., a theatre proprietor, sends us literature on a patriotic display slide which is being offered to exhibitors by the Louis A. Spiro Company, of Cheltenham, Pa., and writes:

"In my mail today came a proposition which I cannot refrain from submitting to you for your perusal, and also your opinion. Personally, I am simply amazed at what appears to be a deliberate attempt to profit from patriotism. A moderate profit is justifiable in most transactions, and an excessive profit is, perhaps, excusable in some transactions, but in any transaction where one's patriotism is the basis of the appeal, then most assuredly should the matter of profit be reduced to the minimum. There is a great army of American exhibitors. I say 'army' for, indeed, have not the exhibitors of America enlisted whole-heartedly in the matter of disseminating vital war information and stimulating the patriotism of the nation. The importance and effectiveness of this service is second only to that rendered by the press. No sane man will deny the patriotism of the American exhibitor, demonstration of which is made daily and nightly in their temples of art and learning. This appellation, by the way, gives you some idea of my opinion of the exhibitor who is content to admit that he conducts a 'movie show.' No one is more convinced of the loyal patriotism of the American exhibitor than the company submitting the enclosed proposition, and, in my opinion, it is for this reason that they have made bold to ask an exorbitant profit on the patriotic slide offered. In thus attempting to trade upon the patriotism of the exhibitor they do him injury, and when this attempt is made upon the plea that the exhibitor can in turn coin the patriotism of his patrons, then, indeed, they have added insult to injury. The slide offered is, in all probability, a beautiful creation, and I would be glad to own one at a reasonable price. Indeed, I would be glad to own, at a reasonable price, a large banner similarly embellished, that I might hang it in my lobby where all could see and admire it without cost, let or hindrance. But I refuse to prostrate my patriotism before a profiteer. If my view of this is wrong, then it is my most earnest wish that I be enlightened, for I have it not in my heart to knowingly wrong any man."

Comment: According to a half-tone reproduction in the circular matter sent to exhibitors by the Spiro Company, the patriotic slide which they are offering is a very neatly arranged design comprising two American flags and the portraits of Washington, Lincoln and President Wilson.

The Spiro Company are asking $7.50 for one of these patriotic slides, if purchased outright, or they will lease a slide for a period of six months for $5.00, after which they require that the slide be returned to them, or that further rentals must be paid at the rate of $1.00 per month.

It is very clear, upon investigating the design of the slide in question, that any professional slide-maker could produce its equal and retail the same at from 25 cents to $1.00, at the most, and make his customary profit. It is also very likely that there are many patriotic slides now on the market, at the usual prices, which are in every way equal to the specimen which the Spiro Company are trying to unload on exhibitors at an extortionate price. Mr. Barnes, therefore, expresses very capably what would doubtless be the attitude of the average exhibitor toward the offer of the Spiro Company, and we gladly lend our columns to the exposure of any proposition which savors of profiteering at the expense of the exhibitor.

Lantern Slides Made Without a Camera

From this I make a contact print on the lantern plate, as you will see. Of course, I color most of my slides.

Comment: The announcement slides submitted by Dr. Dorr, of which one is especially designed for members of the National Anti-Misframe League, are interesting examples of what can be accomplished in the line of lantern-slide production without the use of a camera. Mr. Dorr's procedure is as follows:

Instead of photographing a drawn or printed design in order to secure his original negative, Mr. Dorr produces his negative (from which the slides are printed) by drawing his designs on translucent, waxed, or oiled paper in India ink. The slides submitted indicate that Mr. Dorr possesses considerable skill at lettering and draughtsmanship, but the use of translucent paper also permits him to duplicate the design of any slide by tracing through the paper in pencil and then finishing up the negative with India ink.

From the negatives made on translucent paper, as above outlined, Mr. Dorr prints his positives (the lantern-slides proper) by contact in the usual manner, a printing frame being, of course, used. A longer printing exposure is necesasry when printing through the translucent paper negatives, as they do not, of course, transmit light so freely through the high-light portions, as do the perfectly transparent high lights of a contrast negative of the usual photographic variety. The long exposure is feasible in Mr. Dorr's process, as the India ink design is perfectly opaque, and there is no veiling of the clear spaces or lettering, of his slides, which are of very satisfactory quality indeed, and are characterized by sharply outlined designs and letters.

As was previously noted, one of the slides submitted by Mr. Dorr is intended for the use of League members, and bears the insignia of the N. A. M. L. We direct the attention of the many operators who have written requesting us to furnish League slides to Mr. Dorr's kind offer to supply these at a very nominal cost. Mr. Dorr's address is: 41 Sargent Street, Winthrop, Mass.

Operators' Inquiries

D. D. FAST, LONDON, OHIO: "Will you give me some pointers on how to secure a better light, and also operating instructions on the Simplex projector?"

REPLY: Let us know in what respect your screen illumination is unsatisfactory and supply us with complete information concerning the kind and amount of arc current you use, the sizes, foci, etc. of your condensers and projection lenses, make of machine, kind of screen and other necessary information and we will try to assist you. Have you followed the articles on projection optics which have appeared on various occasions within the last six months? As the manipulation of the Simplex projector is understood by most all operators we cannot devote space to this subject but the Precision Machine Company, 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York City, makers of the Simplex, would gladly send you a booklet of instructions.

J. W. KLOPP, LEBANON, PA.: "What size condensers should be used on D. C. voltage 110—35 amperes—distance from machine to screen 110 feet?"

REPLY: Unfortunately, everything but the necessary data, i.e., the E. F. of the lens, or the size of the projected picture has been given. Failure to supply at least one of these measurements prevents us from answering. Write again, submitting the measurements of the throw and either the E. F. of the objective, the width of the screen picture, or both, and we will be able to name the proper condenser combination.

W. A. HAINS, HOWE, IND.: "When running 14" reels on Power 6A machine how can I prevent upper reel running unevenly and jerkily, causing tearing of the sprocket holes on the film?"

REPLY: On the inside of the upper magazine door you will find a spring which is meant to bear against the side of the reel and prevent it from racing as the end of the film is approached. Apparently more tension is required on this spring, i.e., it must be made to bear more firmly against the side of the upper reel, and the tension can be increased by bending the spring outwards, or away from the magazine door. If it will not remain bent out sufficiently to give the desired tension, a short coil spring may be mounted between it and the door. A jerky motion of the reel, when nearing the end, is sometimes due to the fact that the hole through the center is considerably larger than the magazine spindle, causing it to rotate excentrically about the spindle. This is very annoying, but can be avoided by rewinding the films upon reels which have center holes of proper size. From your statement that the irregular rotation of the upper reel sometimes causes the sprocket holes to be torn, due to jerking as the reel stops and is started again suddenly, we are almost certain that when this happens you are running the projector at an excessively high speed.

C. B. HUTCHINSON, RICHMOND, VA., "Why will operators punch holes in film and patch them with pins?"

REPLY: The past few years have well demonstrated that the vandalism of prehistoric and medieval times still exists in an intensive degree, so it is fair to assume that the operator who habitually mutilates and abuses films is a full-blooded descendant of some former barbarian.

P. J. SHERMAN, CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX., "Have you any data on high-class motion picture projecting lenses?"

REPLY: There has long been a suspicion in the minds of advanced students of projection that a highly corrected projection objective would show greatly improved definition in the screen pictures, and this suspicion is changed to certainty when one has witnessed pictures projected with a high-grade objective of the photographic anastigmat type. The requisite corrections and constructional details of such objectives will be very shortly dealt with in a special article, in the Projection Department, but it requires to be mentioned that projection lenses of the anastigmat type are rather difficult to obtain just at present.

sive to all that may learn quickly, easily and effectively, and, as you know, motion pictures are the universal language understood by all.

The writer sincerely believes that motion pictures are going to be responsible for the greatest impetus in the evolution of mankind than any one factor that has ever entered into our existence but, like everything else, its progress is hindered in proportion to the realization of its value.

President Wilson eulogized motion pictures in a statement he made as follows:

> "It is in my mind not only to bring the motion picture industry into fullest and most effective contact with the nation's needs, but to give some measure of official recognition to an increasingly important factor in the development of our national life. The film has come to rank as the very high medium for the dissemination of public intelligence, and since it speaks a universal language it lends itself importantly to the presentation of America's plans and purposes."

The Ford Motor Car Company are equipping several hundred cars with generators so that they can use Portable Projectors and motion picture film to bring enlightenment to the masses in Russia and other countries who need to be imbued with the ideals of western civilization and progress.

In making the world safe for democracy, it is our holy duty to make democracy safe which means to unrestrict the dissemination of thought in any form of value to mankind.

In any way we can be of further service to you, we are at your command.

Very truly yours,

The Optical Requirements of Motion Picture Projection Objectives

By Alfred S. Cory

[A paper read before the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Rochester, April 9, 1918.]

THE number of different types of highly corrected or so-called anastigmat photographic objectives now on the market is very large, but only a few types are eminently suitable for projection purposes, the principal requirements of a projection objective, in addition to the abolition of the previously mentioned aberrations, being:

(1) Large effective aperture.
(2) Minimum of (glass-air) reflecting surfaces.
(3) Minimum of cemented surfaces.
(4) Compactness of construction, i. e., short distance between the front and rear components.

When these requirements and also the corrections for flatness of field and freedom from astigmatism are taken into consideration, the selection narrows down considerably, and of the many modern photographic objectives available I direct your attention to only two specific types, these being the Cooke objective series II f 4.5 and the Zeiss Ic Tessar f 3.5.

For the purposes of cinematographic projection both the Cooke Series II and the Zeiss Ic Tessar can be made with effective apertures of f 4.5 or even f 3.5, and beyond an effective aperture of f 3.5 it seems extremely inadvisable to go, because with further increase in the effective aperture the aberrations inherent in all objectives can no longer be suppressed to the degree at which they are invisible in the projected results.

The influence of residual aberration upon the screen-images produced by objectives of extremely large effective aperture may be readily demonstrated by projecting a test slide, or film, containing printing or any other fine contrasty pattern. It will then be found that the blackness of the letters, or pattern, is much more pronounced when projection is accomplished with an objective of moderate aperture than is the case when one of extreme aperture is employed, because the residual comatic and astigmatic errors which are inseparable from objectives of large aperture tend to gray the projected image, thus robbing it of a certain degree of snappiness or proper contrast.

The Cooke lens has six glass-air surfaces, as has also the Tessar, both being identical with the Petzval objective in this respect. In view of the light loss by reflection at glass-air surfaces an objective with only four open surfaces would be desirable for projection purposes, but the production of such an objective of sufficiently large aperture does not seem compatible with the corrections required, although some of the objectives designed by Hugh L. Aldis of Birmingham, England, are suggestive efforts along this line.

In respect of cemented surfaces, the Cooke lens has none, being ideal in this respect for projection with high power illuminants which generate considerable heat; the Tessar has one cemented surface which would doubtless hold up well, as no trouble is ever experienced with the cemented surface in the Petzval type objectives now commonly in use. The Cooke and the Tessar objectives are both of compact construction and are therefore superior in this respect to the Petzval objective, an advantage which will be again referred to.

The corrections for coma, astigmatism and curvature of field are carried out to a high degree in these two modern types of objectives; there being no noticeable departure from the sine condition, and the field being almost perfectly flat and free from any noticeable degree of astigmatism for upwards of 10 degrees away from the axis, thus allowing the projection of a sharp stigmatic image of 20 degrees or more in angular extent.

Distortion, the seventh aberration on our list, has been deferred until the last because under the conditions generally met with at present wherever motion pictures are projected, the elimination of distortion would appear to be an almost needless refinement in a projection objective, although, of course, this correction should be carried out to the utmost extent possible in a large aperture objective, and is carried out by all reputable opticians.

Distortion in a photographic or a projection objective may be briefly described as an increasing or a decreasing scale of reproduction from the center to the edges of the images produced by objectives of either simple or compound type, and it results from the refractive effect on rays incident at increasing angles with respect to the axis being such as to cause the angles made with the axis by the chief rays after refraction to differ from the angles made by the same rays, with respect to the axis, before refraction.

(NOTE—A chief-ray is the representative ray of a pencil; it is the ray which passes through the center of the diaphragm of an objective and therefore through the center of the entrance- and exit-pupils.)

In order that an objective may be free from distortion, and yield an orthoscopic, or rectilinear, representation of the object projected, Airy's condition must be fulfilled, which requires that the ration of the tangents of the angles made with the axis by corresponding chief-rays on the object side and on the image side of the objective must be constant, or where y and y' represent the size of the object and the image respectively, a and a' are the distances of the entrance- and exit-pupils from the plane focused for (the film image in motion picture projection) and the image-plane (or lantern screen); w and w' are the angles made with the axis by corresponding chief-rays on the object-side and the image-side of the objective, and N is the reduction factor.

The "tangent condition," as it is generally known, is precisely fulfilled in the case of symmetrical objectives, for one pair of conjugate positions of the object and image, i. e., in the case of unit magnification, and freedom from distortion may be realized for certain other positions of the object by also correcting a symmetrical objective spherically with respect to the position of the diaphragm and its images—the entrance- and exit-pupils (Bow-Sutton condition).

Orthoscopy is not completely realized for any distance of the object by unsymmetrical objectives, however, and with respect to correction for distortion most of the modern anastigmatic objectives show about the same amount of positive distortion as the Petzval type projection objective. This is not a matter of such moment in everyday motion picture projection as it is in photographic reproduction work, for in less than one theatre out of every hundred is the center of the screen co-axial with the projector optical system, or the entire screen perfectly perpendicular to the axis of projection. Inasmuch as operators, theatre managers and architects have failed in the majority of cases to provide for an orthoscopic representation on the projection screen, it can be claimed that the distortion errors due to conditions prevailing in the majority of theatres far transcend the amount of distortion to be found in the images produced by any of the modern types of objectives, when they are used for projecting upon a screen placed truly perpendicular to the axis of projection.

(NOTE—For convenience I have created the expression "axis of projection" which is defined as the prolongation of the axis of the projector optical system (assumed to be in perfect alignment) as a straight line to the projection screen. I suggest that this definition be adopted by the Society and included in the Society's list of Motion Picture Nomenclature).

As all of the modern anastigmatic objectives having a large aperture are of unsymmetrical construction, they exhibit about the same amount of distortion as the Petzval objective at angles up to 10 degrees from the axis, but there is one notable exception to this statement—the objective in question being the Ic Zeiss Tessar of f 3.5 aperture ratio. In this objective, which has previously been recommended as eminently suitable for projection purposes, distortion has been reduced to an almost negligible quantity at 10 degrees away from the axis, which is quite remarkable considering the large aperture. I have not been able to examine one of the recent Cooke anastigmatic projection objectives, which are said to work at f 2 and I cannot therefore report upon it with respect to distortion, but the Cooke objectives of smaller effective aperture are very well freed from distortion, thus indicating the possibilities of securing a good correction in this respect for the Cooke objective of larger aperture.

A final advantage which can be claimed for the modern types of photographic objectives, when used in motion picture projection, is their compact construction, which permits a very efficient utilization of the available light source.

An elementary investigation will show that in the case of the Petzval type of projection objective, generally in use, a considerable amount of the light proceeding from the margins of the machine aperture (or film picture) is intercepted within the mounting or tube of the objective, and cannot therefore reach the projection screen. By the use, however, of the types of objectives recommended in this paper, a considerable amount of light which fails to reach the projection screen, due to the vignetting action of the customary objective, may be fully availed of, because anastigmatic objectives, such as those used in photography, are characterized by a much shorter distance between their front and rear components than is the case with the Petzval objective. In virtue of this fact, a modern form of objective of compact construction can transmit as much light as a larger aperture objective of the same focal length but with greater separation between the components, and when we consider that the visible effects of aberration increase with increase in the relative aperture, it is clear that improvement in motion picture screen delineations must be reached through the compact and efficiently corrected modern anastigmat objectives of similar type to those recommended. My thanks are due to Dr. Hermann Kellner for having kindly gone over this paper prior to its presentation before the Society, and also for some demonstrations relating to the subject made at the Bausch and Lomb Optical Works.

Lang Back from Sojourn in Cuba

A. J. LANG of the export department of the Nicholas Power Company, has just returned from a trip to Cuba, where, he advises us, the Power Excelite machine has now been introduced through the Cuba Electrical Supply Company, of Havana, who will be the distributors of Power machines on the island. The Cuba Electrical Supply Company is styled by Mr. Lang one of the most progressive concerns in the greater Antilles, due to the energy and keen business insight of its president,, Pedro I. Zayas, and the general manager, W. E. Todghan.

According to Mr. Lang, projection in Cuba is considerably ahead of that in some of the neighboring tropical countries, but some antiquated apparatus is still in use in certain quarters, which he hopes to see shortly replaced by Power 6 B Cameragraphs. The film situation he found not to be in such healthy condition as might be desired, due to intense rivalry between exchanges, with the attendant evil of price cutting. This, in the opinion of Mr. Lang, will eventually force some of the exchanges to close, unless more businesslike tactics are speedily adopted by the film renters.

As regards the quality of the programs offered by the Cuban movie houses, these are quite pretentious, due largely to the use of American-made pictures, which have replaced to a great extent the highly sensational foreign-made films which used to be so popular in Cuba and in other Latin countries.

Music and the Picture

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Sam Fox of Cleveland, Ohio," has just added 12 new numbers to their famous "Library Edition," which are most appropriate as accompaniments for Motion Pictures. These compositions are all original and exceptionally well orchestrated. Violin Thematics of these numbers are obtainable free of charge direct from the publisher.

2—"Stock of Yard Blues," by Maceo Pinkard. Another of Pinkard's incomparable two steps—with all the melody snap and dash which made this writer famous. (Leo Feist edition.)

3—"Somewhere in France is the Lilly," a novelty song by J. E. Howard. A typical composition of tempo Marziale most appropriate for opening purposes of scenes of a military character. (M. Witmark edition.)

4—"Krey Music Company, 361 Washington St., Boston, Mass," are offering the following overtures at a special rate of only 25c. for full orchestra and piano: William Tell, by Rossini; Light Cavalry, by Suppe; Raymond, by Thomas; Pique Dame, by Suppe; Lustspiel, by Keler; Fest, by Leitner; Poet and Peasant, by Suppe; Morning, Noon and Night, by Suppe; Jolly Robbers, by Suppe; Seminramide, by Rossini, and Orpheus, by Offenbach.

5—"Bring Back My Daddy to Me," by G. W. Meyer. A valse moderato movement of exceptional tonal beauty. (Leo Feist edition.)

6—"America I Love You," "My Yankee Land," by Jack Frost. A wonderful inspiring and martial composition. (Published by the McKinley Music Co., 1501 E. 55th St., Chicago, Ill.)

7—"Say I to Myself, Says I," by H. Von Tilzer. A rollicking Irish song, a sure hit if played for Parlor Comedies. (Harry Von Tilzer edition.)

8—"A Little Bit of Sunshine." This number is also by James F. Hanley, writer of this month's sensational headliner, "Three Wonderful Letters from Home," "It is one of the best Jazz Fox Trots ever. (Shapiro Bernstein edition.)

9—"Overseas March," by Herbert W. Lowe. This new march by the composer of the ever-popular "On the Plattsburg March" is fully equal to its predecessor and in 6-8 time. (Oliver Ditson edition.)

10—"Tishomingo Blues," a new Western craze, published by J. W. Stern.

"The King of All Instruments"

It is a proven fact that "a successful musical interpretation is as necessary to a picture as good projection." The truth of this maxim born of experience, cannot be denied. Music with motion pictures provides "atmosphere" and establishes mood. It infuses the mute action of the motion drama with the life of tone and harmony. Properly used, it may be made to take the place of the spoken word, and underline every detail of picture action and registration with appropriate tonal comment, explanation or emphasis.

But music should never be considered an accompaniment to the motion picture, it should be a part of it. In this fact, accepted in theory and carried out in practice, we have the gist of music success in "pictures." Synchronization is its secret—the welding of picture movement and music movement, the matching of picture mood with music mood, the merging of picture and music in a unit of effect.

"Synchronization is the secret of a perfect musical accompaniment and it is the organ—the king of the instruments, the only medium where synchronization is really possible in the strictest sense of the word.

Signor Carlo Ronchi Has Been Engaged By Aubrey M. Kennedy As Conductor of the Orchestra at the New Symphony Theatre at Broadway and Ninety-fifth, New York

The man at the organ is the being with an orchestra at his finger ends. He is only a single person, an individual and yet he has at his instant command the resources of a pipe organ with its wonderful variety of stops, the tender, true tones of a violin, the brisk notes of a xylophone, the gay click of the castanets, the silver rattle of the tambourine and the syncopated beats of the drum.

He can produce every possible shade of expressive musical thought from the softest pianissimo to the loudest fortissimo.

There is no episode that he cannot make more thrilling, more touching, more enjoyable to the audience. As his fingers run over the keyboard he is master of every situation. He is the living interpreter of every shade of emotion registered by the silent players. He can express the sorrow of the life stories enacted there in the heart-searching melodies of that great organ's voice; or he can add zest and life to a comedy film with an instrumental accompaniment which puts a new bustle and spirit into the funmaking of the screen comedians.

No musical accompaniment can be called perfect if improvisation and perfect synchronization is impossible.

Improvisation creates that bond of sympathy and interest between audience and "show," which is the prime factor in the former's enjoyment of the latter.

Mere "timing" is not the true secret of successful improvising. It has its decided advantages, but its evident limitation as well. Adaptability, quickness in handling unforeseen contingencies developed in the projection of the pictures themselves, contingencies which call for instant decision on the part of the musician, a sense of fitness for "local color" are far more important. Imagination, constant attention to the principle of "flexible tempos," and absolute co-operation with the film operator at all times must underlie any motion picture improvising that deserves the name.

Can this be accomplished by an orchestra of 5, 10 or 15 men. "No," unless at least 5 or 6 rehearsals are possible.

The man at the organ or the man at the "one-man orchestra" is the one and only one who has at his command all effects which can only be produced by a large and efficient orchestra.

New Parkway Theatre Credit to Chicago

COMPLETELY remodeled and almost rebuilt, the old Parkway theatre at Clark street and Diversey boulevard, Chicago, was reopened Saturday night, May 4, as the Drury Lane theatre, under the ownership of the Drury Lane Amusement company and the management of W. H. Riddle, an old-time Chicago theatrical and picture-house manager.

The opening show was "Hearts or Diamonds?" first of the pictures of William Russell Productions, Inc., released by the Mutual Film Corporation. The house was packed for three performances. It has a capacity of 800.

Mr. Riddle went to unusual efforts to book a picture for his opening night which would be certain to please his patrons and at the close of each performance he stopped outgoing members of the audience to inquire as to the quality of the entertainment.

The Drury Lane is, to all intents and purposes, a new theatre. The lighting, heating and ventilating systems have been rebuilt, the house has been redecorated, a new screen built—the largest in Chicago—and a new $3,000 Kimball organ installed.

Mr. Riddle is a veteran Chicago theatrical manager and has been for three years manager of the Bertha theatre, Chicago.

Poli's, New Haven, to Be Rebuilt

NEW HAVEN is to have practically a new theatre this fall when Poli's is remodeled. Plans are now being completed by Thomas W. Lamb, of New York, architect of the Rialto and Rivoli and many other fine houses.

The plans call for the demolition of the front portion of the present frame building and the construction of a new and up-to-date structure about 35 by 60 feet and three stories in height. There will be two stores and the entrance of the theatre in front with the entrance leading to the grand lobby in the central section of the new building. An addition will also be erected at the rear of the present auditorium, the walls of which will stand. A portion of the space now occupied by the stage will be taken into the auditorium of the new house, affording a seating capacity of over 3,000. The interior of that part of the old building which will be retained will be reconstructed of fireproof materials.

Directory of New Theatres

FLORIDA

The new Garden theatre, at Pensacola, recently completed, was opened a week ago under most auspicious circumstances, with Theda Bara in "Madame Du Barry" as the attraction.

A new theatre is being built in Ybor City, which is the Latin Quarter of Tampa. A. H. La Belle, who controls the amusement business in this part of Tampa with three theatres, will have the lease of the new house.

Let Us Know When It is Ready and We Will Tell You the Data We Want

WE are anxious to print pictures and descriptions of the "Worth While Theatres" in this department—especially the new houses. However, with the present delays that are encountered in the shipment of building materials, it is impossible for us to keep any accurate account of the days for future openings and we invite managers to send in photographs of such new houses, both interior and exterior views together with description and we will then send a blank for the additional data that we need.

Established houses which have not been pictured in the NEWS are invited to share these columns. This matter is intended not only to give an account of the better houses, no matter the size, but also to give hints which may prove of value in future construction and equipment.

In sending photos be sure to enclose them in cardboard to prevent breakage.

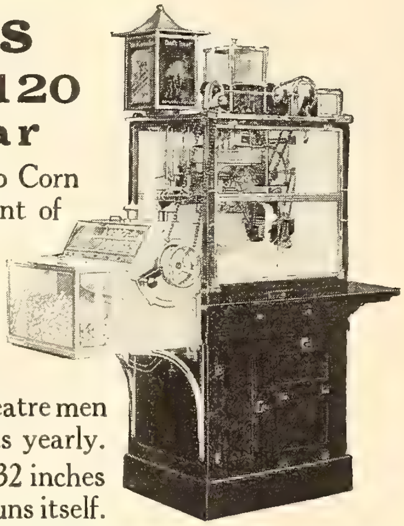
Make Two Profits from Theatre Patrons

$600 to $3,120 Net, A Year

The Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine is a power-plant of new-found profits in thousands of motion picture theatres, vaudeville and opera houses.

In cities, towns and villages, it is yielding theatre men $600 to $3,120 net profits yearly.

Occupies only 26 by 32 inches of waste floor space. Runs itself. Pops, flavors with pure creamery butter, and toasts each fairy white flake to a crackling hot crisp.



BUTTER-KIST
Pop Corn Machine

Human-like motion makes people stop and look. The coaxing fragrance makes them buy.

The toasty flavor brings them back. Attracts new trade—increases theatre attendance.

GEORGIA

Macon will have a twelve-story office building and a new theatre costing $500,000 within the next few months. G. Troup Howard and Brown Wimberly yesterday afternoon purchased the old Floyd house property, corner Wall street and Third street, paying $60,000 for it. The property is 91 feet on Third street and runs back 210 feet. Mr. Howard stated that he and Mr. Wimberly would begin the erection of a twelve-story office building with a theatre combined just as soon as they could secure possession from the present tenants, the leases now in effect running until October 1. The new building and theatre will cost in the neighborhood of $500,000, according to Mr. Howard.

ILLINOIS

Marseilles has in prospect a large $25,000 theatre, as a large theatrical corporation, of Chicago, has an option on the Galloway property. M. Engel, of Ottawa, is trying to close the deal. If he succeeds, a theatre which will seat 1,000 will be started soon, and it may be finished by September 1.

INDIANA

Negotiations are under way for the building of a motion picture and vaudeville theatre, with a seating capacity of 4,000, on the site of the old Empire theatre, at Wabash and Delaware streets, Indianapolis. Samuel Schiller, of the Schiller Film Company, Chicago, has submitted a proposition involving this plan to J. S. Cruse & Co., agents for the owners of the property. Whether the plan goes through depends on the owners.

"It is our intention," said Mr. Schiller, "to bring to Indianapolis some of the ideas of Chicago and New York. We have selected this location as being the most central for our purposes."

Thomas W. Davis, of Galveston, Cass County, has rented the old, aban-

KENTUCKY

W. O. Stiles, Ernest N. Fulton and Judge John Kelly, all of Bardstown, have purchased a piece of property at West Point, directly across from the Illinois Central depot, and it is their intention to remodel the hall now existing, and add a motion picture theatre and several stores.

MAINE

James W. Greely, of Portland, has purchased the old Williard Beach casino lot at South Portland and plans to develop it into a big pleasure resort. A casino will be erected, which will be used for motion pictures and dancing.

MINNESOTA

Charles C. Osterland is building a motion picture theatre at Dunning. A modern motion picture theatre is in course of erection at Winona, and is due for an early opening.

MONTANA

The new Liberty theatre, which has just been built at Great Falls, by H. C. Higgins at a cost of about $16,000, was opened recently to capacity business. The theatre is a one-story frame building 50 by 175 feet in dimensions. It has a level floor, 50 by 125, which can be used for dances or other affairs, and is provided with a stage and stage equipment for the showing of vaudeville or road company attractions. It will be used principally for picture shows. Manager Higgins turned the building over to the Red Cross chapter for the opening night and as a result quite a large fund was raised by means of various schemes. Several pigs, chickens and a calf were disposed of by the usual methods, the stock and poultry having been donated for that purpose. An excellent orchestra of 10 pieces furnished music for the dancing which was continued until a very late hour. Upwards of 800 people were in attendance. The affair was in charge of Dr. P. H. Brown and Mrs. J. Voden, of the local Red Cross committee.

NEBRASKA

Art. Johnson is building a new theatre at Stromsburg, to be called The Rialto, which will have a seating capacity of 500. Road shows and motion pictures will be featured.

NEW YORK

Shampan & Shampan have filed plans for a moving picture theatre to be erected at 1059 and 1061 Manhattan avenue, Brooklyn, for the Miller-Weiss Amusement Company.

OHIO

Mark Gates, the prospective manager of the new theatre at Dayton, to be called "The Dayton," is doing everything in his power to rush the structure to completion. He claims that no theatre between New York and Chicago can provide more comfort, conveniences or luxuries than can The Dayton. The building itself is thoroughly fire proof and exceeds the demands of the building code in the matter of safety precautions. The only wood used in the construction is to be found in the stage floor and the door and window casings which naturally are so far removed from each other as to make the possibility of fire very, very remote. The walls of the foyers will be decorated in ivory and blue and hung with masterpieces of art. The furnishings will be elegant. In addition to the showing

Simplex

"If he says so it must be true"

It is almost impossible to have expert knowledge of everything you buy.

The thing to do, therefore, is to buy of men who are experts—and honorable.

Such men know what is good and what isn't.

They'll tell you what is best for you.

And even if you doubt the wisdom of what they recommend, take their word for it. You'll win.

Another example came to our notice the other day, in the shape of a letter written to one of our Distributors. Here it is:

Philadelphia, April 16, 1918.

Mr. Lewis M. Swaab,
1327 Vine Street,
Philadelphia.

Dear sir:

I bought a Simplex from you about five years ago, at your solicitation, taking your word for it that the machine was better than anything on the market. But, frankly, I doubted your word.

Now I want to say to you that my Simplex machine has been running every day for almost five years, and it has not cost me more than about Ten Dollars during that time for repairs, and these were only incidentals.

I am so fond of the machine that if I could not get another I would not sell it at any price.

You are at liberty to use this letter at your pleasure.

Yours very truly,

Alfred D. Gregory

Lyric Theatre,
2nd & Morris Streets,

This letter is, in effect, written to YOU. And it tells you two things:

(1) The Simplex is, as we have told you, the Machine that costs little for repairs and gives Permanently Perfect Projection.

(2) The Simplex Dealer is a dependable man. Go to him to buy the Simplex and everything else you need and with his expert knowledge he'll help you succeed.

The Simplex Dealer makes money on your satisfaction—not on repairs

THIS presentation of "Prunella" is of unusual significance. It was when she was starring in the famous Little Theatre production of "Prunella" that Adolph Zukor first saw Marguerite Clark. So impressed was he with her charm that he at once made her a Paramount Star. Now, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, Marguerite Clark lives again the charming tale of the little girl who ran away with a strolling player

"BAREE, SON OF KAZAN"

From the Famous Novel of the Same Title

by JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Directed by David Smith

Hundreds of thousands of magazine readers are eagerly waiting to see on the screen what proved such an entrancing tale when published serially in one of the most widely circulated all-fiction magazines in the world.

This famous narrative of such intense heart-appeal, the story of Baree, the wolf dog faithful unto death, serves in the screen version as a background for a throbbing love-drama of the snow country—a master conception of the best known story-teller of the great Northwest.

Nell Shipman is again presented in the identical type of role that lifted her overnight into the front rank of film stars—the role of "the woman" in "God's Country and the Woman," a previous Vitagraph feature by James Oliver Curwood.

Your audiences who are craving a big, virile story, something different, cannot fail to be thrilled by this big picture, scened at the trading posts and 'mid the trackless wastes of the picturesque Northwest.

TRIANGLE

An Exhibitor—Exchange—Service Proposition

THE TRIANGLE Distributing Corporation is founded upon the three fundamental angles of a progressive business: the Customer—the Product—the Organization.

Three sides form the angles of this business—the Exhibitors, the Exchanges and Service.

The EXHIBITORS' side receives first consideration and "tops" this organization, since without Exhibitors there would be no need for Exchanges or Service. And every TRIANGLE Exhibitor is welcomed as a component part of this business.

EXCHANGES then, are operated on the principle that Exhibitors come first. Every employe who helps to construct this second side of TRIANGLE realizes that upon the welfare of the Exhibitors depends his welfare. And notice we say ExhibitorS—the plural—which means careful consideration to all alike, rich or poor—great or small—old or new. This brings us to the third side of our TRIANGLE.

SERVICE the only thing an Exchange has to sell. And good service, the only kind that can link TRIANGLE exchanges to efficient Exhibitors. The Exhibitor is efficient or he wouldn't be buying service. And TRIANGLE service is exactly the opposite to the old idea that Exhibitors must look out for themselves. TRIANGLE policy—to furnish the maximum service for the minimum price.

It is evident from the very construction of the TRIANGLE Distributing Corporation that steadily increasing profits will depend upon the cultivation and growth of the three factors—Exhibitors, Exchanges and Service.

And TRIANGLE profits are defined as a just reward for service rendered.

An expansion of the new kind of Service necessitates better Exchanges and more Exhibitors. Likewise the increasing number of Exhibitors means better Exchanges and better Service.

Exhibitors—Grasp the opportunity now of associating with TRIANGLE—the Distributing Corporation that cooperates for the mutual benefit of all.

Plank No. 3

"To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its OWN control."

The "AFFILIATED" Platform

1—To insure EXHIBITOR MANAGEMENT and CONTROL in very fact, as well as promise.

2—To in no way disturb existing booking organizations, but rather to encourage them.

3—To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its OWN control.

4—To maintain all the benefits of "Open Booking," and at the same time provide a CONSISTENT and DEPENDABLE schedule of releases.

5—To secure, not only ALL the concessions in rental prices which the combined buying power of exhibitors will earn, but the MAJOR SHARE of all excess profits as well.

6—To distribute the cost of all productions on a fair and business basis to each booking association, and to every member of such an association.

7—To regulate expenditures, according to sound business methods and to protect exhibitors against excessive salaries, extravagant advertising and pretentious executive offices.

8—To arrange, on behalf of the booking associations, now existing, and such others as shall be formed, for an affiliation with a national, or central clearing house, upon terms that are JUST and EQUITABLE to all concerned.

Protection—Plus

vs.

Promotion—Minus

EVERY exhibitor dollar put into the AFFILIATED plan must return one hundred cents with interest—not one hundred cents, less ten cents for promotion charges.

This is assured by the fact that the exhibitor's dollar is at all times under his own control—not under the control of promoters.

Not a dollar of his money is used to finance or promote the AFFILIATED Distributors Corporation. Every penny of it is kept intact in the depository of the exhibitor's own booking association.

The exhibitor pays a modest membership fee to his local booking association. This membership fee, together with those of his fellow exhibitors, is placed in their bank as a trust fund to guarantee to the producer the cost of his picture, plus a profit of twenty-five per cent.

This membership fee is a small fraction of the amount many companies require as a deposit. Unlike most deposits, however, these funds draw interest while in trust.

The funds are administered by the bank selected by the booking association. The AFFILIATED has no jurisdiction over them nor access to them. They are simply the tangible evidence of the association's good faith.

In return for this assurance of good faith, the exhibitor not only receives pictures on a definite price basis, but gets back fifty per cent of all the money earned by the picture over and above its scheduled quota. Of the remaining fifty per cent, the AFFILIATED gets twenty-five per cent and the producer twenty-five per cent.

The exhibitor is in no way obligated, save to pay for the picture which he selects, while he, in turn, is at all times protected in full.

Any booking plan, less secure, must invite speculation and risk.

"Little Talks with Foreign Buyers" No.—12

SPECIALS!

HAVE you noticed in reading " export items " in the American trade papers, the frequency with which special features for foreign distribution shift about from agent to agent. John Smith offers them in May, John Brown in June, John Green in July, and Hevin Nosehoo in August. Isn't it significant that when Inter-Ocean is announced as exporter for a feature, it remains the exporter? The lucky pair stay true: there is no hasty divorce! " They live happily ever after! " You only hear of separation when the feature is separated from us by a BUYER. What's the reason? Merely that Inter-Ocean enjoys the confidence of foreign buyers by offering them ONLY what Inter-Ocean knows they can use—and that special features handled by Inter-Ocean have ALL had to come up to this test.

For instance:

The Pyramid Company's great productions: Lewis S. Stone in "Inside the Lines" (6 reels), and "The Man of Bronze" (6 reels).

Selexart's three strong specials: Rhea Mitchell in "Honor's Cross" (6 reels), Howard Hickman in "Blue Blood" (6 reels), Rhea Mitchell and Howard Hickman in "Social Ambition" (7 reels).

Dear Mr. Rowland:-

I cannot refrain from writing you regarding the wonderful success attained by Mme. Nazimova in "TOYS OF FATE" which opened here at the Strand Theatre, last Sunday.

I thought "REVELATION" a great picture, but unquestionably in my mind this will meet with even greater success, owing to its tremendous appeal to the masses.

Nazimova is a marvelous star, and exhibitors everywhere should make every effort to book this production, as undoubtedly it should prove to be one of the strongest box-office attractions of the season. Please accept my heartiest congratulations.

With kindest personal regards, I beg to remain,

Yours most sincerely,

H. Edel.

DIRECTOR.......................................George D. Baker
SCENARIO BY.......................................June Mathis
CAMERAMAN.......................................Eugene Gaudio
AS A WHOLE..........Beautiful star with pep, grace and fascinating personality registers real emotion in artistic, distinctive production
STORY........Gypsy desiring revenge marries daughter to man who stole girl's mother; has good dramatic moments. May be illogical but surely interesting
DIRECTION........Excellent; made situations register and gave truly classy atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY.......................................Exceptionally fine
LIGHTINGS.......Some exquisite and all very good indeed
CAMERA WORK.......................................Excellent
STAR.......................................A delight
SUPPORT.......................................Very capable
EXTERIORS..............Composition of some very artistic; always pleasing
INTERIORS..............Very good; many effective lightings
DETAIL..............Very good; title illustrations excellent
CHARACTER OF STORY....A couple of rough spots, but will ride because beautifully done
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......................................6,000 feet

OH, boy! That "gel" can sure troupe! We've had a lot of 'em from the stage try to bust through on the screen, but most of them stubbed their toe about the first or second bust.

Sometimes this has been because the stage favorites were getting too old to stand the searching eye of the camera and sometimes it was because they had really been getting by on the stage because of publicity or favoritism instead of merit. In quite a number of cases failure on the screen followed success on the stage because of the different environment and conditions and the inability to register the voice.

But Nazimova—say, she just simply flashes onto the screen and owns it. She feels what she is doing and knows how to express emotion by body movements as well as the shifting of the facial muscles. Nazimova need never return to the stage if she likes the freedom of film work and the beautiful checks film "maggots" can write. She is there!—and she can stay there—as one of our greatest emotional film stars!

George Baker is deserving of a tremendous amount of credit for presenting the little beauty to splendid advantage. Some stars who tried to do screen work were killed early by bad direction and poor lighting.

In this Nazimova has been beautifully lighted, and the direction of the entire offering is excellent. It is dramatic, interesting and decidedly distinctive as to atmosphere with an occasional laugh in the early part to carry it along properly.

I want to comment particularly on the composition of some of the exteriors taken in Florida. They were exquisite, and the lighting and camera work throughout was excellent. The sets carried the same impressive atmosphere, and from a production viewpoint this certainly hits on high.

The illustrated titles made by Ferdinand Earle were the best work of this sort I have ever seen. They were truly artistic and helped maintain the "class" of the production.

The star's pep, grace and sincerity made it possible for her to dominate always without this dominance being objectionable. Frank Currier, as Nazimova's father, Charles Bryant as the 'ero, Irving Cummings as the gypsy lover, and Edward J. Connelly as the dope-eating prosecutor were all excellent. Dodson Mitchell and Nola Mac were quite good types and very satisfactory.

The story centered about an old gypsy's desire to avenge the death of his wife, caused by Mitchell, through having Nazimova marry the man who had stolen her mother. It had many truly tense dramatic moments and held the interest all the way.

The worst spot in the story was the awful coincidence of the gypsy hubby "happening" to be outside just when the roue walked out on Nazimova in the prologue. That could be and should be covered up by a better title explaining that he had traced her.

CUT LOOSE, BOOST STAR BIG; THEY'LL SURE LIKE THIS

The Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you haven't trained your gang to turn out in bunches to see Nazimova, get busy and start something, because she "has it," boys, and folks are going to like her if you get them in.

Make a genuine fuss about her sensational successes on the stage, because she has been a success—a big one—and is right now. She is at present starring in New York in Ibsen's "A Doll's House."

If you attack this right, you'll get both the highbrows and "the mob" and please them, too. Play up her name big and then add a little personal touch of your own about the fact that she is "one" of the "stage stars" who has more than made good on the screen.

For the mob—get one of her most beautiful photographs and bill her as "the most fascinating woman in theatricals" that should start something. If you have a really rough gang, bill her as the "vampire every one loves."

Go easy on the story itself. The plot holds, but will not stand searching analysis as to plausability. Your gang won't care a rap, however, because the star and production simply smother the plot.

The title itself will mean very little in any one's young life, so center all of your attention on Nazimova. For a stunt you could offer a prize on a contest as to how to pronounce her name. Get your newspaper to pull this for you. There has been a lot of discussion on that point for many years.

Go to this boys—it's a real feature!

These windows are on Market Street, in the heart of the city

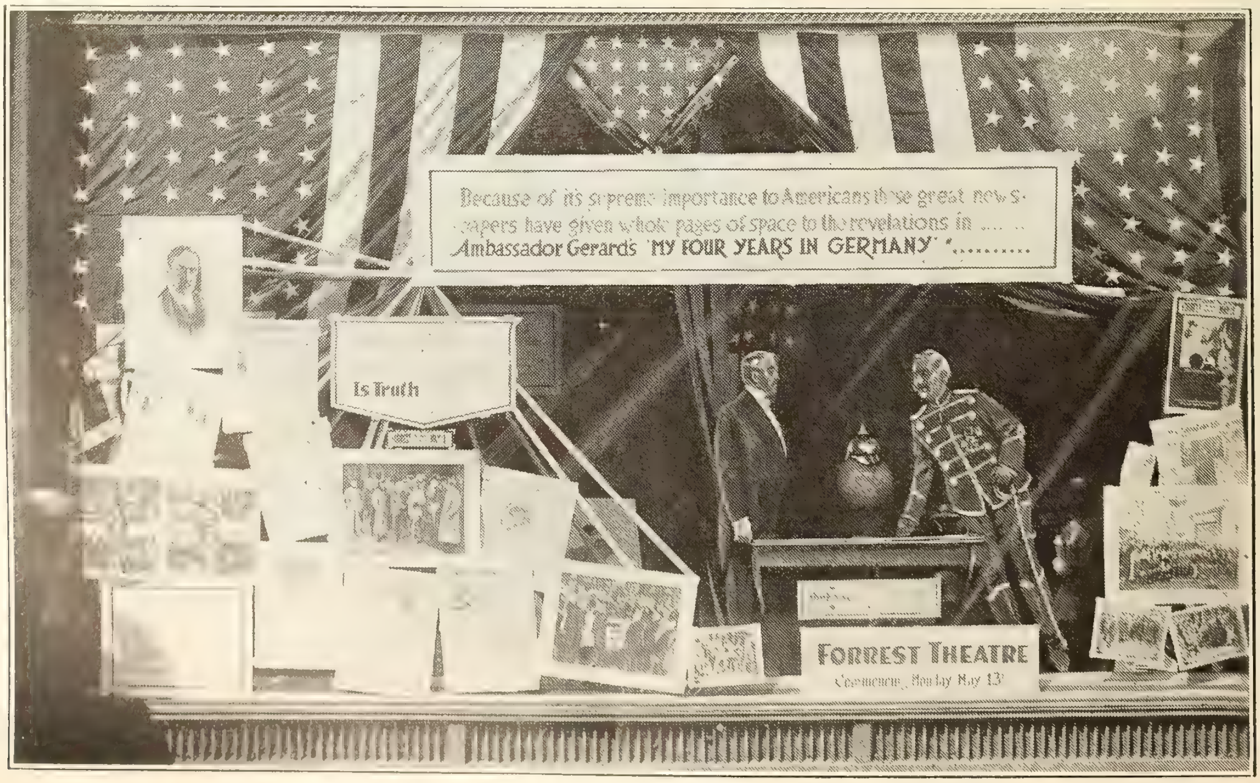
If You Can Get a Window—Use It As They Did These In Philadelphia

The upper photograph was taken from across the street and gives a general idea of the showing which thousands of people stopped to look at and read during the two weeks before the season opened.

The lower photograph gives a more detailed picture of one of the windows. The figures are hand painted cut-outs set up with real furniture. The floors were covered with rugs. In the scene illustrated there is a geographical globe of the world, surmounted by a German helmet on the table. A half drawn sword lay across the table, handle toward the Kaiser. Laying against the base of the globe is a copy of Ambassador Gerard's book. The card hanging from front of table bears this caption: The Kaiser: "I'll stand no nonsense from America." In the window to right of entrance the figures of Von Jagow and Gerard face each other. They stand behind a flat topped desk, upon which are the usual articles such as ink stand, pens, desk pad, miscellaneous papers, etc. The card hanging from front of desk reads: Von Jagow: "We have 500,000 German reservists in America who will rise if war is declared." Gerard: "And we have 501,000 lamp posts from which they will find themselves hanging before night." The group in the large window to the extreme right is Gerard and the Kaiser in slightly different poses. The caption on card hanging from front of small table alongside which figures stand, reads: "America won't fight."

The display fixed to glass is made up of pages from newspapers which have published Ambassador Gerard's book and lobby display photographs, window cards, etc. Reprints of the four pages (scenes from the film) of the New York American make very effective and convincing display matter. The name of theatre and showing dates are on small cards placed between other display matter at various points where they are readable but unobtrusive. A day or two before the season opened a ticket box was placed in the doorway with a sign—readable across the street—announcing the down town seat sale. The copy on the various signs and cards was not of the sensational type. Altogether, the display is convincing and, the number of readers it attracted being taken into consideration, must have been well worth what it cost. The photographs were taken in the morning at an hour when the street was least crowded. During the shopping hours the sidewalk before them was crowded with groups of interested people, each of whom was a possible ticket purchaser.

First National Exchanges have materials for such displays for "My Four Years in Germany." Bookstores will be found eager to co-operate.



Because of its supreme importance to Americans these great news-papers have given whole pages of space to the revelations in ...... Ambassador Gerard's "MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY" ....

B. A. Cooper, Independent Film Exchange Co., Omaha, Neb., writes under date of May 14, 1918:

"If the bookings keep up the same as they are at the present time, I am sure that I will have to order a couple more prints" (4 in all).

To the Boss of the "News"

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Thanks for "proclaiming" my new service WID'S DAILY as "readable."

It's durn nice to report that lots of good men and true—exhibitors, producers, stars and directors—have said the same.

Now, about my remark to you about seeing The News on my trip—Yes, I sure did, and frankly it was the best liked of the old trade papers. . . .

I did say that "another trade paper was weak," and that another was "nowhere in sight." I found "The News" in most all the theatres, but I did not say that I found it in every one of them.

But . . . your publication was not altogether exempt from the general complaint of most of the thousand or more live-wire exhibitors with whom I had long talks on business conditions in my four months' trip of investigation!

These men say this:

First—that the printing of press-agent bunk clutters up the trade papers so that it is a task to read them.

Second—that the manufacturers are wasting much money (which the exhibitor eventually pays), buying space in so-called trade papers which he, the exhibitor, never sees.

Third—that colored inserts and superlative adjectives don't sell film.

What the exhibitor wants, as I understand it, and as I hope to give it to him in WID'S DAILY is . . .

the news, told briefly and accurately without bunk . . .

intelligent, honest reviews written by an experienced man who has sufficient at stake to keep him careful . . .

and concise, sanely worded announcements of what the manufacturer has to sell, explaining why it is salable and how it can be sold.

I find that producers are planning to eliminate the waste advertising outlay, and are analyzing the situation as never before, in an attempt to get their advertising on an efficient basis. Personal exploitation representatives in each exchange and trade paper copy with sales value are needed.

You ask me what I think of the fact that you have had $4,000.00 in receipts for renewal subscriptions in the last three months. All I can say, Bill, is—Good boy! As I remember it, you recently announced that it cost you a quarter of a million to get out the "News" this year, so the "four thou" will help some—won't it?

You ask if an exhibitor pays for something he doesn't use—I hope not . . . I did find that many of them were not paying for several papers they were getting regularly.

I have no free list—my readers pay ten dollars a year, and so I'm sure they use WID'S. I satisfied myself fully on that point on my trip. My publication always has been, and always will be, a service. The trade paper which expects to survive must also become a service.

All worth-while exhibitors are busy—they want meat—not bunk!

Does this cover the points you asked about?

National Anti - Mis Frame League,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York City, N.Y.

Gentlemen:

We notice on a number of our film containers returned after being on exhibition in different parts of the country a poster to the effect that the operator of the theatre showing the film is a member of your National Anti-Misframe League.

As the writer has charge of the Motion Picture Department of the above company he would appreciate an explanation as to the nature of this League and the methods employed by it. We request this information because we find that film is always returned in good condition by the League members who use this sticker.

Thanking you for any information which you can furnish us, we remain,

Yours very truly,

WILLYS OVERLAND INC.

E R Voorhees

Willys Knight Division.
Sales Department.

ERV:S

The letter quoted above has just been received and shows the far-reaching effect of the National Anti-Misframe League.

This league was started by the "NEWS" some months ago and now has almost a thousand operator members. These men are all pledged to return film to the exchange from which it comes in better condition than they received it in wherever this is possible.

This is the natural result of inspecting all film before showing it on the screen. This should be done in every house for it means increased patronage and greater prosperity for the theatre.

Watch our Projection Department every week. You will find it well worth your while. See that your operator does not overlook it either, as it is compiled particularly for his benefit and enlightenment.

Remember any questions which you may ask on projection or any other subject will be answered promptly and in full. We are here to serve you in every possible way.

Putting a Picture Over

HERE is a remarkable instance of showmanship.

It is given principally to introduce the picture industry's most pressing problem and its various angles.

Balaban and Katz of Chicago, showmen of the first order and owners of eight theatres, played Chaplin's " A Dog's Life " recently to the house record of their Central Park theatre.

The following week " The Whispering Chorus " was booked for four days.

A preview of the picture upheld our Mr. Harrison's review—that it was big dramatically but gruesome as entertainment; that it would get the business, but it would not leave a happy taste.

Balaban and Katz decided to " get the business "; they also decided that good showmanship could take the edge off the picture's morbid side and bring out fully its brilliant dramatic appeal.

The music was carefully adapted to this end. It was interpretative but always sympathetic. A sextette sang softly and sympathetically throughout the picture's tensest parts. A green spotlight was thrown at times on the orchestra.

The house advertising, carried on during the crowds of the Chaplin week, concentrated on one point: the dramatic tension of the picture.

Neatly typed signs in the lobby carried this message, substantially: The climax of " The Whispering Chorus " is so tremendous, so gripping, that no one will be ushered into the theatre during the last thirty minutes of the play. You must come on time, so as not to disturb others nor spoil for yourself one moment of this remarkable play, etc.

A trailer of about 250 feet was made and inserted in the news weekly. It contained a thrilling flash from the picture, a pounding subtitle and the above admonition to the public.

Every one of the four days jumped up over the preceding one. Box office lines began a block and a half long and increased. The total receipts of the four days were within seventeen dollars of the Chaplin record breaker.

This is showmanship.

This is advertising— an outstanding example of a style we called attention to last week and which we believe will be more and more used, namely, plot advertising, whereby the human interest appeal of the picture is analyzed and presented with suspense to the public.

* * * *

What's the Answer

THERE'S an obvious lesson in the above instance.

This exploitation idea was worth a few thousand dollars to the Central Park theatre.

Consider its aggregate worth to fifty or a hundred first run houses alone; and to many hundred more theatres with sufficient initiative and facilities to use the idea in one form or another.

Here, quite evidently, an exploitation idea would almost double a picture's normal earnings.

Is it at all improbable that the showmanship principle —the one big, practical selling idea in each release can be dug out well in advance and given to the exhibitor in time for the first run?

We believe not.

There's an idea back of every worth while picture—an idea of much consequence, since it governed the selection of the vehicle and its picturization. This idea should be made clearly known as a selling idea, before the picture goes out.

We are aware of the fact, as we have stated, that the producer is spending much effort and money today in giving selling aids with his pictures. He—or at least the leading producer—realizes clearly that pictures today must be sold clear through to the public.

But there's a danger that this effort become stereotyped, that a mass of exploitation material be given much of which is unusable, that, above all, the simple, vital principle of showmanship be missed or misstated in all the matter sent out.

We are aware, too, that the strain of catching releases is a handicap to the preparation of pertinent and adequate exploitation aids. But surely the chance of doubling a picture's earning power is worth a reorganization of present routine, possibly a complete revolution in releasing policies.

* * * *

The Shopping Era

AS a matter of fact, the production and distribution of pictures today must be regulated to permit of their proper exploitation.

Exploitation means too much to be made incidental or impossible.

The public is shopping today for its pictures. Picture theatres—the big houses, at least— are getting right down to the advertising essentials of the department stores. They've got to advertise successfully their wares, often in stern competition.

And it's a fact today, a plainly evident one, that the big picture houses are better geared up in advertising resources than many a producing and distributing concern here at the headwaters of the industry.

As the public shops, so must the exhibitor shop for pictures. And he will shop more and more for pictures. That is inevitable.

This shopping—beginning with the great force of public demand—is the heavy underlying current of this business. It is just beginning, but it is a mighty strong current already, and it will constantly gain in strength because it is logical. It will be foolish in the long run to try and buck it with counter-minded policies of production and distribution.

* * * *

What About the Exchanges?

IN the general effort on the part of the producer and distributor today to sell pictures to the public the exchange is a crucial factor.

The exchange marks the straight avenue from the producer—to the exhibitor—to the public. The exchange can keep this avenue clear or block it like a blind barrier.

In this connection we hear much praise of some exchanges and much censure for others.

It is idle, obviously, for the producer to promote showmanship, to make and advertise selling aids for the exhibitor if the exchange will not lend its full facilities and intelligence to the movement.

The exchanges can block the movement if they will; and many are doing just that thing today.

The exchange of the future will be one that divides—at least equally—its best effort and facilities between booking its product and seeing that the exhibitor resells it successfully to the public.

The business will demand this.

The exchange whose whole effort is to sell the exhibitor is destined to go into the discard; and so will its tribe of film salesmen whose ability is but one jump ahead of a pushcart peddler and whose ethics rival those of a second story man.

* * * *

What of the Trade Press?

THE trade press is an integral part of the merchandizing of pictures.

Like the exchange, it is a factor in the line of effort, beginning with the producer and ending only with the public.

It is of parallel importance with the exchange.

Suppose we diagram it this way:

Producer—Exchange, Trade Paper—Exhibitor—Public.

The producer now uses the exchange to supply the exhibitor with showmanship suggestions, the newspaper advertising and press matter, the posters, window cards and other accessory aids necessary to picture exploitation to the public.

He should use the trade press—its advertising pages—in much the same way.

Once the picture is announced these pages should begin immediately to help the exhibitor resell the picture.

They should give the vital selling idea, and follow this at once with samples of newspaper ads and press matter, illustrations of lobby display and store window dressing, window cards, posters, etc.

They should advertise the mechanical aids available at the exchanges.

Why not? This is the highest value—the true value—of these pages.

The situation today is simply this:

The status of the exchange has been advanced. It used to sell pictures only; now it helps merchandize them to the public.

But the trade press advertising is largely back where the exchange used to be. Its advertising aims mostly to sell pictures—by the old exchange methods of superlatives, etc. The main effort is to bang away at the exhibitor.

These pages should and can merchandize pictures.

They are of great interest now as news, as business announcements. They can be made of continuous value as exploitation aids.

* * * *

We Are Doing It

TURN right now to our Exhibitors' Service pages. Here we are merchandizing pictures, showing later run houses how the first run theatres put the picture over, giving the Rothapfel presentations, giving showmanship ideas and principles, etc.

We wish we had a hundred pages for just this service. We consider it to be the backbone of exhibitor success today.

We shall constantly increase this service. Already we are planning a comprehensive enlargement of it.

We ask the advertiser, in all earnestness, to add, in his pages, the ones he buys, to what we are doing in our own editorial pages.

We ask him to buy these pages for the exhibitor, not for his own edification—for the pictures' sake, the exhibitors' picture and his picture, to the end that its gross earning power may be vastly increased through added public patronage.

This can be done; it should and will be done.

Who will be first in the most necessary step?

There's Good Timber in the West

LOTS of good in the picture industry has come to it from the West and Northwest—good theatres, good policies, like longer runs; good newspaper and other advertising, good showmanship, and good men.

Within the last two weeks three very responsible positions have been filled as follows: J. W. Allen of San Francisco, special representative to all Famous Players-Lasky Exchanges; J. S. Woody of Seattle, field manager of Select Pictures; Tom North of San Francisco and Seattle, Eastern District Manager for Pathe Exchange.

Tom North, by the way, deserves more credit than was ever given him for picture exploitation on the Coast.

Send us more timber from the Pacific!

We Are Glad to Say This

GOLDWYN announces that its production output will be doubled beginning September next.

The announcement is not only of considerable trade importance, but it also calls for comment which, in our opinion, is well deserved and which strictly echoes the feelings of leading exhibitors today towards the leading producing concerns.

Goldwyn has shown courage and principles—the courage necessary to a very heavy investment in production, the principle of keeping every picture clean.

Prominent personages have been added to the screen; new stars have been made, and production has been given, at whatever expense, that tone which makes decidedly for the greater motion picture public. Mistakes have been made, the announcement frankly concedes; but the producer bears the big brunt of these. The screen itself in any event is much advanced by such substantial and courageous striving after its ideals.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

THESE prosperity days are all wrong. They don't give Broadway time to manufacture rumors—and without rumors, where is the spice of life for the Astor Lobby Lizards?

With practically every big distributing organization taking a "Special" under its arm that is piling up undreamed of profits—it sure is beginning to look like "the good old days." And if the "Specials" are numerous now—just keep your eyes open during the summer and fall. Because more than one manufacturer has said to us in the past week or so:

"Why, we've just discovered where the money is. We're going to concentrate on fewer and bigger subjects next year."

Which reminds us that the latest of the "Specials" is announced via the advertising pages this week. It's "To Hell with the Kaiser"—the picture and the sentiment both belonging to Richard A. Rowland, of Screen Classics, Inc., and Metro Pictures Corp.

We are really surprised at Brother Rowland's language. In fact, a trifle shocked. But who would forego the pleasure of advertising his picture by repeating, over and over, the title?

"To Hell with the Kaiser."

* * * *

Speaking of Astor Lobby Lizards—which we did a few lines back—after the theatre hour on Thursday night that gathering spot looked like a picture exposition. P. A. Powers, Lewis J. Selznick, Joe Lee, Louis Mayer—oh, well, if we had the room we'd have to give you a Who's Who of "Magnate Row." Maybe—who knows?—maybe "P. A." was signing raw stock contracts.

We'll bet, at any rate, that "P. A." is some salesman.

ONE of the news stories in this issue concerns the possibility of harmoniously reuniting the two exhibitor organizations.

It is a fact that the prospect of securing an amalgamation is a rosy one. But at the present stage of the game there are two important obstacles. In order, they are:

First, the suspicion on the part of many A. E. A. leaders that all present talk of harmony is largely in the nature of a "ballyhoo" for the coming Boston Exposition.

Second, the fear felt by these same men that any advances towards harmony made by them will be fruitless by the necessary resurrection of the trade paper question at Boston.

Balancing these statements is the fact that sincere workers in both the M. P. E. L. and the A. E. A. like Sydney Cohen and Frank Rembusch are pulling for harmony.

* * * *

Met P. A. Parsons, of Pathe, hurrying down Broadway to a National Association meeting. "Going to talk Exposition?" we asked.

Then we learned that "Pap" is one advertising man who doesn't look forward with pleasure to the seven-day joyrides that Expositions are. "Pap" probably knows that spending several days and oodles of coin at expositions is not selling any pictures—while we know that "Pap" spending several days at his desk and much less coin is selling pictures.

THERE'S an interesting little item in this week's NEWS from the Red Cross telling of the school that has been established to teach projection machine operating to returning maimed soldiers.

Movements of similar nature met with success in England and Canada without working hardship on present operators. The support of theatre managers and operators in this country is now solicited.

No cause could be worthier.

* * * *

While the Red Cross is on our mind let us extend a hearty word of congratulation on the generosity of the Nicholas Power Company and the Jaxon Film Company in donating their trade advertising space to the Red Cross cause.

We could write a lot more appreciation—but we couldn't say any more than: "Good luck Messrs. Earle and Tichenor."

WHILE there are as yet no signs of a nationally organized movement, it would seem from scattered reports reaching us that teachers in various sections have adopted a crusade to induce the children and their parents to stay away from picture theatres during the war.

For that reason you must be sure to read the advertisement on page 3249, which our Exhibitors' Service Bureau prepared for a Southern exhibitor a few weeks ago. The advertisement was aimed to meet just such a condition as now seems to be spreading over the country.

We did not publish the advertisement at that time because we considered it only one of the dozens of problems handled by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau each week—and which, if all were published, would require the whole book, and then some.

As it is the Service Bureau is planning for many more pages and new ideas within the next few months. The first of the innovations concerns S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis.

The announcement is on page 3267 of this issue. Read it.

FRED WARREN NOTE: That series of articles on prominent live wire exhibitors resulting from your recent trip is making most interesting reading. Why not go farther—combine the series into an illustrated booklet: "Who's Who and How They Do It."

The meat you could put into the booklet would make exhibitors glad to write for it. Which means that you could "key" your advertisements. And "keying" your advertisements would mean that the NEWS——

Well, occasionally modesty does overcome us.

FRANKLY, we are unable to work up any great personal enthusiasm over the fifteen cent coin idea. Perhaps it is because, in what must have been a forgetful moment we recently read a serious technical discussion aiming to show the difficulty of introducing a new standard of value into our present coinage system. We remember being convinced that a fifteen cent coin, no matter what metal were selected, would be either too bulky or too closely alike in size to some present coin for convenience.

But barring these probably irrelevant thoughts, it seems ridiculous for any one to attempt to take the credit for the fifteen cent coin from Terry Ramsaye and Mutual.

* * * *

It's strange—but press agents sometimes take their own stuff seriously. Just now Harry Reichenbach and H. M. Berman are engaging in an epistolary tilt over the respective box-office abilities of "Tarzan" and "The Kaiser." If we had the space we'd publish the letters—since we haven't the space, we refer to you our Box-Office Reports, which show that both pictures are breaking box-office records with monotonous regularity. Selah!

Fairness for Exchanges and Exchangemen

As Viewed by "Bolshevik"

DEAR Mister Editor:—

I have read, and re-read, the letter from the aggrieved exhibitor who chooses to cloak his identity under an alias, or whatever you term the signature of an anonymous letter-writer, and I am moved to send in an answr (also anonymous), giving the exchange manager's side of the matter. I know you will be glad to publish it unless you have already received some more able defense than my own.

I AM AN EXCHANGE MANAGER! I don't admit, or confess this; I glory in it. I have been an exchange man and manager for nearly six years, and during that time I have kidded myself into the idea that I have learned much about the film business and more about the "average exhibitor." I have dealt with the animal for a sufficient length of time to have been able to form a pretty accurate idea as to what makes his wheels go round.

I am sorry to have to write anonymously but there is no question but that my superiors would frown upon my attempt at a defense of the usual exchange methods and if they should learn that I have written this letter they would hang a "To Let" sign on me and drop me down the elevator shaft. My company won't stand for any sort of attack on exhibitors and I know this to be the policy in several other concerns, as I have been connected with seven different organizations in the six years I have been in the business (which sort of backs up your recent article on the subject of shifting exchange managers).

At present I am manager of the New York exchange of one of the major organizations but I have worked in several other cities and met all sorts and conditions of exhibitors until I believe I could almost draw a composite picture which would be entitled to the caption of "The Average Exhibitor." Instead I am going to tell you a few burning truths about "Exhibitors I have known."

"The Innocence of the farmer lad is worldly wisdom compared with what an exchangeman expects when he first enters the game."

Taking "Anarchist's" main grievance as a starter; now, I won't go so far as to say that the average exhibitor is an illiterate lowbrow because I am uncertain as to the exact definition of this term. I have known exhibitors who signed their contracts by making a cross after which I wrote "his mark" and I have known others who spoke and wrote a half a dozen languages, and knew everything from the history of the Roman Empire to the latest scandal from the studios. Somewhere between these extremes lies the "average exhibitor." (No, the word was used unintentionally but I guess I'll just let it stand; "lies" is sometimes tersely descriptive of certain exhibitors).

"The camouflage that covers a multitude of sins on the exhibiting end is enough to make a conscientious exchangeman throw up his hands and job."

Let me go on record right here as conceding that the average exhibitor of today is a vast improvement over his predecessor of four or five years ago, and it is certainly a pleasure, as well as a great relief, to watch the constant influx into the game of this higher type of exhibitors. I don't want to spend much time dwelling on the past, but I do want to say that not so very long ago it behooved the exchange manager to lock his roll in the office safe every morning before he opened up for business, or by night it would have been numbered among the missing.

In those days the cashier had to be an expert accountant, a private detective, an accomplished linguist and a rough and ready bouncer, all rolled into one. The crimes which were daily perpetrated in the name of "adjustment" were nothing short of appalling. Today it is much more politely done, but done it IS, and often. They most all speak English nowadays (even if "reduction" and "credit" forms most of their vocabulary), and they have cut out the rough stuff, but I sometimes become convinced that we have simply traded the rough-neck yeggman for the gentlemanly cracksman.

I am going to enumerate, hastily, a few things which the average exchange manager has to watch for constantly in his dealings with some of "Anarchist's" highbrow exhibitors. And I'd be willing to wager a considrable sum that Mr. Anarchist has pulled some of these things himself. Here's a partial list:—

N. G. checks;
Contract repudiators;
Switching;
Film manglers;
Bad accounts;
Hardluck stories;
Bill disputers;
Holdovers;
Dupers;
Plain "gyppers";

The middleman or manufacturer dealing with retailers in any other line must expect to get hooked with a few bad accounts and an occasional N. G. check, but do they have to face anything comparable to these other traits or tricks as we do with exhibi-

FABLES OF AN INDUSTRY'S GOOD NAME

No. II—The Exchangeman

John Smith was an Exhibitor who believed in giving the public what they Want. And he did, even if he had to shove It down their Throats. He specialized in Gripping Dramas for Red Blooded Men and Women. He gripped some of them so hard that they held on to the seats and Called for Help. And did not Come Back.

One day, while Smith was figuring his Red Ink Balance and doping it out that he might make some money if he could only install Automatic Projectors and Fire the Operator, a Film Magnate entered.

The Magnate was a Gentleman of the Old School who knew that Two are born every minute. The second one to Trim the first.

"I have just completed a Wonderful Feature and I am looking for a Live Exchange to handle it," he said.

"Yes," said the Exhibitor.

"Let me tell you the Story." And he Did. "Now, wouldn't you Stand in Line to Get it for your House?" "There are 1,600 Theatres in your territory. At only Twenty-Five Dollars a day, 'THE VICES OF THE TENDERLOIN' will Net you $4,000.00."

Smith, now an Exchangeman, hired a Salesman to Book the Film.

This Bird was a Lulu. He had so much Nicotine Sunburn on one Mitt that it looked like the Southern Exposure of a Ham. On the other Fin he wore Green Chalk. When he talked his listeners felt as though they were holding a Cue, a Cigarette and an Investment in the Future of the Nine Ball.

The balance of his Picture can be directed without a Scenario.

Pizarro discovered the Aztecs.

Another State rights Salesman discovered Smith.

Both cashed in.

This time the Argument was that two pictures could be booked as Cheaply as One.

They can if they Are.

Smith might have Muddled Through if his Exchange Business had not Killed his House.

He was his own Best Customer, and gave his Private Brand of Films a Return Engagement every other week.

JACK NATTEFORD.

tors? Indeed they don't. Maybe that is one reason why exchange managers are paid more than meets with the approval of Mr. Anarchist. One of the first requisites in a good exchange manager is the ability to know when an exhibitor is lying and when he is on the level and this talent is called into play many times each working day.

I want to introduce to you first the exhibitor with the hard luck story as he is the most frequent and most persistent. Do you know that bird has my most sincere admiration. He knows more harrowing tales than old John Y. Sobb himself. If you could assemble all the different kinds of hard luck he has laid claim to you would have Jonah looking like a piker. As a spinner of tales he is in a class with Baron Munchausen. And some of them are still original, although most of them steal each other's stuff to the extent that now we can catalogue most of the yelps and sift them down pretty well.

Everything is out against them from war to weather; in the summer theirs is a strictly winter business; in the winter they have what is essentially a summer business; their patronage has fallen off sumpin woeful and who should meet this shortage if not the exchange? One old genius had me sitting with a lump in my throat and tears in my eyes as he told me of the things his opposition was doing to him. I made him a substantial reduction and gave him a lot of advice for which he thanked me, sobbing as he did so. I was SUCH a kind man. Oh, well; we all have to learn. It seems that his "opposition" was managed and operated by his brother-in-law and that they were partners in both places.

Once in a while you hear an original one. Not long ago I was visited by an up-state exhibitor who looked like a Rube, acted like a Rube, talked like a Rube and always hastened to tell you he WAS a RUBE. He was in a town of 3,000 which he always referred to as "the village." (Let me offer this in passing; look out for those poor unsophisticated Rubes. DON'T play poker with them and don't try to sell them any ideas because it will cost you money. I know.) Well our friend was dissolved in tears and it would take the late John McCullough to put over his ravings. And the gist of it was that, although born in this country, he had a German name, his house had been built by a German contractor using German mechanics and his operator was a German. As a result, he said, people wouldn't patronize his house, and it was up to us to reduce him from eighteen per to ten. Hellup!

We have the ethical gent who contracts for one day service and then holds it over for a second day or persuades us to ship out early on the plea of bad train service and uses it the day previous to contract date. We have the second story worker who turns in a bum check for service with the idea of getting enough by showing the service to cover at the bank the following day. Many times he don't cover and we don't REcover.

Then we have the amiable switcher who bicycles our stuff to another house in a different section of the city making it work twice on the one rental. And also the gink who works hand in glove with the dupers (growing scarcer now, however, following numerous prosecutions). And the contract repudiator who regularly gyps the exchanges who are weak enough not to insist upon deposits.

And those mutilators of film! Yunno, it makes me maddern a wet hen to hear these exhibitors yelping about the physical condition of film. Who the devil puts the film in punk condition? The exhibitor's rawten operator, and it's right up to the exhibitor himself, because he can either employ a real operator instead of some glorified usher, or (if he has a good, but careless, operator), he can insist on the film being properly used and returned in as good shape as it came to him. In our office we have been making a careful check on outgoing and incoming film and I wish you could see what some of these worst yelpers do to our stuff during the brief time they have it. It comes back looking like the scattered clues the burglars left behind them. But the subject is too long to go into here.

Bill disputers we have always with us. Once in a great while they are right. Our bookkeepers are not infallible and we know it. About the honest protestants we are not kicking but I wish you could hear the weird stories we are told every day in attempts to get items removed from our bills. The worst of it is that once in a while they get away with it and this is fatal because forever after they are trying it again. And even the companies demanding advance deposits get gypped through bad accounts, usually because of a foolish desire on the part of the exchange manager to help the exhibitor out. We never learn, and each time we say: "Oh, but this is a regular guy," and he IS a regular guy judged from exhibitor standards and he promptly stings us for all we will stand. "Plain gyppers" is self-explanatory and their name is legion.

And that is just a part of what I know about exhibitors. Stand up, Mr. Anarchist, and tell the folks the truth: Did you ever get a reduction which wasn't coming to you, or a credit you were not entitled to? Did you ever wander into an exchange with a hard luck story calculated to bring tears to the eyes of a cast iron moose, and kid the manager into changing the figure on the right hand side of your service invoice? Did you now? Do you go up in your booth frequently to make certain that the film entrusted to your care is being properly treated by the bandit who shoots 'em through in nine minutes so that you can crowd three shows into the time where only two should be? Do you?

Did you ever have a bad night and hold your show over a second day and then forget all about mentioning it to the exchange and paying the additional rental you should? Well? Speak up my Nihilistic friend. Let's hear from you?—Bolshevik.

EXHIBITORS: In New York the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Committee, under the leadership of William Fox, will see that those industries receive full credit for their Red Cross work. In many cities your identity will be lost in the local Red Cross committees. Let us see that the industry gets its full share of credit. It will help silence the knocker. Send us full details during the week of all collections made by you—of all work done by you. Get on the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Honor Roll. Don't fail. It is important.

Will History Repeat?

By Joseph Lee

[Does the "Special" typify the picture industry of the future? Will the "Special" mark the doom of the five reel program feature? Will the "Special" solve the picture industry's problem of supply and demand?

These are the questions asked by Joseph Lee in the following article—and the questions to which he gives an answer backed by years of successful experience in the exploitation of special picture attractions.—Ed. Note.]

DO you remember when the five reel feature first appeared on the market? Do you remember how we argued over whether it would be a permanent factor in the picture business or only a passing fancy?

At that time the one and two reel drama held sway. The majority of the manufacturers thought the five reel feature too long. "They'll tire of five reelers," they said," picture fans want variety. We'll keep on turning out good, snappy short stuff."

That was only a few years ago. Yet look at the five reel subject today—and look at the one and two reel subject! The five reelers have almost eliminated the shorter lengths, with the exception of the weekly comedy and educational.

The answer is that the makers of the five reel productions were lavish in their expenditures of money, in the purchase of real stories and the engaging of real stars. But with the success of the longer picture there came the rush of five and six reel productions—almost as great as the gold rush of '49. For a time all were successful, for the supply was not equal to the demand.

Which brings us to the present day—when we see a market overcrowded with the five reel productions. The supply long ago lapped the demand—and then suddenly the "special" appears. By "special" I mean a production that is in the real theatrical sense of the word an attraction, something unusual, something novel, varying in length from seven to ten reels. And even with the overproduction of "junk" the "special" looms up as a lifesaver to the exhibitor.

Until "Cabiria" and "The Birth of a Nation" long or indefinite runs for features were unheard of, and they were exceptions that for years had no successors. But today we find "The Unbeliever" playing six weeks in one theatre, "My Four Years In Germany," "Cleopatra," "The Kaiser," "Over the Top," "Tarzan of the Apes," are breaking records both in box-office statements and length of runs.

Never in the history of motion pictures have so many "specials" of merit and money-making value been offered at one time. Does it mean that the "special" production will gradually take the place of the five-reel feature?

Here is why I ask the question:

Under present conditions both the exhibitor and the "special" are working under a handicap due to the "play or pay anyway" method of program booking. Thus, not only must the exhibitor pay an increased price for the "special"—and its box-office value and extra production cost make it worth it—but he must pay for the program service which he does not run on the day he plays the "special." The result is that the profit he makes on the "special" is reduced by the amount of the rental for the unused picture.

Exhibitors are encouraging the producers by booking the "special" for longer runs and possibly higher admission prices—the more encouragement they give the more safe the producer can feel in investing greater sums than ever in the unusual production. The result will be a steadily increasing number of "specials" with the "special" crowding the ordinary five reeler just as the latter crowded the one and two reel picture.

Who will be hurt when the day comes that the "special" has the ascendancy? As a matter of fact no one will suffer. Take a first run theatre in a good sized city now using a weekly change, or fifty-two ordinary five reel pictures in a year. Let us say that the "specials" increase in number sufficient for this house to find a constant supply to book from. Instead of the same theatre using fifty-two pictures a year it will use approximately twenty "specials," with runs varying according to the merit of the production. The manufacturer instead of manufacturing a quantity of fifty-two would cut down production to twenty of quality—but his present one day rentals would be two or three day bookings, his present three day rentals a week, his present week rentals would be two, three or four week bookings.

The manufacturer at present turning out fifty-two productions would not suffer—the new condition would be healthier and far more profitable for him. And naturally the exhibitor would not suffer with the business resting on a quality foundation.

Will the coming of the special mean bigger and better photoplay, not just pictures, bigger now and better ideas in the way of advertising novelties and proper poster and newspaper publicity? For the special should have as complete a line of accessories equal to that of a Klaw and Erlanger legitimate production, and then be properly exploited by a showman with a knowledge of the motion picture business. Why do producers at present frequently spend a fortune on a production and give the exhibitor stills that contain no action, paper that has no punch, cuts and press matter that remind one of some patent medicine advertisement? Even if the "special" has merit, how do they then expect the exhibitor to do business? Proper exploitation is just as important as the production. Can you imagine Florenz Ziegfeld, producer of the "Follies" (one of the best money-makers in thes history of theatrical business), after spending a fortune on a production and having a winning show each year, saying, "I have a great show, what's the use of spending additional money on advertising?" Not so that you could notice it. But, although he always has a guaranteed winner, he gives it proper exploitation, and one would think a circus was in town when the "Follies" play an engagement in a city.

ECHO OF MINNEAPOLIS CONVENTION

Edward F. Hinz Declares Election of Directors Was Illegal and Seeks Court Relief

EDWARD F. HINZ, a stockholder in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, has filed a complaint in equity in the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, State of Minnesota, County of Hennepin, as a result of the recent convention and election of the Exhibitors' Corporation in Minneapolis.

He declares the election of directors was illegal, and asks court relief. The defendants in the action are Dan Chamberlin, Ralph Parker, Clyde Hitchcock, Fred Upham, Joseph Friedman, William H. Deeth, Dan Eselin, William Watson, Ellsworth Cameron and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest as a corporation.

The complaint recites that the election was conducted contrary to Section 4 of the by-laws.

The summons requires that the complaint be answered by the defendants within twenty days from May 15.

Big Red Cross Army Moves Forward

Colonel William Fox Gives Order to Capture All Trenches and Allied Team Responds Loyally—Many Benefits to Help Boost Fund

UNDER the generalship of Col. William Fox, whose staff includes many of the best known men and women of the industry in the East, the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team of the Red Cross Second War Fund moved up to their first line trenches on Monday, May 20, bright and early in the morning. When MOTION PICTURE NEWS went to press it was reported that the invaders were meeting with no resistance, and that swift and sure victory by May 27 was assured.

To add impetus to the big drive, several benefits worthy of the theatrical and motion picture profession have been arranged for the latter part of the week, beginning Thursday, May 23, and ending May 27, with a concert at the Metropolitan.

General Film Employee First

A gratifying assurance that the right of patriotism and wholehearted support belongs not alone to the money-laden producer and exhibitor but to those within the industry who work for a nominal wage is noted in the subscription of a General Film employee for $60. Miss Matilda Rothman, the employee, pledged her "bit" even before the drive started, and is doubtless entitled to the credit of being the first within the industry to respond to the Second Fund.

Miss Rothman's subscription was being followed on Monday, however, with others of goodly proportions, and all traditions of the industry as a cheerful giver and staunch patriot were being upheld.

It is predicted also that when history of the Second War Fund is written, those whose names appear in the Honor List which MOTION PICTURE NEWS carries in this issue will be printed in large letters. Other names, to be available later, are to be added to this list.

To William L. Sherry belongs the distinction of securing, for a bid of $500, the first box at the fashion ball scheduled for the Astor Hotel on the night of Saturday, May 25. This event is included in the list of benefits, and is being given by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Stars. This is expected to be the gala event of the week, and predictions are that everyone known on Broadway will be there. William Fox and Marcus Loew each bought a box at $1,000, and were joined at this figure by E. F. Albee and Hy. Winick. For those of ordinary means, $25 per couple was estimated as a fair figure.

Cohen Enlists Artists

Before the drive was under way, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, introduced an Artists' Enlistment, pledging the principal picture players to devote their evenings during the week of the drive to making personal appearances and speeches at the theatres to which they should be assigned, and it is fair to state that these pledges were signed as fast as they could be printed and distributed. It means considerable extra exertion and loss of needful sleep to players who spend their daylight hours strenuously in the studios or "on location" to devote the evenings to rushing around in autos, from theatre to theatre and enthusing the audience to contribute with extra liberality to the Red Cross—but the "Honor Roll" of those who work double overtime is too long to be printed except in a special edition, while the list of "slackers" among the picture players is practically negligible.

The committee appointed by Chairman Fox to enlist volunteers from the theatrical and operatic professions includes Raymond Hitchcock, for the Lambs; John Drew, for the Players; John L. Gleason, for the Friars (in the absence of Abbot George M. Cohan, on tour with Laurette Taylor and the "all star" company presenting "Out There" for the Red Cross fund); Edwards Davis, for the Greenroom Club; Helen Whitman Ritchie and Susanne Wetsford-Allen, for the Professional Woman's League; Mary Shaw, for the Gamut Club, and Pat Casey, for the National Vaudeville Artists Association. R. H. Burnside volunteers as general stage director of benefit performances, and will have practically the whole profession at call.

Elliott Appoints Workers

At a meeting called by Frederick H. Elliott, director of the industrial committee of the allied team, the feminine members of the theatrical and motion picture publications were enlisted in the drive to get subscriptions from within the industries themselves. The reporterettes were charged with the task of circulating the subscription blanks among the employees of their individual publications. The treasurers of the journals as well as those of all other theatrical and film concerns will be empowered to make the monthly collections called for by the signed subscription blanks and send the money to the local Red Cross chief.

Miss Anna Luther, star of "Moral Suicide," who was to begin a pictorial sequel to this story for the same film firm postponed the starting of the picture for a fortnight in order to devote all her time and energy to the Red Cross drive.

A great chain of children's special matinees was worked out by William Fox and by President Somers of the Board of Education as a feature of a series of remarkable benefits for the Red Cross Fund.

So far as is known such an event in which 694 schools will participate was never before given in New York. Certainly no such demonstration of the devotion of motion picture men to the Red Cross Fund has been shown since pictures assumed their grip on amusement loving New York. The theatres are donating their entire plants and the services of their employes to the cause.

Special Reels on Tap

That the school children will have occasion long to remember the event, the National Juvenile Motion Picture Board, of which Adele F. Woodward is President, at the suggestion of President Somers, began May 18 to distribute to the theatres a special assortment of reels which will augment the "thrillers" being assembled by the local houses to amuse their young guests.

In many of the theatres music will add to the gaiety of the occasion and in some instances, members of the higher grades will make five-minute talks to their younger brethren on the meaning of the Red Cross work, and the necessity for every child to do his best for the boys who have gone abroad.

Every penny of the money obtained from tickets will be turned over to the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team at Broadway and Forty-second street, and will go to make up what Captain Fox confidently believes will amount to more than $5,000,000 from the workers under his direction.

Rival Bodies Soon to Merge?

Correspondence Between Sydney Cohen and C. C. Pettijohn Paves Way to Peace Between M. P. E. L. and A. E. A.

PEACE between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association is in sight—that is, if recent correspondence between Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York Exhibitors' League, and Charles C. Pettijohn, representing the A. E. A., bears fruit.

In the furtherance of the effort, it is understood that the officials of the American Exhibitors' Association may give consideration to the postponement of their convention and exposition, now scheduled to be held in Chicago later in the summer.

On their endeavors to place the league affairs of exhibitors on a more stable and harmonious footing, it is understood that Messrs. Cohen and Pettijohn have the support not only of exhibitors of large interests in each of their associations, but of prominent exhibitors not heretofore identified with league affairs. Mr. Cohen's letter, which started the ball rolling, follows:

"Believing in your sincerity and fairness and that you have the welfare of motion picture exhibitors at heart, I am addressing this letter to you in an effort to ascertain at least if it is possible within the next sixty days to bring the two National Exhibitor Organizations together under one banner.

"I know and I think you realize that there are big, clean, sinceere men in both organizations, and we may as well be frank with each other, and admit that both organizations are, at present, hampered by members who have selfish interests to play. I believe that you and I are in position, at present, or we can at least start a movement which may result in great good to motion picture exhibitors throughout the country.

"I am willing to take the initiative for this movement in our organization if you are willing to do likewise with the members of the American Exhibitors' Association. Will you co-operate with me in an effort to bring about a fair understanding among our respective members, and, if possible, an amalgamation of both National Organizations into one United, Efficient and Unselfish Organization which will divorce itself from all side issues, and devote itself solely to the business of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the United States and Canada?

"Will you favor me with an immediate reply to this letter, and if you feel that we can conscientiously work together in the furtherance of a plan which will bring us all under one banner, I will be glad to meet with you and your associates and start the 'ball rolling.'

"With kindest personal regards, I am,

"Very truly yours,
"(Signed) SYDNEY S. COHEN, President,
"N. Y. State M. P. Exhibitors' League of America."

Mr. Pettijohn's reply, equally as conciliatory, follows:

"I am just in receipt of your letter, dated the 13th, and I am trying to comply with your request for an immediate reply. While in the Middle West last week, I consulted with several of the officers and directors of the American Exhibitors' Association on practically the same subject mentioned in your letter.

"I believe in you, Mr. Cohen, one hundred per cent. I have the utmost confidence in the men who surround you. I have so stated to the men with whom I talked last week, and I have this day sent a recommendation to Frank J. Rembusch, our national secretary, that only a tentative date be set for our national convention, and that such tentative date be not sooner than the last of August or the first of September. In the meantime, I am willing to join hands with you in an effort to bring about one national organization; with no 'side issues,' devoted exclusively to the business of exhibitors and ever ready to co-operative with any other branch of the industry for our common good.

"Uncle Sam has recognized us as a potent factor in this great world war. He needs us, and I personally believe we will be worth more to him under one banner, the banner under which all American people are this day united— HIS BANNER.

"I am ready to meet you,
"Sincerely yours,
"(Signed) C. C. PETTIJOHN."

Both Mr. Cohen and Mr. Pettijohn declined to comment upon the letters, saying that they spoke for themselves, and that it was too early in the negotiations to venture any conjectures, other than to hope that it would be possible to find a common meeting ground for all concerned.

To Whom Belongs the Credit?

Correspondence Throws Light on the Controversy as to Who Deserves the Credit for the 15-Cent Coin Movement

LIGHT on the controversy over the authorship of the fifteen-cent coin idea, which recently cropped out between F. H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, and Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity of Mutual Film Corporation, following the introduction of a bill in Congress, authorizing the coin, is revealed by the following correspondence between Mr. Elliott, Mr. Ramsaye and T. E. Mortensen, of "Amusements," the Minneapolis motion picture publication:

Mr. Mortensen wrote to Mr. Ramsaye:

"Dear Mr. Ramsaye:

"I am inclosing carbon copy of letter from F. H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which is self-explanatory; also inclosing copy of article referred ''

"I would appreciate you writing me regarding this matter so that I could dwell intelligently upon the subject in an article for AMUSEMENTS.

"Thanking you for giving this your immediate attention, and with best personal wishes, I remain."

Mr. Elliott wrote to Mr. Mortensen:

"Dear Sir:

"Our attention has been called to an article which appears on page 6 of your April 27 issue setting forth the fact that 'To Terry Ramsaye, that hustling director of publicity of the Mutual Film Corporation, belongs the honors for having had introduced into Congress a bill authorizing the coinage of a fifteen-cent piece.'

"For your information we desire to advise that Mr. Ramsaye had nothing whatever to do with the introduction of this bill; he didn't even know it was going to be introduced; he doesn't even know the representative in Congress that introduced the bill. The idea of some one endeavoring to take credit for activity which they had nothing whatever to do with is pure bunk, and it is about time some of the motion picture publications ascertain as to the authenticity of some of the press copies received by them from such fellows as Ramsaye.

"The bill was introduced at the suggestion of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry of which the Mutual Film Corporation is not even a member. Will you kindly make this plain in your forthcoming issue, so that credit will be given to the organization which is doing things for the industry and not by individuals who are talking about doing them."

Mr. Ramsaye wrote to Mr. Mortensen:

"Dear Mr. Mortensen:

"Anent yours of May 6 and enclosure from one F. H. Elliott.

"I conceived and planted the idea of a fifteen-cent coin. Mr. Elliott, if he had any function in the flowering of the idea into legislation, operated as fertilizer. May his aromatic fame increase.

"The article in your paper to which he objects was, as you know, written in your own office.

"Despite Mr. Elliott, it is a matter of common knowledge in the industry that the fifteen-cent piece was my idea and that I gave it national and international publicity something more than a year ago, long before others were interested in it. The files of any trade paper and most newspapers will prove that.

"Further, I gained support for the movement from John C. Shedd of Marshall Field & Company, Chicago; the United Cigar Stores, the Perkins publications and a large number of big national interests, including, I may add, a number of legislators. This is all substantiated by contemporary publications, and of dates prior to any interest expressed by Mr. Elliott.

"It is interesting to recall also that Mr. Elliott, while engaged in a campaign to force or decoy the Mutual Film Corporation into membership in his National Association, wrote a letter to John R. Freuler congratulating the Mutual Film Corporation on the fifteen-cent piece idea.

"The Mutual refused to join the National Association.

"Meanwhile Mr. Elliott appropriated the fifteen-cent piece idea and sought to make capital of it. When the bill was introduced in congress—as he says quite without my knowledge—the Elliott publicity studiously avoided crediting me or my concern with the idea.

"Then along came a number of trade papers and ran stories about my part in the matter as father of the idea and movement. These stories were spontaneous and voluntary. They brought the matter to my attention and I did send out further stories about the origin of the idea, claiming nothing, however, concerning the bill in congress. I did not and do not propose to let Mr. Elliott hide my light under his pint cup.

"I note that Mr. Elliott, in his letter, says: 'It is about time that some of the motion picture publications ascertain as to the authenticity of some of the press copies received by them from such fellows as Ramsaye.'

"I have not the honor of the acquaintance of Mr. Elliott but I know 'such fellows' as he.

"I can leave to the open forum of opinion my repute in the film trade. I can leave to the same court, judgment concerning attempts at piracy and mayhem.

"A salute to Mr. F. H. Elliott!"

Affiliated Distributors Increases Capital

The Affiliated Distributors Corporation has increased its capitalization from $100,000 to $250,000. This addition to the original investment was deemed desirable, according to Charles C. Pettijohn, General Counsel of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, to take care of the response with which the co-operative plan, back of the Affiliated, has been received by exhibitors.

"We want to be in a position to meet every demand that will make for the furtherance of the 'direct from producer to exhibitor' idea," said Mr. Pettijohn. "While we thought our original capital was more than ample to take care of the development of this idea, three weeks' of operation has shown us that this movement is going to grow much faster than our most sanguine expectations, and that additional capital is desirable to take care of this rapid expansion."

Meetings, for the purpose of perfecting arrangements for the association of exhibitors booking organizations with the Affiliated, were held recently at Chicago and Indianapolis.

Other territories well on their way toward the consummation of their trust funds are Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Philadelphia, and New York. Meetings this week are scheduled for St. Louis, Kansas City and Cedar Rapids.

Directors Organize for War Relief

Plans Going Forward in Los Angeles for Permanent Organization To Be Headed by Well-Known Producer—Details Not Yet Made Known

A GREAT movement for concerted action within the motion picture industry on the Coast, in war relief work, was brought to light last week through the activity of the Motion Picture Directors' Association of Los Angeles, in urging the formation of a permanent organization to systematically carry out the massive plans under way.

Each individual whose line of endeavor shows he is a member of the vast Coast Film Colony is being, or will be, urged to combine his efforts in war relief work with the rest. It is believed that in this way much greater good can be accomplished, and that the plan will do away with dissipation of strength through war relief channels that at present cause the Colony to lose its identity.

President Not Named

Although the plans for the organization have been under way for several weeks, and are said to be now well along to perfection, it has not yet been made known who will be asked to head the Association as president. It is rumored, however, that an independent producer whose name is synonymous with the highest class of motion pictures, has been sounded on the subject and has voiced his willingness to serve. It is said that the directors' desire for quietness and lack of horn-blowing is responsible for the degree of secrecy that prevails pertaining to officers and others who will be connected with the Motion Picture War Relief Association.

In fact, no publicity has been provided for in the plans which are being worked out, but a movement so pretentious and so all-important can not go unnoticed at this time, when the greatest good can be accomplished only when the industry as individuals throws aside all reserve in the matter of war work and pitches in to do its bit as a united and whole unit.

Mass Meeting Scheduled

A statement in connection with the organization made to MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week reads as follows:

"Believing a greater amount of war relief work can be accomplished for the Government by all the different departments of the film industry if conducted under one management, many affiliated with the industry in Los Angeles are taking a keen interest in the movement fathered by the Motion Picture Directors' Association, for the formation of a Motion Picture War Relief Association. Plans have already been made by a committee selected by the Directors' Association for a mass meeting of all people of the industry in Los Angeles, to be held at an early date for the purpose of perfecting a permanent organization. The New York chapter of the Directors' Association has been notified of the work being carried on in Los Angeles, and it is expected a similar movement will be started in the east.

"It is the plan of the members of the Directors' Association to induce people from all fields of the industry to take an active part in association work, and a general call will be sent out within a day or two to exchange men, exchange employees, theatre owners, managers and employees, as well as all employed at studios or industries of the motion picture industry. At the organization meeting shortly to be held, officers will be elected, by-laws adopted, and general working scheme for the war relief work will be planned and adopted. Some of the best known people of the West Coast film colony have signified their desire to aid in the formation and operation of a war relief association, and no doubt the officers selected will be the best known and influential men and women of the industry."

RED CROSS SCHEDULE

Following Are Benefits Arranged for Week of the Drive

Thursday, May 23:—Dillingham offers Hippodrome and show, "Cheer Up," augmented by many Broadway stars.

Friday, May 24:—Great patriotic concert at Madison Square Garden, followed by Carnival under auspices of sporting men. Seven bouts on tap.

Saturday, May 25:—Fashion ball at Hotel Astor, by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Stars. Gala event of the week.

Sunday, May 26:—Dramatic, Musical and Vaudeville Benefit at Century Theatre. . . .

Monday, May 27:—Galaxy of operatic stars in concert at the Metropolitan, headed by Caruso.

Lois Weber Chairman

The Motion Picture Directors' Association selected Lois Weber chairman of the committeee on arrangements for the mass meeting, and her assistants in this are Reginald Barker, Walter Edwards, James Young, Frank Lloyd, Frank Beal, Mr. Taylor of Griffith's Studio, Robert Vignolia, and J. C. Jessen. While the plans are being made for the meeting, all people of the industry have been informed of the movement by circular letter written by the committee which recites the following facts:

"In spite of the fact that the motion picture people have made greater individual efforts and secured greater results in war relief work than any other body of people in the country, we have dissipated our strength through channels not identified with our profession and thus lost our identity.

"No individual should seek credit in this critical time, but being so powerful a body the industry must be represented in war relief work or be open to the suspicion that its members may be shirking their duty.

"We have all been buying Liberty Bonds and giving our money, old magazines and newspapers and books and clothes and kid gloves and tinfoil to different organizations, which was the right thing to do, but it was not proving to the world that our profession was an active war relief unit.

Correct Giving Method

"If we had bought all our Liberty Bonds as a motion picture industry, we would have made a showing to startle the world. If we had pooled all our other resources of entertainment, personal appearances before the public and donations of anything and everything, distributing all articles and contributions from a motion picture headquarters, we would have quashed forever any attempt to prove us undesirable citizens.

"Let us give still more, but let us correct our method. Let us give the motion picture industry the good name it deserves and have it respected.

"The help of each individual will be indispensable and a way to help is within the reach of every one, from the manufacturers down to the newest recruit in the ranks of the extra people.

"Everyone has something they can make, or give up or collect from others—if it is only tinfoil or tin cans. The point is for every one to determine NOW to be a soldier in this army and not a slacker—for everyone to start today to help supply the needs of the fighting army—and for everybody to do EVERYTHING through a MOTION PICTURE WAR RELIEF ASSOCIATION!"

The Motion Picture Directors' Association is maintaining headquarters in the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, from where the work of the Motion Picture War Relief Committee is being conducted.

Up to the time of going to press, the Directors' Association of New York had not issued any announcement of its intention to continue in the East the good work already started in the West.

Petrova Presents Watch to Ralph Ince

At the conclusion of the filming of the scenes for "Tempered Steel," the fourth Petrova picture which is soon to be released and distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Madame Petrova presented Director Ralph Ince with a handsome Tiffany gold wrist watch with radium numerals on the face.

"Brunet Month" Was a Smasher

Pathe Exchange Reports April Business Was Biggest in Its History —H. P. Calloway, of Cincinnati, Champion Salesman

PATHE EXCHANGE reports that in the month of April, designated as "Brunet Month" in honor of the new vice-president and general manager, the greatest month's business in the history of the company was transacted and that the collections broke all records. With every office in the country showing a substantial increase, officials state that the top speed is being maintained during the month of May as well.

H. P. Calloway, the lightning salesman of Cincinnati, won the coveted honor of Champion Salesman for the month of April. With the laurels of victory he also wins a handsome gold watch offered by Tom North, former editor of the official house organ, the Pathe Sun, and now division manager.

M. Kronacher of New York, ran Calloway a close race for highest honors and finished in second place. Because of his excellent showing he is to receive a prize from F. C. Quimby, sales manager, who watched the race between these two crack salesmen with great interest.

J. O. Levy, M. Westebbe, E. B. Haines, S. G. Honeck, M. Salkin and S. Plaine also won honorable mention, while rapid strides were also made by all other salesmen.

In a letter to the sales force, congratulating them upon this demonstration of efficiency, Mr. Quimby says:

"In sincere appreciation, Mr. Brunet asks me to express his thanks to you men on the firing line for the great team work shown during the month of April, and the hope and belief that this is only the beginning of a new period of greater prosperity for every one of our local coworkers.

"I am deeply grateful to all managers and salesmen whose efforts have thus enabled me to hand to Mr. Brunet the record collections for any month in the history of this great organization."

"My Four Years" Booms Along

Reports from Many States Attest Box-Office Value of Gerard Film—Women's National Federation Endorses It

RENTALS aggregating over $40,000 in Indiana alone are reported for "My Four Years in Germany," by Robert Lieber, newly elected president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and circuit franchise holder for the State of Indiana. Before the end of May Mr. Lieber expects these figures to approximate at least 40 per cent more.

E. H. Hulsey presented the Gerard film in Dallas, Texas, during the first week of May at the Hippodrome to the largest audience that the house has ever held. The box-office receipts for the opening day aggregated $1,860. Mr. Hulsey and his associates had given the production remarkable exploitation, prior to its engagement, with the result that they had to call on the local police reserves to handle the crowds.

At the Mary Anderson theatre in Louisville, Ky., "My Four Years In Germany" is also cashing in effectively on the excellent advertising and newspaper publicity it has received at the hands of Col. Fred Levy and Lee L. Goldberg. The seat sales amounted to $1,076 the first day, and are expected to approximate $8,000 for the full week.

Youngstown, Ohio, is also playing the picture for a week's run at the Park theatre, and reports box-office receipts of $1,038 on the opening.

A signal tribute was paid "My Four Years in Germany" in its endorsement by the General Federation of Women's Clubs at their national convention held last week in Hot Springs, Ark., as an ideal example of the work that the motion picture is doing in quickening the patriotic fervor of Americans. Mrs. Myra Kingman Miller, president of the National Federation of College Women and chairman of the Better Films Commitee of the National Council of Women, who addressed the convention on this subject, said:

"Every intelligent person should know the continuity of events that brought on the war. 'My Four Years in Germany' is pictorial history of these events without a single distracting flash of fiction. The women of America should see this film themselves, and then see that it is shown in every village, city and town throughout the country in order that the public—and especially the children—may see the unexaggerated facts. The visualized lesson is one that will never be forgotten."

During the week of May 12, "My Four Years in Germany" played full week runs at six of the largest motion picture theatres in New York City, breaking the attendance record in the Burland theatre and some of the Proctor houses.

Virginia Exhibitors to Hold June Convention

The exhibitors of Virginia, according to an announcement this week by Harry Bernstein, chairman of the Virginia Exhibitors' Motion Picture Convention and Movie Star Ball, will meet in convention at Gray's Armory, Richmond, Va., on June 13 to 15, inclusive. Plans for the event include a Movie Star ball on the night of June 15.

Camel Studios Move

The Camel Film Company, of Chicago, last week announced that it has moved its studios to the new studio building at 950 Edgecomb place, Chicago.

In and Out of Town

Fred Hawkins, general manager, Haworth Pictures Corporation, is in New York in the interest of his company.

Harry Charnas, standard Film Service, Cleveland, arrived in town last week, to look at the current offering on the independent market.

Fred Burlingame, scenic photographer and traveler, is in New York.

Thomas Sorerio, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and the Strand in Lowell, dropped in on New York last week. Mr. Sorerio reports business booming.

Nathan Gordon, Gordon Bros. Amusement Company, Boston, is among the visiting state rights' men.

Louis B. Mayer, prominent in the independent field, is in New York.

Sol Lesser, prominent member of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., San Francisco and Cleveland, arrived in the city, last week.

Sidney Garrett, J. Frank Brookliss, Inc. and prominent among the foreign distributors, left New York, last week, for Chicago for a few days' business trip.

E. K. Lincoln returned to New York, last week, after several months on the Coast working in special productions under the direction of Christie Cabanne.

Bert Van Tuyle, general manager, Vanco Films, Los Angeles, arrived in New York, last week, in the interest of this company.

"Unchastened Woman" to Open Symphony

The Rialto De Luxe production, "The Unchastened Woman," by Louis Anspacher, in which Grace Valentine is starred, has been booked by Aubrey Kennedy as the attraction for the opening week at the new Symphony theatre, Broadway at Ninety-fifth street. A special overture, expressly commposed for "The Unchastened Woman," will be played at each performance by the entire Metropolitan Opera House orchestra, which has been engaged for the Symphony until the opening of next season at the Metropolitan.

Wilson to Help Arrange Red Cross Benefits

Carey Wilson, sales manager of the First National Exchange, Inc., has been appointed a member of the committee to arrange the theatrical benefits that will be a prominent feature of the Red Cross drive scheduled to open shortly in New York. Mr. Wilson was endorsed for this position by the New York Exchange Managers' Association, of which he is a charter member.

Illinois Exhibitors Hold Meeting in Chicago

The national meeting of the Illinois branch, Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, was held last Tuesday in the new quarters in the Century Building. There was a large attendance from all over the State. The meeting and the election of officers for the coming year resulted in the replacing of all of last year's incumbent, with the exception of one. That was the office of treasurer, and in the absence of President Luttrell, Andrew Karsas conducted the meeting from the chair. G. M. Luttrell, president; William Bradley, first vice-president; A. Karzas, second vice-president; W. J. Sweeney, treasurer; Sidney Smith, secretary; Charles J. Law, Dee Robinson, Paul Sittner, Robert R. Levy, Henry Von Meeteren, W. D. Burford and E. Kunz.

After the election of the officers plans were discussed for the attending of the national convention at Boston in July. Delegates and alternates to the convention elected were as follows:

Hart Declines New Duties

Charles S. Hart, director of the Film Division of the Committee on Public Information, last week in a letter to Editor Johnston of Motion Picture News, declined to accept a place on the Committee at the International Film Conference scheduled to meet in Boston in July.

Mr. Hart said in his letter: "Owing to the multiplicity of duties which require my constant attention, I regret to say that it will be extremely difficult to find time to serve upon the Committee at the International Film Conference in Boston in July."

By the First Airplane Mail from Washington

On Wednesday, May 15, Motion Picture News received a number of news items from its Washington correspondent, Miss Willard Howe, by the new airplane postal service on its first air journey from Washington to New York. The letter left Washington at 10:30 a. m. and was received at the office of Motion Picture News at 4 p. m. As Josh Billings might have said, "Theez be grate daze we liv in." The enclosed items follow:

Mary Pickford in "M'liss," the western masterpiece of Bret Harte, is having a phenomenal run of a week at Loew's Columbia.

John Barrymore is crowding Moore's Strand, in "Raffles."

George Walsh is delighting the public for a week in "Brave and Bold," at the Leader.

"Draft 258," Metro's big patriotic spectacle without a battle scene, is making a strong appeal to Washington's picture public.

"My Own United States" just completed a big week's run at Crandall's Casino.

New Fox Exchange for Buffalo

Increase in Business in Westren New York Forces Transfer of Branch from Syracuse—Sheehan to Attend Opening

ROM the head offices of William Fox in New York comes the announcement that a new exchange of Fox Film Corporation is about to be opened in Buffalo, at 209 and 211 Franklin street. The large expansion of business in the western part of New York State is given as the reason for the move, which also entails the closing of the company's Syracuse headquarters.

Buffalo is the home town of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who started his career there as a newspaper reporter, and if business arrangements will permit, Mr. Sheehan will go to Buffalo for the formal opening of the exchange some time in the latter part of May.

Thomas A. Brady, formerly in charge of the Fox Atlanta branch and later in charge of the requisition department in the company's home office, is manager of the Fox Buffalo exchange. All details for the opening of the Buffalo exchange have been in charge of Clayton P. Sheehan, special representative of the Fox Company.

The new Fox exchange occupies an entire building. Facing the street are the manager's office and the general office, and back of the manager's sanctum is a projection room, 40 x 20 feet, with two Power's 6-B machines.

The Fox Company has gone to considerable expense to make the Buffalo exchange one of the finest in its circuit. New rugs, new furniture and large stained-glass windows add to its attractiveness, and giving a rich, artistic tone to the office are eighteen oil paintings of Fox stars, each painting being 5 by 10 feet. Exhibitors will be attracted to the exchange by a large extension sign of striking appearance, while another feature which will commend itself to visitors is a complete telephone system.

An idea of the size of the plant is given in the fact that the poster and shipping departments occupy 2,500 square feet, while the fireproof vault is of solid concrete, eighteen inches thick and supported by solid concrete columns. To facilitate shipping there is a rear entrance to the exchange.

The Buffalo staff includes William Schmidt and E. H. Arnold, road representatives, and George Hallett, booker.

Official War Film at Lyric

"Pershing's Crusaders," First of U. S. Government Series, Opens May 21 Under the Auspices of Liberty Film Committee

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS," the first installment of a series of official war films to be issued under the general title, "Following the Flag to France," is being presented by the United States Government, afternoons and evenings, at the Lyric theatre, New York, the engagement starting Tuesday evening, May 21. The film is shown under the auspices of the Liberty Film Committee, which consists of Mrs. Newbold Leroy Edgar, chairman; Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, vice-chairman; Clarence H. Mackay, treasurer; Frederic R. Coudert, honorary secretary and Mrs. Anne Shingleur, executive secretary.

"Pershing's Crusaders" is really a pictorial history of America's part in the great war and full of human interest and patriotic thrills. These pictures, which show the grim earnestness of the United States Government in its war aims and its determination to stamp out Kaiserism, were taken by the United States Signal Corps and navy photographers at home and abroad.

There are eight reels of this film which graphically portray the rapidity with which the United States military and naval forces are preparing to make the world safe for democracy. Over here and over there our boys in khaki are seen in training and in action. Cantonments spring into being as if by magic, boys fresh from the farm, desk and factory are hardened into fighting whirlwinds, massive ships are launched, aeroplanes speed through the air, uniforms are turned out by the millions. In fact, all of the activities of war preparations are spread before one's eyes.

In the last half of the film the spectator is transported to France and sees just what has been accomplished since the Stars and Stripes were carried over there. Secretary of War Baker and General John J. Pershing are seen on their tours of inspection to the battle front and visiting the big bases at unknown ports. It is a revelation of a nation aroused in all its might. Here is the truth about the war. It's Uncle Sam's answer to the lies of the Hun.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears on Way to France

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, for the past eight months publicity director of the American Film Company, has resigned her position and has left Chicago on her way to France. She goes abroad as a representative of Today's Housewife and will gather material for a series of articles for this and other magazines.

Pete Goes After K. Bill

Pete Lobraico, who has been in charge of the poster department of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., for some years, left on May 11 to join the Canadian expeditionary forces. The staff of the Toronto office presented him with a wrist watch on the eve of his departure.

F. P.-Lasky Managers Meet

Various Problems of Distributing Organization Being Discussed in Convention at New York—Zukor to Talk

A MEETING of the district managers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the country, called by Walter E. Greene, managing director, and Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, is being held this week at the New York City headquarters of the corporation at 485 Fifth Avenue. The sessions were scheduled to open Tuesday, May 21, and to last throughout the week.

Labor Day will mark the commencement of a new year for the Famous Players-Lasky distributing organization and various plans which will be set in motion at that time, will be carefully worked out at the convention. It is definitely understood that the stars series booking system, inaugurated last August, will not only be continued the coming year, but will be enlarged to a scope never before dreamed of by even its sponsors. The big advertising campaign now being waged is also to be taken up with a view of further enhancing its effectiveness in drawing people to the exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Among the well known film men supervising the affairs of the various districts in the Famous Players-Lasky distribution plan and who are in New York to take part in the conference are Harry Asher, in charge of the Boston, Portland, Me., and New Haven branches; A. G. Whyte of the New York offices; W. E. Smith of Philadelphia and Washington; James Steele of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland; Max Goldstine of Chicago, Minneapolis and Milwaukee; A. D. Flintom of Kansas City, St. Louis, Des Moines and Omaha; C. E. Tandy of Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas; Louis Marcus of Salt Lake, Denver and Butte; Herman Wobber of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland, Ore., J. W. Allen and H. H. Bauxbaum.

Adolph Zukor, president of the big organization, is scheduled to address the visiting managers, as is Whitman Bennett, who in the absence of Jesse L. Lasky will talk on the production activities of the company and its affiliated bodies. With the termination of the conference, plans will have been formulated involving the booking of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in ten thousand theatres throughout the country making another stride forward for the organization.

Tobacco Fund Gets Big Boost

Bert Ennis Seeks to Co-operate with Mutual in Getting More Smokes for Soldiers—Comedy May Help

RED CROSS drives and Liberty Loan campaigns have not relegated the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" to the background, and the cause, far from being a dead issue, is growing apace with the spirit of the times. An excellent indication of the ceaseless efforts being put forward to keep our soldier lads well supplied with tobacco was the letter which went forward last week from Bert Ennis, publicity manager of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," of which Motion Picture News is official organ, to Terry Ramsaye, of the Mutual Film Corporation, Chicago.

This letter asked for co-operation in behalf of the Fund in connection with a one-reel comedy, "My Lady Nicotine," which Mutual planned to release May 21. It was felt that the Fund, working in collaboration with Mutual, could bring in many additional "smokes" for across the seas.

Mr. Ennis' letter, in part, follows:

"From a recent story I note that you will release on May 21, a one-reel Mutual-Strand Comedy entitled 'My Lady Nicotine,' dealing in part with the subject of tobacco for the boys in France. As you probably know, McClures Publication, Inc. is sponsor for the organization known as 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund,' with headquarters at 25 West Forty-fourth street, New York and up to date has shipped eight hundred thousand kits of tobacco to the American soldiers on the other side. This organization is a volunteer one in every respect, inasmuch as no one connected with it in any capacity receive remuneration for the work they do. In addition to my duties as Director of Publicity for the Petrova Picture Company and McClure Picture Company, Inc., I am, together with Daniel M. Henderson, our advertising manager, director of exploitation for the Fund and I am writing to bespeak your co-operation in regard to this patriotic work through the opportunity offered by your release of 'My Lady Nicotine.'

"We have on hand various striking posters which are used to advertise 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund' and under separate cover today I am taking the liberty of sending you samples of this paper. It would not only be excellent advertising for the Fund but would also help, I believe, the picture if you can distribute these posters to your exhibitors. They can snipe them to show the connection between your production and the posters. I might say that thousands of exhibitors have been working with us to help 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund' through the medium of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which is our official organ in the exhibitors' field.

"I would also greatly appreciate your mentioning 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund' in connection with your advertisements concerning 'My Lady Nicotine' and in the publicity stories which you send out. From this end we will be more than glad to reciprocate in our publicity matter and to co-operate to the fullest extent possible. We have a list of over six hundred newspapers which run daily campaigns for the fund and I will be happy to enlist their aid in this matter or to turn a copy of the list over to you, notifying these papers from this office all that you propose doing so that they may give you proper publicity.

"Going further it may be possible to have some exhibitors donate part of their receipts to 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund' on the day which they present 'My Lady Nicotine' and I feel positive that a suggestion to this effect from your exchanges would succeed in accomplishing this result.

"In passing, permit me to say it may seem as though we are asking a lot in this connection, but if you had been working for the Fund as I have for the past six months and had read the heart-rending appeals from our boys in France for 'smokes,' together with the tear-bringing letters of thanks, in which they acknowledge our tobacco kits, I feel certain you would realize the importance and humanity of this patriotic movement."

Wessling Likes Cincy

W. S. Wessling, new district manager for Pathe, is trying to have Cincinnati, instead of Chicago, designated as his headquarters.

Studio Folk Make Big Bond Purchases

Figures compiled by Chairman Charles Christie of the motion picture section of the Los Angeles Liberty Loan Committee, show the total sum subscribed direct through the studios to be $1,274,900. The sums from the various studios are as follows:

Lasky, $302,700; Fox, $141,700; William S. Hart studio, $122,000; Universal, $102,400; Thomas H. Ince, $87,000; Triangle, $60,000; Pathe, $78,000; Paralta, $48,600; Vitagraph, $32,000; Sennett, $48,000; National Film Corporation, $32,200; Chaplin studios, $52,000; D. W. Griffith studios, $40,000; Christie, $18,500; Lois Weber, $16,000; L-Ko studios, $11,000; Lehrman Sunshine Comedies studios, $8,000; Metro, $39,000; King-Bee, $3,600; Morosco, $27,000, and George Beban studio, $5,200.

In addition to the above amounts, Roscoe Arbuckle bought $50,000, and many of the employes of his studio also purchased. People of the studios bought through various organizations, and it is estimated the total outside of the above sum will aggregate $700,000.

Motion picture people were directly responsible for subscriptions totalling $582,700, which were taken at a British Tank where meetings were held nightly in Central Park, Los Angeles. The Tank meetings were conducted under the management of Motion Picture News West Coast Representative J. C. Jessen.

Poland Back from Florida, at Work Again

Joseph Franklin Poland, screen author, recently returned to New York after a winter's rest in Florida. Now that his period of rest is over, he is busily writing with renewed vigor, as his current releases will attest.

"The Mating of Marcella," a current Paramount release featuring Dorothy Dalton, is from Poland's pen. So is "The Rough Lover," a Bluebird, with Franklyn Farnum. "Impossible Susan," now in production, with Margarita Fisher, at the American studio, is another of the comedy-dramas for which Poland has become well known.

Other original features of Poland's are in course of production, or to be produced, by Triangle, Pathe, Vitagraph and other companies.

Mandamus Against Major Funkhouser

Adolph Marks, lawyer, filed on May 15, in Chicago, a petition for mandamus against Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, in the Superior Court of Cook County, on behalf of "My Four Years in Germany."

As previously stated in Motion Picture News the Chicago censor eliminated eight scenes from the picture before he would consent to let it be shown in the Windy City.

The matter was set for Monday, May 20, before Judge William Fenimore Cooper.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Schwalbe?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

THE first time we met Harry Schwalbe something happened that created a lasting respect for him.

Two other film men were in the party. One of them expressed an opinion on film conditions and methods with which Mr. Schwalbe did not agree.

Did Mr. Schwalbe smile sweetly, say an idle word or two and let the conversation pass on?

He did not.

Emphatically, he did not.

He said that he didn't agree with the first speaker, said so quietly but firmly. At first a mere barrage of disagreement, then a gradual marshalling of artillery that raised facts on his adversary.

Our respect for Harry Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, was born when we discovered that here was a film man who didn't always agree with what the other fellow said. That is, agree until the other fellow had gone—then tell you why he was all wrong.

Our respect grew into admiration as we heard him unlimber his facts.

This man Schwalbe, we believe, has at his finger tips more facts and figures about all phases of the picture business than any film man we can recall.

Producing, exhibiting, distributing—they are all the same to him. From experience and from study he seems to have gathered ledgers of figures, figures, figures.

Ask him the total amount of film rentals paid weekly in the United States and we'll bet he'll give you the answer in dollars and cents.

Ask him the percentage of usher's salaries spent on chewing gum and we'll bet again.

Ask him the approximate overhead distribution cost of any particular exchange system and—well, he'll know as much as the head of the particular system does anyway.

He's a quiet man and a conservative man—the one marks the man who keeps silent and learns facts, the other the man who acts on those facts.

Is it any wonder that the members of the First National Exhibitors Circuit are glad to rest their affairs in his hands as secretary and treasurer.

His intimates and employees swear by him with equal voice; his employees because—"if he gives you a job to do he lets you do it yourself. He doesn't bother you by fussing about details, and if there's anything wrong he tells you, not someone else."

He lives in Philadelphia—one-half of the time. The other half is spent in New York at the First National offices. His publicity department has strict instructions that "he doesn't like publicity for himself."

But as we near the close of our page we must mention the one blot on the Schwalbe escutcheon.

He was once a musician—and he played an atrocious instrument.

We are not sure which, but our informant says—either the trombone or the oboe.

Think of it in connection with the fact that Jesse Lasky once played a cornet, that B. A. Rolfe played some other sort of a thing-a-majig.

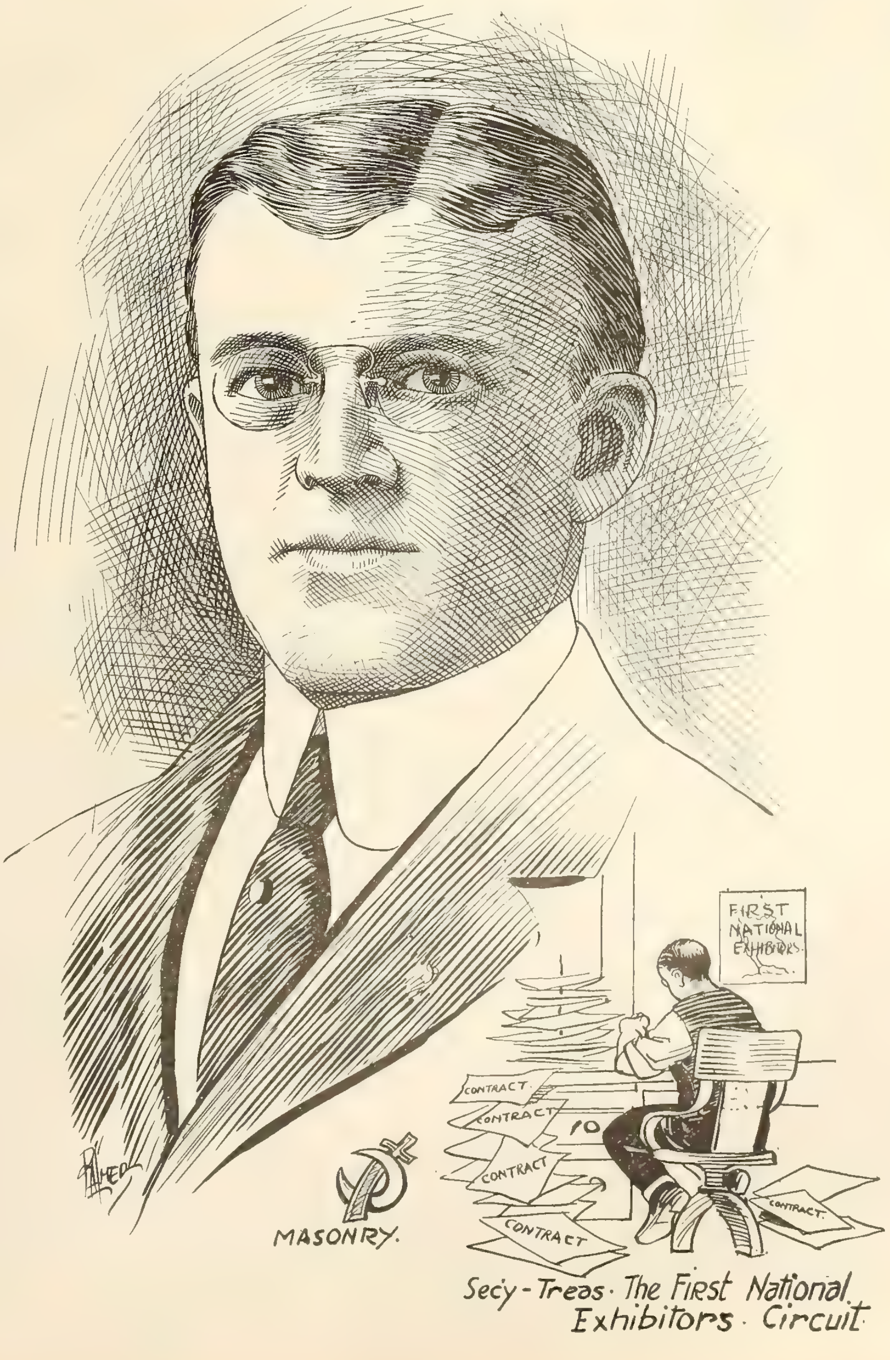
We begin to harbor a suspicion that if we could dig deeply enough into the history of many other picture magnates we might find a whole film orchestra.

Which brings to our mind a suggestion—why not as one of the features of the coming Boston Exposition a Film Magnates Band?

We'll almost wager that William A. Brady will volunteer for the bass drum.

And then every time William A. got going too loud with the bass Jesse Lasky could inject a little softly artistic cornet note.

And if the pace got too fast Harry Schwalbe would be there with the conservative purring of the oboe.



Secy-Treas. The First National Exhibitors Circuit

Prepare to Fight Uninformed Zealots

REPORTS come from California that certain school teachers in the neighborhood of Los Angeles are starting a movement to keep the children away from motion pictures by urging them to invest the amount that they would spend in this manner in thrift stamps.

This plan to deny the children, to say nothing of the elders, innocent amusement has no support from Government officials or from any persons in authority, but evidently arises from the misguided zeal of persons who do not realize that one of the most essential things in these days of war is to keep the public cheerful and contented.

A FEW days ago a West Virginia exhibitor reported the activity of the principal of a school in her community who was taking advantage of his position to fight motion pictures. He has been opposed to them in times of peace, but he is taking advantage of the war to make the false statement that the Government is urging the public to save the amount that they would spend in this cheap amusement and put it into War Savings Stamps.

At the request of this theatre proprietor, the Exhibitors' Service Bureau prepared the advertisement which appears in the opposite page to show the public exactly how the Government stands on the motion picture. If you are having a fight of this sort waged in your community, you would do well to use this. It could be employed as a page less, in smaller space, or broken up into a series of talks with the public.

Tell the public the truth about the relation of the Government and the motion pictures. Don't let hypocrites and narrow-minded zealots endanger your business. Keep the public informed and you need not fear for the result.

Vanderlip Backs Up Exhibitors

Writes Letter to Los Angeles Asking That Alleged German Propaganda be Thrown Out of Savings Campaign—Business Hurt

F. A. VANDERLIP, chairman of the National War Savings Committee, has come to the aid of Los Angeles exhibitors in their fight against alleged German propaganda which has made great inroads, it is said, on the exhibiting business of the California city and other places along the Coast.

This situation, which motion picture men attribute to German spies and sympathizers, was first brought to light May 15 in a telegram from Samuel Goldfish to William A. Brady, claiming that the school children of Los Angeles were being urged by teachers to discontinue patronizing the picture shows. Frank A. McDonald, president of the Theatre Owners' Association, Inc., also wired Mr. Brady appealing for immediate action.

When Mr. Vanderlip's attention was called to the matter, he immediately wrote the National War Savings Committee branch in Los Angeles, suggesting that in the savings campaign no specific thing be picked out and discriminated against.

Mr. Goldfish's wire of May 15 to Mr. Brady follows:

"A very serious situation has arisen in the city of Los Angeles, whereby the school children are made to pledge themselves not to patronize motion picture theatres, thereby saving money with which to buy thrift stamps. This situation is so serious here that the picture theatres have been deprived of fifty per cent. of their revenue. If we as an industry allow a condition like this to develop throughout the country it will put the majority of exhibitors in this country to bankruptcy, thereby affecting the produccers and reducing their revenue. I therefore strongly urge you to immediately call a meeting of the War Committee and put this before them so that the matter may be taken up with the proper officials in Washington immediately."

Mr. Vanderlip's letter of May 16 follows:

C. A. Davidson, Esquire,
State Director, National War Savings Committee,
317 Trust and Savings Building,
Los Angeles, Cal.
My Dear Mr. Davidson:

Word just comes to me from Los Angeles that there is a movement there in connection with the War Savings Campaign to pledge the school children specifically not to attend motion picture shows. The motion picture men are naturally very much concerned about such a movement as this. I do not feel that it is the sort of movement to be encouraged. I am very strong, indeed, in the belief that school children and every one else should be pledged to economize, to save and to buy War Savings Stamps, but for the War Savings organization to pick out the specific thing to be refrained from is, it seems to me, a mistake. I am certain that the general pledge scheme which has been so successful in Nebraska, and which we are adopting for the whole country is the right move, but if we add to that pledges to specifically refrain from any particular type of expenditure it seems to me we are exceeding what would be good judgment.

There is, too, another side to the matter. The motion picture people have been very well disposed, not only toward War Savings, but toward all the Government activities, and in many ways have been extremely helpful to the Government. Right at the moment many motion picture organizations are offering to carry "trailers" on all the releases of new picturs for the next three months, and it comes particularly hard when they are co-operating in this way for us to specifically select them as particular ground for economy.

That a child may find it necessary to economize in his motion picture expenditures it he takes a pledge to save, that it may be desirable for him to refrain from such expenditures, is undoubtedly true, but I do not think that we should start a campaign specifically to pledge school children not to go to motion picture shows.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) F. A. VANDERLIP,
Chairman, National War Savings Committee.

It is predicted by exhibitors and producers that this communication will likely stamp out a growing evil, and that a great business which would otherwise probably have been undermined, will be saved to instill additional patriotism into the people and contribute its tremendous revenue to the Government.

Motor Express a Life Saver

The motor truck express service between Washington and Baltimore has become a life-saver to exhibitors and exchangemen in this territory at this time of railroad congestion and mail delays. It is believed that a similar service would be helpful among groups of other towns.

To Give Crippled Soldiers Course in Operating

A motion picture operating school has been organized by the American Red Cross to be run in conjunction with the reconstruction of the cripped soldier movement, the idea being to give our crippled soldiers a six-weeks' course of instruction in motion picture projection in the Red Cross Institute, 311 4th avenue, New York City, and then secure positions for the men who complete the course in the various theatres throughout the country.

William Fox, the Nicholas Power Company, the Precision Machine Company and a number of others have volunteered their help and co-operation. All those who are willing to do likewise are advised to communicate with James R. Cameron, Instructor of Motion Picture Operating to the American Red Cross, at the above address.

Soriero Denies Contract with the Drews

Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and the Strand, Lowell, who was in New York last week, was indignant over the report published in a local sheet that he had signed a contract with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, who are not on the legitimate stage, to produce a series of comedies for the screen. While the Drews are not playing in Boston, and they are great friends of Mr. Soriero, they have had no business relations whatsoever, and Mr. Soriero denies that there was the slightest ground for the published report.

Women's Federation Turns Down Censorship

At the biennial meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs held at Hot Springs, Ark., the first week of May, a group in favor of State censorship endeavored to railroad a resolution through a special conference called to discuss the subjects of local regulation and the Better Films Movement. After a considerable wrangle the resolution, which carried an endorsement of State censorship, was suppressed.

The Motion Picture and the War

PRESIDENT WILSON and every member of the United States Government have urged the people to cheerfulness during the war, to follow their normal customs without waste or without prodigality.

EVERY branch of the Government has used the motion picture for propaganda since the start of the war and has afforded every facility, under proper supervision to the portrayal of the various governments on all of the screens of the country.

AT the direction of President Wilson the Committee on Public Information has gone further than this and has inaugurated its own department of motion pictures, taking all of these employes from established film companies.

THIS committee itself will make pictures for showing in the regular established theatres. One seven-reel feature has already been completed and shown in a few sections of the country in advance of its general release.

THE war and navy departments have specifically authorized sailors and soldiers to take part in feature pictures. "The Unbeliever," a recent production, had the cooperation of an entire corps of U. S. Marines and, with the exception of a few professional players, they supplied the entire cast. This was a commercial picture.

SOLDIERS of the United States Government were used in "Over the Top" and many other pictures. Sailors have appeared in features without number.

PRESIDENT WILSON has never refused to pose for a motion picture. Not a week goes by in which he does not appear in one.

MRS. WILSON is a regular attendant at Washington theatres. Within the month the Associated Press has chronicled her appearance at the showing of one of the big features.

SECRETARY of the Treasury McAdoo had many times publicly given the motion picture theatres credit for a great share of the work that is being done toward winning the war.

TEN cents out of every dollar that is paid in to the motion picture theatres of the country go into the United States Treasury to fight the Hun. In addition to that there are other taxes on the manufacturers of the film.

SECRETARY McADOO relied on the motion picture theaters to help raise the three Liberty Loans and expressed his delight with the work that they had done.

WHEN the Third Liberty Loan came Secretary McAdoo called upon many of the motion picture stars to help in the work. Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, William S. Hart, Marie Dressler, and scores of others made tours of various sections of the country and raised an aggregate of millions of dollars.

WHEN Food Conservator Hoover wishes a special appeal to go to the country he calls in the motion picture men and this appeal is flashed on the screens of the bigger theatres.

WHEN the Red Cross drives come, when an impetus is needed for War Savings Stamps, or any other war fund is needed, the motion picture theater is called upon and always responds.

AND FOR OUR SOLDIERS:

THE Government has endorsed motion pictures by erecting in the various training camps Liberty theatres where the same class, and the same actual pictures that you see at the picture play are shown. These are not only shown with the consent of the Government, but by its direct order.

THE Government knows that no one thing is more calculated to keep glad the hearts of the soldiers and sailors than the motion picture.

GEN. PERSHING has called for more motion pictures to be sent abroad. He has asked for the kind that you are seeing day after day at the (Your Theatre). He arranges the leaves of absence so that the men shall have certain relief from trench life to attend the motion picture theatres behind the lines.

THE Y. M. C. A. shows motion pictures—the sort that you see at the (Your Theatre)—in every one of their "huts" on the battlefield.

THE Government of the United States has endorsed the motion picture in every way that it possibly could, in raising money, in educating the people, and in keeping the people happy and confident.

THE Government knows what it wants. It has not hesitated to tell you when this or that should be done. It tells you in so many words to go to the motion picture—AND IT SENDS ITS FIGHTING MEN THERE AND WHEN THEY CANNOT GO IT SENDS THE PICTURES TO THEM.

Help the Government Win The War. You Will Help It By Going To the Motion Picture Theatre and Contributing Your Part in the War and You Will Be Following the Express Endorsement of the President and Every Element of the Nation's Government.

Does the Government Know Better What It Wants or Some Individual Who Sets Himself Up as Greater Than Woodrow Wilson and Every One of His Aids in the War of Democracy Against Autocracy?

Eight Hayakawa's for Mutual

Releases of Haworth Productions to Cover a Period of Forty-eight Weeks—First Is Due July 15

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION will distribute for Haworth Pictures Corporation eight Sessue Hayakawa special productions. The negotiations for the distribution of the pictures have been conducted by Charles Greenberg, secretary of Haworth Pictures Corporation, and James M. Sheldon, president of Mutual.

The first of the pictures, which has just been completed under the working title of "His American Birthright," will be released July 15, and will be available for pre-lease to the leading exhibitors throughout the United States by special arrangement.

"We have set out to make Hayakawa pictures with a greater attention to vehicles and the refinements of production than he has ever had before," says Mr. Greenberg. "He has been thoroughly established with an earned reputation of stardom of the first magnitude. For a long time it has been true that his name on the billing means a big house and a long run.

"We have proceeded therefore to lay out a line of production for him that will enable his box office value to demonstrate itself and exploit itself unhampered by any parallel releases or releasing conditions.

"The cast in the first picture is certainly ample evidence of our sincerity of purpose in giving Hayakawa the ample support that will enable his best work. The cast includes Marin Sais and Tsuri Aoki — Mrs. Hayakawa — Mary Anderson, and a number of others who have played 'on their own' in productions of feature merit. The direction is by William Worthington.

"Hayakawa has in our opinion a remarkably well established box office value. He is quite what one would call a 'natural star.' There has been nothing of artificial stimulation in his career. He has not been a creation of advertising and publicity. He has made his screen fame for himself, entirely out of his own ability and genius. That means a standing with the public that makes his pictures a sound investment for the motion picture exhibitor.

"We have chosen the distribution facilities of the Mutual Film Corporation after an investigation which leads us to believe that through the Mutual we will get the benefit of a service to the exhibitor which has been firmly established and well demonstrated. The Hayakawa pictures will, of course, be accompanied by a full line of exhibitor aids and advertising accessories which will be in keeping and in quality harmony with the pictures themselves."

The first of the pictures will be at the Mutual's exchanges shortly.

Lone Star Redeems 10 Per Cent. of Preferred

Ten per cent. of the outstanding preferred stock of the Lone Star Corporation, a $1,500,000 concern, was redeemed at 110, plus accrued dividends, May 15, according to announcement issued from the offices of the corporation in Chicago.

The Lone Star Corporation is the concern organized for the merchandising of the series of twelve comedies featuring Charles Chaplin, produced by the Lone Star Corporation and released through the Mutual Film Corporation.

A large percentage of the original capital represented by the preferred stock has been returned to the stockholders. Meanwhile the pictures are said to have a long working life ahead.

La Voy Off for a Third Tour of Battlefronts

Merl La Voy, war camera correspondent, who is well known in the picture industry for his work in connection with "Heroic France," released through Mutual, is leaving shortly for a third tour of the European battlefronts with Burton Holmes, the lecturer.

Triangles in High Place

"Triangle pictures are shown here in what I think is the highest theatre in the world," said D. T. Powell, manager of the Tomboy theatre, at Smuggler, Col. "The floor of our theatre is something over 12,000 feet above sea level."

Not Captain Warwick

Similarity of names has misled friends of Captain Robert Warwick who have recently read in various publications an item to the effect that "Robert Warwick, former film star, now with the U. S. Army in France, was awarded $1,000 by the California State Industrial Accident Commission, for injuries received in March, 1917, while employed by the Kalem Company."

Captain Warwick is not the Robert Warwick referred to in the item. He was never employed by the Kalem Company and has never worked in the West. The Robert Warwick alluded to was a stock actor.

Mabton Theatre Not Sold

C. M. Dunn, owner of the Mabton theatre, Mabton, Wash., writes that the statement made in the West Coast Edition of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in the issue of May 11 that he had disposed of the theatre to J. A. Humphrey was erroneous. Mr. Dunn states that Mr. Humphrey has a short lease of the lower floor only, and that he has donated the use of the upper floors to the Red Cross.

More Pathe Men Enter the Service

A. W. Smith, assistant manager to A. M. Holah, of the Cleveland Pathe Exchange, has been drafted, and Edouard Helouise, Pathe booker, has volunteered for service as an interpreter. Helouise is a Frenchman.

South Awakening to Needs of Sunday, Says Cocks

Advisory Secretary Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Review, has just returned from the South where he says he noted a liberalizing tendency regarding the opening of motion picture theatres on Sunday afternoons to answer the demand for recreation for the soldiers. He personally observed the conditions in the camp cities of the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida and says regarding his observations:

"All of these cities have a strong feeling about preserving the sanctity of Sunday and the closing of commercial entertainments on that day. In view of the fact, however, that the church has not made good in solving the problem of the Sunday activities of the soldiers in neighboring cantonments, the pressure of events is tending toward the recognition of the need of some form of commercial entertainment on Sunday afternoons. In Chattanooga, the ministers have not objected to the use of pictures on Sunday and the citizens feel that the community atmosphere has been improved as a result. The entertainments have not interfered with the church services. The influence on the non-church group has been found to be decidedly wholesome. In Atlanta the ministers have agreed not to oppose motion pictures in the city auditorium on Sunday afternoons if no admission charge is required. Some fine motion pictures are now being shown in Charleston. In all the towns mentioned the exhibitors have been peculiarly alive to the needs of their cities and have exercised discernment in the selection of pictures. In this way they have won the respect of their communities."

G. V. Martin in Cincinnati United Office

George Vivian Martin has been assigned to the Cincinnati office of the United Picture Theatres, Inc., which now is under the management of C. C. Hite. Speaking of the film situation, Mr. Martin says: "For several years I have been making an independent investigation of the 'movie' field, with a view of organizing among the exhibitors a co-operative association. Much of the producers' profits are paper profits. The waste is stupendous — a crash is inevitable. The crisis is near at hand. Where is the exhibitor going to find himself with a house on his hands and no films to exhibit? Truly the future, if judged by the past, is anything but promising. I do not say this as critical of any one. It is the result of fundamental error, growing worse as the days grow apace."

George D. Baker Recovers Rapidly

George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, who was operated upon recently for appendicitis, has improved so rapidly at the Good Samaritan Hospital in Los Angeles that he is expected to be discharged in a few days.

Jewel Against Fake Publicity

Corporation Cites Example of Exhibitor Who Claimed Sheriff Stopped "The Kaiser" in Deference to Pro-Germans

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC., serves notice that it is going to prosecute wherever possible under the laws of the state in which the offense is perpetrated, all publicity men of whatever description who in future shall promote Jewel pictures through dishonest publicity and gross misstatement of facts.

This action is taken as a result of the methods said to have been adopted by an Iowa exhibitor in promoting "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." The alleged facts in this case as set forth by Jewel are as follows:

"The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" was scheduled for presentation at the Amuse-U theatre, Clinton, Iowa, on May 15, 16 and 17. Several days before the opening, H. E. Friedman, manager of the Jewel exchange at Des Moines, from which Clinton is served, received a telegram notifying him that Claude Ramsey, sheriff of the Clinton county had served notice upon the theatre that he would not allow the presentation of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," owing to the large pro-German sentiment in Clinton.

Without investigating farther Manager Friedman got in touch with the Des Moines Chamber of Commerce and the office of the Attorney General of Iowa for the purpose of forcing Sheriff Ramsey to allow the presentation as scheduled.

Manager Friedman also sent a long telegram to President Wilson, informing him of the alleged action of Sheriff Ramsey and requesting action on the part of the Federal Government to force the showing of the picture which shows the Kaiser as he is.

After doing everything possible in his territory, Mr. Friedman notified the New York headquarters of what had transpired, forwarding a copy of all telegrams received by him and of those he had sent.

Immediately upon receipt of the news H. M. Berman, general manager of Jewel Productions got in touch with headquarters of the American Defense Society in New York City and the leaders in the society prepared to take steps to make the immediate future of Sheriff Ramsey uncomfortable. They first wired him demanding that he allow the presentation of "The Kaiser" at Clinton, to receive a reply immediately from the sheriff announcing that he had not forbidden the presentation and had no intention of so doing.

The fact that Sheriff Ramsey had not issued any orders or even a request that the picture should not be presented also was verified by Norman Samish, manager of the Amuse-U theatre, for which the picture had been booked.

As a result of this attempt at dishonest promotion Jewel Productions has made the announcement that in the future it will join with any newspaper that wishes to prosecute any person giving dishonest stories to the paper regarding any of the Jewel productions. This form of procedure will be possible in several states which have laws making the giving of dishonest and distorted news to newspapers a misdemeanor.

In commenting upon the Clinton case, Manager H. M. Berman of Jewel Productions, Inc., said:

"This is a sample of dishonest publicity that has been used in picture promotion. Any photoplay that needs this kind of publicity should be shelved. 'The Kaiser' certainly does not need any publicity of this kind nor does any production released by Jewel."

Film Men Buy Bonds

The Pleiades Club, the oldest dining club in New York, held its final banquet of the season at the Biltmore, Sunday, April 28. The war spirit was much in evidence, the program being punctuated with ringing patriotic speeches by Judge Charles F. Moore, Anthony Euwer and John C. Freund.

The big thing of the night came when a de luxe copy of the yearbook was raffled off. This was won by George W. Bowesman who promptly turned it back to the club to be re-sold for Liberty Bonds, each bid to constitute a purchase, the highest bidder to possess the book.

Amelia Bingham was the auctioneer and in ten minutes the book was knocked down and $27,700 had been subscribed. The subscribers were the following:

Henry Evans, $10,000; P. A. Powers, $7,000; Judge Charles F. Moore, $5,100, and Messrs. Dalzell, $2,000; Foley, $700; Freund, $500; Neal, $400; Mrs. Winfield, $1,000, and Mrs. D. F. Murphy, $1,000.

President Howard S. Neiman presided. On motion of First Vice-President G. Warren Landon, a rising vote of thanks was extended him for his able conduct of a very prosperous season.

Leases the Murray Hill in Flushing

The Murray Hill theatre, located at Broadway and Fourteenth street, Flushing, has been leased by Charles Krummeck from Walter Eagan.

The theatre has been entirely redecorated. The policy will be feature pictures, booked through the exchanges of Paramount, Artcraft, Metro and Bluebird. Charles Raffle will be the resident manager.

Mr. Krummeck will continue also to conduct the Krummeck Studio in New York.

St. Louis United Members Forming Club

The St. Louis exhibitor-members of United Picture Theatres of America held a luncheon at the Elks Club, of that city, on May 8, during which preparatory measures were taken for the formation of a local United Club. Floyd Lewis, the St. Louis district manager for the United, is sending an outline of his club plan to his colleagues in other cities in the hope that similar get-together associations will be formed all over the country.

Cleveland to Have Three More Fine Houses

As a result of two real estate transactions which were completed May 5 and pending negotiations in a third, Cleveland, it is said, will be provided with three more motion picture houses of the higher type.

In a deal handled by Joseph Laronge of the Joseph Laronge Company, properties at East Sixty-third street and Euclid avenue and also at Auburndale and Euclid avenue have been taken over by the Mall Company, owners of the Mall and Alhambra theatres, and they will be improved by motion picture theatres as soon as building conditions permit.

Joseph Laronge further announced that arrangements are being made by the Mall Company to erect another theatre, with a seating capacity of approximately 3,000, at a cost of $300,000. It is to be located in the downtown section somewhere in the vicinity of Euclid avenue and East Ninth street.

In both the transactions closed May 5, the Mall Company purchased from the Grace Ella Realty Company the leasehold interests in the properties. The property at the northwest corner of East Sixty-third street and Euclid avenue has a frontage of 89 feet and a depth of 300 feet. It was formerly owned by Lester A. Cobb.

The Euclid-Auburndale location is 52 x 200 feet and was sold through the Laronge office for J. A. House, president of the Guardian Savings and Trust Company, to the Grace Ella Realty Company in 1916.

It is estimated that the value of the property is about $30,000, while the parcel at Euclid and East Sixty-third street is valued at $105,000.

Seats 300, Asks Fourth Day for "Tarzan"

J. L. Shipley, of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, of Des Moines, member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, reports that S. A. Hayman, of Grand Island, Neb., who seats less than 300 in his theatre, telegraphed for an extra day on "Tarzan of the Apes," after playing it to capacity at high prices for three days. He produces the telegram as evidence.

Mr. Shipley also takes occasion to compliment Harry Reichenbach for the campaign book he put out on the feature. He states that he is looking for many more months of big business.

Yeggs Make a Big Haul in Cincinnati Theatre

Early on the morning of Monday, April 29, three yeggs blew the safe of the Family theatre, Cincinnati, and secured $3,500, the combined receipts for Saturday and Sunday. Shortly after midnight the porter was called to the front door. Three men, who claimed to be detectives, stated that they were looking for a $150 brooch that had been left in the theatre by a woman. He allowed them to enter. They overpowered him and imprisoned two scrub women in a room, nailing the door shut. Then they blew the safe and made their escape with the booty.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

" Rose o' Paradise "

Six Long Winded Reels That Bessie Barriscale Can't Hold Up

(Paralta-Hodkinson—May 13)

DID you ask me what is the matter with this picture? Well you can't make six reels out of material that is hardly enough for three. In my career I have seen some padded pictures but they have to go some to beat this one. About two reels are used to show almost exclusively Miss Barriscale and her kittens.

Why in the world the Paralta people should stick to the six reel standard when by trimming off some of that excessive padding they could improve if not save the situation, is beyond my comprehension.

The opening of the story shows some not very pleasing details that are hardly of any value to an entertainment. A wife dies during her childbirth and the husband loses his mind as a consequence. If it is necessary at all to tell such things a subtitle can very easily tell it in a much less grewsome and displeasing way. The supporting cast is mediocre.

Director James Young must be feeling kind 'a bad about it but anyone who has an idea of his past accomplishments will know he is not to blame.

Pray for rain.

" Who Is to Blame "

Triangle's Latest Lets a New Jap Star Shine

(Triangle—May 10)

THIS offering is so good that it will offer you a pleasant surprise inasmuch as the title, in all probability, will mislead you as to the nature of the subject.

The story opens up in Japan and shows some very beautiful and artistic garden scenes with dancing Geisha girls.

The most striking feature in the whole affair, however, is the wonderful acting of the young Japanese, Jack Abbe. He wins your sympathy from the very beginning with the natural characterization of his role, and retains it to the end. His part is that of a faithful companion-servant who had sacrificed his master's esteem in order to bring about a reconciliation with his wife. It will certainly touch your heartstrings. I am not overestimating matters if I tell you that with his pleasant countenance and the smile that is so characteristic of his race, Abbe if rightly handled will easily contest the field for first honors with his countryman, Mr. Hayakawa. The only difference is that Abbe is better suited for light parts while Mr. Hayakawa for heavy parts.

One of the subtitles which says, " Say Sweet, I hate to give you up so soon," strikes rather discordantly and it is out of harmony with the whole.

NOTE.—Don't pay any attention to the press sheet furnished with this picture if it shows that some one was poisoned, as there " aint no such animal " in the picture. Some one had the good horse-sense of changing all that after the picture was taken. Perhaps the poisoning would make the story more dramatic, but none of us will give a darn about that if it is to be at the expense of the entertainment. And the way the ending has been rearranged will give those who pay their dimes to see a show the entertainment they want, happy, clean and wholesome.

CAST

Taro San	Jack Abbe
Grant Barton	Jack Livingston
Marion Craig	Maud Wayne
Mrs. Craig	Lillian Langdon
Tonia Marsh	Lillian West

Directed by Frank Borzage

THE STORY

While traveling through Japan, Grant Barton, an American, strikes up a friendship with Taro San, a rikshaw boy whom he brings to America on his return. Taro studies hard and learns English. Barton wins the hand of Marion Craig in spite of the objections of her mother. Mrs. Craig becomes suddenly ill in California and wires Marion to come and nurse her. During her absence Barton succumbs to the charms of Tonia Marsh who is in the service of the German Emperor. Wishing to surprise her husband, Marion returns East unannounced and in opening the door sees Tonia in the arms of her husband. Shocked, she immediately returns to her mother's home, who had also returned East.

Taro had seen Marion and tells Barton. He attempts to gain forgiveness from his wife but the mother secretly intervenes and avoids a reconciliation. Taro, by a ruse, makes Tonia believe he is a kin of the Japanese Emperor and she invites him to her house in order to make love to him. As he had planned, Barton finds Tonia in his arms, therefore, that evening he orders Taro from the house. Taro packs but before leaving for Japan, goes to Mrs. Craig's house and tells Marion that Barton is ill and needs her. She goes and this brings the reconciliation Taro planned for the happiness of his master at the cost of his master's esteem.

" His Own Home Town "

A Paramount-Ray Production Up to Standard

(Paramount-Ince—May 27)

ALTHOUGH the plot is rather improbable and Mr. Ray appears much too young for the part, nevertheless " His Own Home Town " on the whole is entertaining. It will especially get you when young Jimmy Duncan (Charles Ray), tells the district attorney he would give him twenty-four hours to get out of town; his father, the hypocrite Bishop, that he had no son and the community could very well get along without his services; and the banker, to withdraw his candidacy as senator. You will be with him in this, as they all were down on him when he was young and a little reckless.

The story is by Larry Evans and tells of a young man in his 'teens who is inclined to be a little wild. His father, a minister of the gospel, is ashamed of him and doesn't want him in the house and the district attorney tries to run him out of town. He leaves, but some years later comes back and assumes the management of the local paper which was willed to him and succeeds in running down the political crooks, his own father included—thus gaining the respect of the town and the love of a girl.

It is a clean attraction and will take well with any audience.

" Believe Me Xantippe "

The Former Stage Success Gives Wallace Reid a Real Chance

(Paramount—May 27)

"BELIEVE ME XANTIPPE " is an offering of the light type, the kind that doesn't require deep thinking on the part of a picturegoer to enjoy it. It is the exact opposite of anything serious and I am sure it will prove very entertaining.

The story, taken from the play of the same name by Frederick Ballard, tells of a young millionaire who entered a wager with two of his friends that he could break the law and get away with it for a year without being arrested by an officer. He wins his bet and a wife.

The picture is clean and the kind that will leave a good taste, besides it will help vary your program.

" Old Hartwell's Cub "

Not Up to William Desmond's Recent Productions

(Triangle—May 19)

I HAVE been used to seeing William Desmond in pretty good photoplays lately, but this one is very disappointing. There is drinking a plenty, a death from intoxication and a secret marriage which is a bigamy, which all go to make you feel depressed. On top of that there is an ending that is anything but logical from an entertaining angle.

The directing is not " overgood " either. The fainting of the girl is too mechanical. As to the subtitles, a little more care and fewer ones would help a whole lot to pull it out of the hole.

You can only get by with this but it will be wise on your part to show something strong in your next change.

"The Golden Goal"

Harry Morey Gets a Well Fitting Role in This Vitagraph

(Vitagraph—May 29)

TAKEN as whole this is a strong dramatic offering that will hold the interest and will entertain. Some points however might not strike just right to some particular tastes. For instance, the picture opens showing a barroom and a man in an intoxicated condition. Irrespective of the dramatic results attained, the starting of an entertainment with such a scene might not help put some spectators in the very best of mood.

There is also a slight reflection against labor unionism in the story. It may not be noticed, however, it is not a good thing to incorporate into pictures however innocently done.

The story was written by Lawrence McCloskey, and tells of John Doran, a sailor, who was attracted to a wealthy society girl. As the barrier of money and education was too great between them, he set out to get both. He was elevated to the job of a foreman in a shipping plant and gained great influence in labor circles. The father of the girl attempted to use this influence by bribing him to call a strike and thus ruin his opponent. Doran accepted the bribe but later when his real manhood awoke and he realized the misery he had brought upon the families of those who had placed all their confidence in him, he exposed his own shameful conduct and tried to repair the wrong by asking them to accept the concession offered by the management of the plant which was reasonable. In the end he married his stenographer, the girl who stood by him and was the cause of his reformation.

Mr. Morey does the best work of his career in this picture. Jean Paige also deserves special mention.

It is a clean offering.

"The Mating of Marcella"

Dorothy Dalton Certain to Please in This Paramount-Ince

(Paramount-Ince—May 20)

THE story in this picture may not be technically perfect, nevertheless, like "Love Me," it will prove another hit for Miss Dalton as it is clean, interesting and contains those little touches that appeal strongly to human emotions.

The story tells of a young girl who, thinking she was doing a good act, consented to assume the name of a frivolous woman and establish a residence in Reno, Nevada, in order that the latter may secure a divorce from her wealthy husband and follow her new love. The woman with her suitor was killed in a railroad accident, leaving the girl free to respond to the real love of the man whose name she had assumed.

The direction comes fully up to the standard of Mr. Neil's former productions. The photography is very good. Some of the interior scenes are lavish.

This attraction will please any audience.

"A Soul for Sale"

Dorothy Phillips Pleases in a Dramatic Subject

(Jewel—May 19)

NATURALLY, you prefer first of all that a drama be clean, based on a logically written and interesting story with tense situations and be entertaining. Well, you will find all the above mentioned conditions in this offering and more. It has good photography and lightings that help to make it look like a painting on the wall.

The story was written by Evelyn Campbell and was published in Snappy Stories magazine. It tells of a widowed mother who, in order to keep up appearances in society, forged, implicating her innocent daughter. To cover her misdeeds, she urged her daughter to marry a wealthy old man.

The daughter was about to consent in order to please her mother's vanity, when her mother compromises her in the eyes of the man she really loved by entering his room with the intention of stealing the money he won at gambling. Her soul revolts and she refuses to further shield a thief even though her mother. Eventually she marries the man she loved.

Some of you may think the title sounds too suggestive, but all the suggestiveness is confined in the title and not in the story itself. I have recently heard some kicks about giving a suggestive title to a clean picture and I think they are just. It seems to me it is just sticking to the habits of the old, old days. It would be well to have clean pictures given clean titles, but if I were to have a choice between a clean picture with a suggestive title and a suggestive picture with a clean title I would a thousand times rather choose the former.

"Midnight Madness"

Rupert Julian's Name a Guarantee on This Mystery Tale

(Bluebird—June 3)

WHENEVER I hear of Mr. Julian's name connected with a picture I can almost call it a sure bet before I see it. He has hardly turned out a bad one for quite a long time.

"Midnight Madness" is a detective story with a mystery element running throughout that is not explained until the end.

The story was written by Elliot J. Clawson, and tells of a young man (Rupert Julian) who was hired as a private detective to recover some priceless jewels after the police had failed. He got the jewels but incidentally fell into the charms of a pretty young lady (Ruth Clifford), who unwittingly had helped a gang of crooks steal them.

Those of you who remember "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" will find this feature even more interesting and entertaining. It is clean and will please any audience, high or low brow alike.

"A Daughter of the West"

Baby Marie and the Pickanniny Score, But Western Stuff Is Far Fetched

(Pathe—May 26)

IT is strange that all of us should shout about waste but are inclined to overlook the most important source, the story. There is where the real waste takes place. For my part I am not inclined to blame the author as much as I do the system that permits such stories as "A Daughter of the West" to be picturized and waste real good money.

The first two reels of this picture are fine and in keeping with the capabilities of Baby Osborne. There is enough good clean comedy in it to satisfy. However, the material wasn't there for a five reeler, so the author had to think of something to stretch it to that length and he inserted some Wild Western stuff. It would not be a bad addition if it had been written intelligently, as it would add something different, a combination of babyish pranks with something serious. But the way it has been written and presented it will be fit to show only to those of the grown ups that don't even possess a child's intelligence.

The little colored boy is a real scream in this picture, and he is about the best redeeming feature.

"De Luxe Annie"

Norma Talmadge in a Crook Play That Should Please

(Select—May 19)

CROOK plays, when well presented, prove always a good attraction. You can bank on this one pleasing your patrons. It contains many good factors, such as a good plot (although not plausible), swift action and a few heart touches that all help to entertain an audience.

The story originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and was later seen on the stage. It tells of Julie Kendall (Norma Talmadge), wife of Walter Kendall (Frank Mills), who is hit on the head by a crook causing the past to become a blank to her. In her wanderings she meets the same crook (Eugene O'Brien), and is forced to become his confederate. After a thorough search by specially detailed detectives she is located. Eventually she is cured by an operation.

The picture is clean and will appeal to all classes.

HUCK AND TOM (Jack Pickford—Paramount)	Extra Big	"Fine for family trade." "Good clean stuff that brings business." "Dandy picture." "Becoming very popular." "Excellent." "Positively nothing to surpass this release. A clean-up anywhere." "Big, but not as good as 'Tom Sawyer'." "Best this star ever made." "Good." "Received fairly well."
HUMDRUM BROWN (Walthal—Paralta)	Average	Not up to Paralta standard. Poor story."
KAISER, THE (Jewel)	Extra Big	"Biggest since 'Birth of a Nation'! Broke all house records." "Gave extra midnight show." "Over-boosted and with impossible ending, but a money-getter." "Broke records for past two years. Held over for three extra days." "A wonderful production. Packed them in." "Extra big at big prices." "Biggest box office attraction ever playing this city. Patrons thought it great." "Broke all records." "All week great."
LANDLOPER, THE (Metro—Lockwood)	Average	"Very good picture." "Pleased very much." "Very fair picture." "Not as good as usual." "Just an average programme offering, but Lockwood always draws."
LA TOSCA (Fredericks—Paramount)	Average	"Good production, well staged, but not generally liked." "This type of picture does not draw well." "People do not care for this kind of play. Anything with costume is dead." "Very good picture." "Failed to please and failed to produce the cash. Too gruesome' Heard many complaints. Not a laugh in picture." "Very good." "Subject too old.' "Good picture; poor business." "Pauline Frederick is losing her hold on our patrons. Stories are not what people like."
LAND OF PROMISE, THE (Burke—Paramount)	Average	"Star was killed by serial, 'Gloria's Romance'!"
LES MISERABLES (Farnum—Fox)	Extra Big	"Capacity, great feature." "Return engagement, business held up all week." "Great story; great production." "Very fine production." "Farnum does his best work." "Patrons satisfied, but too long for my house." (700 seats in high rent section.) "Strong picture. Well done. Star at his best." "Good."
LIE, THE (Artcraft—Ferguson)	Average	"Very good picture because it had heart appeal." "Very good. Pleased all."
LIMOUSINE LIFE (Thomas—Triangle)	Average	"Appeals to the ladies, but not the men."
LOVE ME (Dalton—Paramount)	Average	"Star well liked. This is a dandy picture." "Big business for me." "Fair drawing power, but watch this star." "One of the best we have had." "Light production with light story."
LOADED DICE (Keenan—Pathe)	Big	"Remarkable. Great production." "Good picture." "No drawing power." "Ought to have done better; comments good." "Morbid story. Lots of crime. Very dramatic." "Good story but this star gets no dough." "Splendid picture, though story is morbid. Star fine" "Bound to please them all." "Up to Keenan's standard."

Big Toledo Houses Blaze Way

Six Theatres Show Right Way to Advertise, But Many Pass Up Opportunity—Co-operation One Day a Week

TOLEDO, O., furnishes a group of the best advertised theatres in the country, houses that are not afraid to use big space and to use it intelligently. Especially in the Saturday and Sunday papers the rule is big space and striking copy with a minimum amount of reading matter. Toledo is in marked contrast to most cities and the credit is all on Toledo's side.

All three of the papers have special motion picture departments once a week and these aid the theatres in the preparation of the copy. This is a good sign, proof that where attention is devoted to motion picture matters by the newspaper it will pay. It was the Toledo Times that blazed the way in motion picture co-operation some years ago and now the two other papers are following suit in an excellent manner, at least so far as one day a week is concerned.

With the possible exception of the Seattle Times, there is not a paper that presents more striking and bigger space advertising than does Toledo, a city of 185,000. As a matter of fact all of Ohio seems to be well up in exploitation—with the sad exception of Cincinnati, of which we will hear more in a later issue. However, Toledo offers a rather peculiar situation in that all of the emphasis is placed on the downtown houses and little effort is made to appeal to the neighborhood exhibitors. The newspapers frankly admit that they want to get the people downtown, and the situation seems to warrant that because any one of the downtown houses uses more space than all the neighborhood theatres put together would use. However, if we were running a neighborhood house in Toledo it would be mighty hard to keep us out of a good thing and even if our space were small as compared with the bigger fellows, we would jump right in.

Advertising is made comparatively easy for the exhibitors of that city because there are only three newspapers and only one published on Sunday. This is the Times, which is also the only morning paper. The afternoon papers are the Blade and the News-Bee which is credited by the Lord and Thomas newspaper directory as having more circulation than the two others put together. Yet this paper gives the least co-operation of the three, mighty short-sighted policy. And one is apt to find this same policy prevailing in other cities. Some papers, because they lead in circulation seem to get so chesty that they fail to give their readers the amount of matter that they are entitled to get. The News-Bee's policy is not encouraging.

Now just a word about the theatres in Toledo. There are forty houses, of which ten are first-run and twenty-six neighborhood. Of these six theatres advertise regularly daily and Sunday and nine advertise either in the Saturday afternoon or the Sunday issues. That is not a splendid showing for the theatres as a whole, but, as we said at the start, it is the excellent work of the theatres that do advertise that makes Toledo stand out on the motion picture map.

Toledo's situation is so simple that it gives us a good chance to analyze the character of advertising which prevails there. Let us look first at the Sunday Times. This paper issues each Sunday a separate eight-page section called the "Amusement Section." In the winter it includes the legitimate stage, and music. The first page is from a syndicate and gives interesting matter in general about motion pictures. For instance, in the issue from which we are reproducing pages the story is "Following the Camera with Fox Players," and includes a big layout of pictures of William Farnum, Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix and Winnifred Westover. Besides this article the page it occupies with "Answers to Fans" and "Studio Notes."

Now we have reproduced the second page of this section. Here the Alhambra theatre occupies a space a little more than fourteen inches deep across five columns. Now right here is one thing to note about all of the Toledo papers; they never sacrifice the name of the theatre and their own especially designed name plates for anything. The Alhambra uses a cut of Clara Kimball Young in the lower left hand corner and then plays the name of the star and the title in large type and just says a few words about the production and then goes on to give the rest of the program. Turning to the Saturday edition of the Blade it will be noted that the Alhambra occupies smaller space there, twelve inches across three columns, but the same simple effect is employed. The two column, ten-inch display of the Alhambra in the News-Bee ranks about with the average motion picture advertisement.

Loew's Valentine theatre has sixteen inches across six columns on "The Kaiser," and again this is good advertising. The character of this production merits the use of the black and white effect and smashing statement which are borne out by the picture itself. The same display is used in all three papers.

Topping that display by one inch across the same width, the Auditorium smashes the title of "Restitution" across the whole advertisement. The writer uses considerable of the circus style in his reading matter, but this is a picture that will stand for that sort of advertising, though we believe that this picture could have been merchandized even more effectively. While not occupying so much space a better prepared display is that appearing in the Saturday News-Bee for it hits the essential points in big type and then allows the reader to go into the descriptive matter or not, as he pleases. In the Blade the display is slightly less than a half page, but the absence of cuts and the mass of type rather weakens its appeal.

Temple theatre uses fifteen inches across seven columns in the Times and the result is a well nigh perfect advertisement. The name of the theatre, the name of the star and the title are properly displayed. The only change that we could suggest would be to bring the cut at the right up larger so that the top of Farnum's head would have come immediately under the title. The wording of the advertisement is excellent, and you will note that without losing any strength of statement the superlative has been carefully avoided. The eleven inch, six column display in the Blade is much better in some respects but "The world's greatest actor in the world's greatest story" is rather too strong a line. The eleven inch, five column advertisement in the News-Bee is the poorest of the lot, the effect being crowded.

Princess uses its largest space in the Times with fifteen inches across seven columns. This display could have been improved by using a large picture of Beban in the role he has in this picture. The cut that was used means nothing except that the designer seemed to think that a cut of some sort belonged there. There is entirely too much comment about the ability of Beban and his leading woman, but otherwise this is good work. This theatre uses ten inches across three columns in the other two papers and a cut of Beban without make up. The smaller type matter under the title should have been incorporated in the Times display instead of some of the matter that was used.

All of these houses run the same bill for a week. The Hippodrome, which uses eight inches across three columns in the Times and News-Bee and six inches in the Blade properly gives the bill of the attention to the NOW show although there is a big attraction for the last half of the week.

Two neighborhood houses advertise. The Pastime uses two inches single column in the Saturday issues and the Orient one and a half in the Blade Saturday.

And what do the newspapers do on Sunday? Besides the syndicate page that we have mentioned the Times devotes all the reading matter space on five pages to stories about productions at

Leading Theatres of Toledo Use Plenty of Space for Their Displays

Carpenter Visions the Screen Millenium

THAT mere length of a picture no longer fools either exhibitor or patron is one of the conclusions reached by every member of the Advisory Board that has discussed the second question introduced in these symposiums—whether they would pay as much for a three or four-reeler or bang-up stuff as they would for a five-reel or longer padded feature with the same stars and the same quality of production.

Last week Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, declared that if necessary there should be fewer productions by the various stars in order that those they make would take on more quality. He declared that the increased interest from the public would more than pay the manufacturer and the player for the trouble, and that this class of productions would be more conducive to the longer run than any other step that could be taken.

Frank L. Newman, president and manager of the Royal and Regent theatres, Kansas City, agreed with Mr. Franklin that he would be willing to pay just as much for the shorter feature, if the story was carried out only to the length justified and not padded merely for the sake of footage. He pointed to the example of crowded houses buying tickets to see only a three-reeler and coming away delighted with the investment that they had made because there was action, speed, ginger in every foot of the picture they did see.

WHEN this question of shortening features to the actual length demanded by the story was suggested by a number of exhibitors and it was discussed informally in the office of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, it was suggested that if the feature should be cut from seven, six or five reels to four or even three, that the exhibitor would have to put on other pictures to fill out the length of the show necessary to satisfy the public. They concluded that it would be a case of the exhibitor himself being forced to pad his show and some believed that it would be better to let the star and the feature director do the padding in the first place.

But that argument does not hold water, according to the views of members of the Advisory Board that have so far been given to the public. Mr. Bowman declared that the shorter feature would enable him to add more current events and that he would please the public the more by so doing, provided the shorter picture itself was satisfactory and left the audience feeling that they had been told the whole story.

George E. Carpenter, whose opinion is published this week, believes that an ideal program could be made out of a four-reel feature, a two-reel comedy and a single topical or travelogue. He declares that it is not the length of a program that brings the patronage, but the quality of it. He points out that certain comedies will pack the house no matter what the feature may be.

MRS. JOSEPH GROSSMAN is just as strong in her statements. She declares that more footage never brought a new patron to a theatre, but that excessive padding has driven many of them away. She declares that the length of the run is never determined by the footage of the picture but by its actual worth, by the interest that it stirs up.

The point is that the exhibitor is thinking for himself. He knows what sort of a program he can do most with it and he wants a chance to build that up. He cannot do it with a long picture, and therefore when the picture is long he demands that it be worth every foot of film that is used to make it.

GEORGE E. CARPENTER, Paramount Empress, Salt Lake, believes that it would be good business policy to pay even more for a crackerjack four-reeler than for the average five-reel feature as they are now made. He puts the blame largely up to the exhibitors themselves because they are always imputating their competitors, though they all know that the surest way to kill off the motion picture fan is to provide unusually long shows.

The writer believes that the overwhelming majority of exhibitors are a unit when it comes to the question of quality versus quantity. The average motion picture patron, too, prefers his screen entertainment concentrated.

A ninety-minute show is long enough. It does not leave audiences satiated and with the feeling as they leave the house that they do not want to see motion pictures again for a week or more. There are mighty few pictures that should go over five reels, in fact, the majority of five-reelers could be greatly cut and still retain the essentials of entertainment.

It would seem good business policy to pay even more for a good four-reel production than an average five thousand feet—provided, of course, it were demonstrated that the shorter subject really was as represented by the optimistic salesman. By all means let us have three and four reel subjects wherein each and every foot tells, rather than the universal five reels with the almost universal quota of padding and camouflage in order to get under the footage wire.

What an ideal program could be made out of a four-reel headliner, a good two-reel comedy and a single topical or travelogue in place of the long drawn out masterpieces some of us occasionally inflict on our long-suffering audiences.

The majority of us long ago realized that it was not the length of the show that drew the crowds, but the quality thereof. It has been demonstrated time and time again that the surest way to kill off the motion picture habit was to serve shows of a dozen or more reels in length.

"Footage Never Brought A New Patron"

Because old man Opposition down the street gives a long show the other Fellow thinks it is up to him to go one reel better, with the inevitable result.

The trouble with the majority of us exhibitors is that we won't stay hitched to a set policy. We see Jones up the street making a killing with a ten-reel humdinger and we go out and corral a footage world-beater and get busy likewise. In short order the whole blamed town is giving two and a half hour shows. Then we clothe ourselves in sackcloth and ashes and figure out how we could have filled the house twice over in three hours if we had stuck to our policy of giving them a good short show.

Back we go to the old policy, raise our right hands and solemnly say "Never again"—only to break out in a fresh place and do it all over again!

These few rambling thoughts are addressed to the exhibitor in the average-sized town for the big city chap with the big capacity is another proposition.

It is not the length of a program which brings the patronage. Chaplin and Arbuckle two-reel comedies will pack a house from pit to dome even if the five-reeler accompanying is "Nellie, the Cafe Vamp" or some other footage flivver.

"Swat the Kaiser," a free Liberty Bond 500-footer, is stacking 'em in yet throughout Utah and the public is sitting through two shows to see it at that in these backwoods. And the exhibitors have the nerve to give "Swat the Kaiser" the big type in their newspaper ads over and above the star of the five-reel feature on the same bill, a feature they are paying real money for, too!

By all means let us have pictures minus padding; that's what the exhibitor has been yelling for these many moons. How we are going to arrive at a generally accepted definition of the word padding on the part of exhibitor and manufacturer alike is another story though.

What some directors call "subtle artistic touches" some exhibitors in their sinful, vulgar way term "hokum," "padding" and other uncouth synonyms.

Anything that will bring the money is worth paying for. Concentrated action shorn of all padding, interpreted by stars of reputation, is what we all desire. At that, if we have to get another reel to fill out the regulation number on the program the exhibitor will stand the gaff, provided the box-office barometer indicates good business.

And by this time the manufacturers will be breaking their necks to climb into the band wagon with the sequel that there will be better stuff, shorter shows (one more for everybody daily) and the grand ushering in of the film millennium—"Quick, Watson, the needle!"

MRS. JOSEPH GROSSMAN, of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, declares that excessive footage never brought a new patron, but that an excessive amount of it has often kept them away. She declares, too, that exhibitors have learned to disregard the advertising value that producers place on new features because through doing so they have fooled the public too often:

The day has come when the exchange of information concerning features is about equal between patron and exhibitor.

The public cannot be fooled by padded pictures any longer and "flashbacks" are as annoying to the patron as it is to the exhibitor. If the producer would carry out a story to the length justified, every exhibitor, I am most certain, would be more than satisfied to run the feature, if it were from four and one-half reels to five reels long. He can then fill in his program with a comedy and any other interesting reel treating of the main topic of the moment, thus making a complete program.

The public does not interest itself in the number of reels, for every up-to-date exhibitor eliminates the reel numbers when he projects the picture on to his screen. The most important thing to be remembered is the degree of interest held during the unwinding of the story.

Footage never brought a new patron but an excessive amount of it has often kept them away.

The footage of a feature even though the story be really worth the length is not conducive to longer runs. Each city or town has by its actual experience realized the policy it must pursue in running features either long or short. The length of the feature has never determined the length of the run. This is determined by the interest it creates.

Exhibitors have learned to disregard the advertising value the producer places on new features and also stars. He has fooled his audience too often.

I am thinking of one producing corporation in particular which placed the most beautiful advertising matter before exhibitors, thereby giving the impression that it was a wonderful high-class production. When viewed it was found to be the rankest melodramatic feature and a disgrace to any house that would book it. Experiences such as these have taught every exhibitor to view the picture before he begins his advertising campaign, so as not to overrate the production.

J. A. PARTINGTON, manager of the California theatre, San Francisco, is satisfied with the pictures that he is getting, being a distinct exception to the rule. However, he believes that the manufacturers should make the pictures between four and five reels because this gives a greater latitude to the program and would cover most subjects:

Answering your inquiry regarding the length of pictures it is my opinion that the great majority of manufacturers have this situation well in hand. I, personally, have no complaint to make about the length of the Paramount and Artcraft pictures, that I am using. I realize that you prefer not to use manufacturers' names in a question like this, but at the same time it is necessary for me to answer your question according to my own situation.

The above manufacturers release their pictures in various lengths from four thousand to sixty-five hundred feet, and my only complaint has been that they have not devoted enough footage in some instances. Padding in my estimation is merely a matter of opinion in most cases. In recent productions I have come across very little so called padding. I think that the manufacturer can make a four, five, six or seven reel picture out of the same story with the seven reel picture as interesting, if not more so, than the four reel. Interesting situations and human touches can be incorporated in a picture to give it added length that will add more than footage to the picture; on the other hand, the same situations or human touches may be left out without materially affecting the picture.

The Paramount released a picture in seven reels called "Little Peppina." They also made the same picture in five reels. Both pictures were very good. The five reeler was not too short, and the seven reeler was not padded, the extra length being taken up with little incidents and human touches that were very enjoyable. The exhibitors were able to book the copy which in their estimation would enable them to get the most money. I showed "Stella Maris" which was released in six full reels, and I am also to show "M'Liss" which is a short five reels. I am sure I for one am not going to complain that "M'Liss" is not as long as "Stella Maris," and therefore should be cheaper. The shorter "M'Liss" will enable me to play to more money than I did with "Stella Maris."

I think manufacturers should aim to make the average program picture between four and five thousand feet in length, as I find that this footage enables you to get better box-office results. With very few exceptions, I think the average story can be produced by a capable director in between four and five thousand feet without padding or slighting the subject. Padding merely means to me the efforts of a director who does not know his business.

Your Idea and Ours

SUNSET THEATRE, Portland, Ore., hit upon a good idea in having a Tom Sawyer week. It is a matter of comment that the first of the two pictures, the one entitled "Tom Sawyer," was something of a disappointment because it did not cover the main story of the universally read Mark Twain book. It was a delightful picture, but it omitted the chief incidents that the thousands who have read the story were looking for. But these came along in the second picture, "Huck and Tom." So Sunset theatre got the idea of including them both in the same week's run.

WASHINGTON AT BROADWAY

And here is a mighty good display but for one thing. We would have carried the hand lettering entirely through the display. There is a jumpy effect when the eye goes from black and white to plain type. The lettering should have been in black, all right, but there is quite a difference in the effect on the eye when straight type is used and when the lettering is in sympathy with the rest of the display. It may be said to give the "changed at last minute effect."

Does the calendar mean anything more to you than a reference list of days?

LAST week we printed the advertisement of a Louisville theatre that was starting the run of "The Kaiser" for a week and which used a space two inches across two columns. A St. Louis newspaper man sends us this "display" from the Sunday Globe-Democrat of the Grand Central theatre on a double bill including "Tarzan of the Apes," and Charley Chaplin in "A Dog's Life." It occupies a space 3¾ inches across two columns. "What," asks our correspondent, "do you think of this for advertising?"

No wonder the report comes from St. Louis that business is bad with the motion picture houses. Here is one of the biggest features that has been produced and the first of the million dollar comedies which have been featured in advertising everywhere. If you want to see what has been done with "Tarzan" turn to the story about the Circle theatre in this issue.

And this is evidently no accident for the Saturday issue of the St. Louis Times which he has before us has no mention of this double bill to open on Sunday. The body of this display is in 6 pt., the smallest on most linotype machines. The whole spirit of the display seems to have been "Do as little as possible."

An ounce of attention is worth a ton of apologies.

HERE is another one of the striking stage settings of Manager Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. Last week the Hippodrome took its patrons to the Land of the Rising Sun. A Japanese garden setting was painted by the Hippodrome artists and the stage was draped with lanterns in each of which was an incandescent bulb. When the colored lights were thrown upon the scene and the lanterns illuminated the effect was striking indeed. During the presentation of the scene, the Hippodrome orchestra of 26 pieces played the selection from "Madame Butterfly," and during the last half of the week "Chin Chin" was selected as the musical accompaniment. It was a good idea to get away from the war scene settings for a change and the audiences appreciated the change.

Mr. Franklin is working on a war garden plan. He is arranging to co-operate with the local War Garden League and the Buffalo Evening News in boosting gardens in Buffalo by showing a motion picture depicting various phases of amateur gar-

ALL the essentials of good advertising are embraced in this display of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kan. First, the most notable thing that stands out is the large amount of white space. We don't believe that there are fifty men writing theatrical advertising in the country that would resist the temptation to put "just a little" reading matter on either side of the cut.

But see how the cut stands out because of the white space, then the name of the star and the title of the production and the sub title which gives just enough of the character of the story to arouse curiosity. The Palace always used the same style of name plate, in different sizes. Only about ten per cent of the theatres are doing this and it is a mighty good example for all to follow. They can be made both in black and white and in Ben Day effects and they would be applicable to all styles of advertising.

Forget your worries when you face your patron; that's what he came to your theatre to do.

THERE hasn't been a picture in a mighty long time on which there has been as many different kinds of advertising shown as on "A Dog's Life." Here is one, the work of the Rialto theater, Atlanta, Ga., where everything except the name of the theatre and the matter around Chaplin's face was furnished in cut form by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

It's a "different" advertisement and a good advertisement as it stands, except that it could have been improved had the designer used a name plate for the theatre and brought this into the dog border at the top of the display. We are insistent that there is never a time when the name of the theatre should be sacrificed for anything else. Of course the idea here is that the display is so unique that the fan will look to see what theatre is making the announcement. But good advertising never permits a HUNT for anything.

There's also a little piece of carelessness in the preparation of this copy in stating that this is the first of the new million dollar comedies. Say a thing once, emphatically, and then drop it.

Advertising is like marksmanship. Only the straight shot hits the bullseye.

IRIS THEATRE, Topeka, Kan., put over an unusual campaign on "Lest We Forget," using the largest amount of space that has ever been employed in that city on one production, quarter pages being the rule. We regret that we cannot reproduce the best of the advertising because it was in colors, red, white and blue being used, and these will not reproduce in the kind of cuts appearing here.

This quarter of a page, in colors, appeared on a page that was devoted entirely to Liberty Loan advertising and the coupling up effect was perfect.

HERE'S a clever piece of freak exploitation from Leadville, Colo., on the Jewel production of "Pay Me." One of the first things that the writer remembers was a copy of the Vicksburg, Miss., Democrat printed during the siege of that city on wall-paper. Evidently the advertising manager of the Elk's Opera House had seen or read about the same thing, for he used the idea effectively on handbills which were printed on real wall paper of an old-fashioned design.

America was the next nation to endure the Black shadow of the Prussian eagle

Adapted for the screen by Chas. A. Logue
Directed by William Nigh

AMBASSADOR JAMES W. GERARD'S

MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY

It bares the grinning skeleton of KAISERISM, and tells the STARTLING, AMAZING, almost UNBELIEVABLE FACTS of WHY AMERICA IS IN THE WAR. From the day the first dark clouds of war hovered over the world, down to today, when America answers the kaiser's sneering challenge "AMERICA WON'T FIGHT" you see pictured with REALISM and TRUTH the strange things, the crimes against civilization, the treachery and the plots that came from behind THE BLACK SHADOW OF THE PRUSSIAN EAGLE.

THIS is confusing advertising. Now we constantly recommend advertising the NOW show while you have it, but we have pointed out exceptions to this rule where you have an especially big picture coming. But while we recommend advertising this big picture a week in advance, do not let that same advertising kill the interest in your present show or confuse the reader.

Now, at first glance at this display of the Zoe theatre, Houston, Texas., one would think that "My Four Years in Germany" is the current attraction when as a matter of fact this is an advance announcement. Little attention is attracted to the announcement on "The Eyes of the World" and "Joan of Plattsburg" is comparatively buried. Now the Zoe has used a cut furnished by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and a good advertisement, but it should have captioned this with the name of the theatre and have used it SEPARATE from the rest of the attractions.

Some theatres and too many exchanges forget that it takes at least two parties to create co-operation.

TO re-open your theatre with a company made by a producing organization bearing the same name and the picture made in the same city is the novel experience of the Diamond theatre, New Orleans. More than a year ago, R. M. Chisholm ran this theatre successfully as a motion picture house, but for awhile it became the home of vaudeville. In the meantime Mr. Chisholm became interested in the production of pictures and with several other New Orleans men organized the Diamond Film Company and took over the splendid plant of the inactive Nola company. The Diamond is now producing one-reel comedies, starring Diana Allen and Lou Marks. The first of these was shown at the re-opening of the Diamond theatre and they will be regularly monthly features. The Diamond will present musical comedy, vaudeville and feature films.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

SATURDAY President Wilson stepped out of his automobile and into Fifth avenue, led the marching thousands of the Army of Mercy down the great boulevard and hundreds united their voices every few steps in cheers for him. Sunday afternoon at 2.34 over two thousand people in the Rialto theatre cheered him again, in Gaumont pictures, as the great organ rolled out, "Onward Christian Soldiers." So far as we know the Rialto was the only theatre in New York City, and therefore the only one in the world, that was able to inaugurate the great Red Cross parade by showing "the world's most notable figure" leading the spectacular appeal.

News weeklies at both houses have an awful patriotic wallop to them. Both features are rather longer than usual, and as a comedy had to be included something is made to suffer, and therefore the educational numbers are dropped. We do not see how they could have been included and the shows kept within their length, yet at the Rothapfel houses we have come to long just as much for a dash of the scenic or the educational as we do for green vegetables in the spring.

Results of long features, which are now being discussed by members of the Advisory Board in this department are shown by the bill at the Rialto where the feature is long, and other things that one has come to look for in the presentations have to be dropped. For instance, there are only two musical numbers in addition to the overture. There is just a little food for thought there even if the feature, Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie," is a powerful and gripping one.

"Scheherazade" is the overture at the Rialto. On either side of the stage are hugh incense burners, carrying out the Arabian atmosphere, and the number was played with the lights all gold, with just a touch of red in the center dome.

Now, get the punch in the Animated at the Rialto. It opens with Gaumont pictures of the G. A. R. veterans on parade at Oakland, and "Marching Through Georgia" is played twice. Then comes a sharp turn to Hearst-Pathe pictures of the Blue Devils visiting President Wilson at the White House. There is a storm of applause as the French and American flags are carried side by side, and the "March Militaire" crashes out from the orchestra. But the applause is even dimmed when there follow Gaumont pictures of "Pershing's Fifty," being greeted by the Senators on the Capitol steps, and the music is "Their Hearts Are Over There." The same stirring music continues through Universal pictures of riveters making a record at Quincy, Mass., shipyards, a Gaumont flash of Edward N. Hurley, of the Shipping Board, and pictures from the same source of the trial trip of the "Faith," the first concrete ship. Then follow Hearst-Pathe pictures of the mail aeroplanes from Washington to New York, the music being "Avec Elan," and then comes a flash of Secretary Baker and Admiral Sims in England, made by Universal, and then the music turns to "Heart of America" played slowly until Gaumont pictures of the marines at Mare Island getting their final inspection. Here there is the assembly call from the trumpets, and then the music becomes "Semper Fidelis." There are some striking pictures of the marching men, and when the titles announce that before they left they sent a message to their fellow citizens, and they spell out "We're Going Over to Make Your Home Safe," the audience goes wild.

Then the final and the big smash. First flashes of the parade show the President leading, and you can imagine the effect on the audience, and then there follow a number of fine shots of various parts of the parade. It does not require any crashing of band music. The organ turns alone into that grand old hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers," which can barely be heard over the terrific applause. The Animated comes to a fitting end with a Gaumont cartoon showing the Red Cross administering aid to the heroic wounded.

With the lights all in red except the center dome fringed with purple, Greek Evans sings "A Son of a Desert Am I," most effectively. The singer is garbed as a Moor, and as he appears the curtains at the side part, showing a desert scene on one side, and on the other the sphinx and pyramids. This number, when we heard it Sunday, got more applause than almost any musical number we have ever heard at this theatre.

Twenty-seven different numbers are used in the pretentious musical score for "De Luxe Annie." The second musical number is Mascagni's "L'Amico Fritz," and then comes one of the unusually funny Katzenjammer Kid cartoons released by Educational. This is, "Up in the Air," and it pictures the "Cap'n's" experiences with a very bad tooth. "Homesickness Blues" and "Dixie Volunteer," together with a number of imitation effects are used. It's a good ending for the show, and leaves a laugh after the absorbing feature and somewhat strenuous bill generally.

Artistry marks the entire bill at the Rivoli. The feature, "Old Wives for New," represents the very best in direction, and there is no word that describes it as well as artistry. The finer points are pictures with the hand of a master, and it is fitting that the remainder of the bill should be in keeping. "Mignon" is the overture, and this delightful number is played with harp, flute and violins at the start, with Mignon's song on the French horn, and then ensemble of music brings forth the greatest applause. All of the lights are blue for this number.

Here's a second, big, smashing Animated. It opens with Universal pictures of the Blue Devils visiting the President, different from the shots shown at the Rialto, the American and French flags side by side getting a big reception. One of the Devils is shown wearing a Liberty Loan button, and there is another who killed a hundred and fifty Huns, and the audience almost takes the roof off. These pictures are accompanied by the stirring "La Pere de la Victoire." Gaumont pictures show the gang plows being used by the French Government to till the soil in the shortage of man power, and here the music is "Scenes Alsaciennes." "When It's Circus Day Back Home" is the fitting music for Hearst-Pathe pictures of the Hippodrome elephants aiding the Thrift Stamp sale.

Now here is where the big punch starts. Hearst-Pathe shows pictures of the British ships after their raid in which they bottled up Zeebrugge, with flashes of the bullet-ridden stacks and the heroic crews and here "Finlandia" is played. Then come Universal pictures of the Allies under Foch halting the great Hun tidal wave, and there are splendid shots of the big guns at work around Montdidier. Then the music turns into "Robespierre." This takes in the "Marseillaise," and instead of counterpointing with this the orchestra bursts into a full verse of the French national anthem. Immediately every one is up, and the entire audience is cheering not alone with clapping of the hands, but eager cries from patriotic throats. Then flashes on the screen the message of Gen. Pershing to Gen. Foch offering the Americans and then the marching, tin-helmetted American solliers appear and "Over There" is played with full orchestra and the audience cheers until the final scene is gone from the screen and then sinks back, delighted, aroused and ready to go out and shoot a few of the Hun soldiers.

Another one of the beautiful stage settings by John Wenger, art director, of the two houses is provided with "Minuet L'Antique," a dainty thing produced by Misses Corinne White and Eunice Henschell of the Albertieri school. L'Art Nouveau is used in this and the other settings, this one having the effect of a couple of slender trees. A huge moon slowly comes up over the low hills and at the end the dancers are shown kissing before the moon. The music during this whole number is from behind the stage, in modulated effect.

Then comes the feature, and the special music used with it adds to its enjoyment. Most of the scenes permit the use of popular music and there are such familiar selections as "This is the Life," "Home Sweet Home" and "You're Here and I'm Here," the last named played on the phonograph back of stage.

Winnifred Marshall then sings "The Shadow Song" from Dinorah, displaying a remarkable interpretative voice in this difficult selection. The singer has a charming presence, dainty herself and her voice always in artistic melody. Here a setting is used showing a modified forest scene, with the huge trees and rocks in the foreground, the effect being in blue with a gold light in the inner dome and the lights on the singer from the side, giving the shadowy effect. Now this is the same set-

Unique lobby display at People's theatre, Portland, Ore., on "The Shooting of Dan McGrew"

This Week at the Strand

THERE is one of the cleverest effects achieved this week in the Topical at the Strand theatre that we have seen in a long time and this is done in a very simple manner through "Topics of the Day," something really new. This is a series of punch paragraphs, gathered by the Literary Digest, and thrown on the screen one after the other. There are no pictures with these, all of them merely short paragraphs from various papers, and most of them lambasting the Kaiser, but they delight the audience and get a series of big hands.

Strand Topical, as arranged by Managing Director Harold Edel, carries a punch at the start and finish and between the two there is an interesting selection of matter. It opens with Hearst-Pathe pictures of the visit of the Blue Devils to the White House and the house rings with the applause. From the same source comes the mail-carrying aeroplanes, and here "Old Folks at Home," played in march time and counterpointed with "Dixie" is used effectively.

Jazz music, in the style of the circus bands, is used for Hearst-Pathe pictures of elephants aiding the Thrift Stamp movement. "Night Animals," one of the Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature," gives one a lot of laughs and is highly interesting with its shots of 'possums, ant eaters and sloths, the latter a rather unattractive individual. Then come Paramount-Bray pictures of weapons of our forefathers, illustrated by southern mountaineers, and with them comes the contrast of the modern machine gun. Then come the topics of the day already mentioned and then the start of the big final punch.

Hearst-Pathe pictures show the bottling of the U-boats at Zeebrugge. First there is a cartoon showing the effect of the British attack and then there are a number of fine shots of the Vindictive and other ships that took part. Hearst-Pathe follows with the attack of the Huns on the Picardy attack, first showing the preparations for the attack on March 21, and the French and English getting ready to meet them. There are other shots of the refugees going to the rear, and the final big effort comes with the flash of the Americon troops marching to join their allies on the firing line, and the audience, as one man, when we saw the picture, yelled with the glee of victory.

Outing-Chester pictures this week are "A Coorial on the Orinoco." There are some fine views of the waterfalls and interesting shots of the native, all of them made the more enjoyable by the clever titles. For instance, there is one that says "Rivers were made before bathtubs and birthday clothes before bathing suits," and the picture shows the negro kids in the water very much "without."

Using a huge American flag as a drop Arthur Aldrich in the uniform of an American officer, then sings "Carry On," most delightfully. Personally, we believe that the punch would have been even greater if the number had been placed immediately after the patriotic ending of the weekly, but something was needed to relieve the feature that followed, a mighty gloomy subject that included whippings and a few things of the sort, not very clever screen portrayals for war time.

Miss Grace Hoffman, a singer with a wonderful voice, then renders the "Mad Scene" from "Lucia," and the bill is rounded out with "Smiling Bill" Parsons in "Matching Billy," a new comedy distributed by Goldwyn.

Portland Manager Attracts Much Attention with Lobby Displays

PORTLAND, ORE., has been largely noted for the liberal advertising that is being done there, but John C. Stille, manager of the People's theatre, is now making them sit up and take notice with his lobby displays.

A couple of weeks ago we printed the attractive front setting that he used on "The Blue Bird." Just as striking an effect, and one totally different was used with "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." Here there was a log cabin used as the center piece, with the pine trees and the snow of the north in the background. All of the lettering of the lobby announcements and the newspaper advertising was used in the black and white effects, the letters giving the appearance of being made out of snow.

How lobby displays help business is shown by the fact that this is the second time that this picture had been shown in Portland, and it surprised the public by playing a week to larger business for an entire week than it had done on its first run. The lobby display and the advertising are given the larger share of the credit.

ting that was used once before, but the different light causes it to deceive even the most careful observer. Before, when it was used there was the red light of dawn behind the trees. Now the light is all in blue and it gives a different tone to the scene. It is simply another example of the remarkable system of light effect at the two houses.

There is a good, old-fashioned Mack Sennett comedy at the end of the bill. There isn't a single bathing girl in it. In fact the only female that has any sort of a part is Polly Noran. The title is "The Battle Royal" and it is purely and simply a slap-stick comedy at its fullest development, and it keeps the audience screaming. Six different selections, besides the "trick music" airs used in putting it over, including "The Maid of Timbuctoo," "Dinner Times on the Levee," "Come to Me Boy I Need You" and Theresia and Formosa gallops.

From the start, we'd say that this is going to be a great summer for patrons of the Rialto and Rivoli. The other day an exhibitor wrote us with some suggestions as to how to let down on the summer shows when the crowds are smaller. If you can possibly afford it, don't do it. Take a tip from the Rialto and Rivoli and keep them right up to the notch. We appreciate the good things just as much when we are kicking about the heat as when we are roasting the coal shortage.

So many evidences are given week after week with his presentations that S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, has reached the very forefront of motion picture theatre geniuses that it is hard to pick out single things in the maze of avenues toward excellence.

However, in the presentation of "Tarzan of the Apes," which has just completed a record run of a week at the Circle, two things stand out. One of these is the splendid manner in which Mr. McCormick merchandises his pictures through his advertising. We have often reprinted in these pages specimens of his work and have sought to show you how he strives to sell each picture on its merits. All in all, considering the little competition that he has, he is one of the most liberal advertisers in America today.

Another thing: That the lure of the ballet with its color, grace and poetry of motion can be just as attractive in the photoplay theatre as it is in the home of opera has been demonstrated by the success and popularity of the ballets produced and presented at the Circle. The innovation of a ballet as an embellishment to the screen program was made over a year ago by Mr. McCormick, when he arranged with one of the most prominent ballet schools to provide exclusively for his theatre the dance creations that have served to bring to the general public an art usually denied all except patrons of the "Diamond Horseshoe."

The most elaborate of these was "The Primeval Forest," an allegory in dance presented as a symbolic introduction to "Tarzan," and which for gorgeousness of setting and beauty of coloring might easily be ranged among the most beautiful of stage pictures. The setting was painted in the Circle's scenic studios with the lighting and mechanical effects invented and produced in the theatre's technical department. The scene carried the spirit and touch of the modernist method with its bold strokes of color and imaginative design and represented a woodland grotto in a primeval forest. Against a vivid blue cyclorama the heavy foliage and giant tree trunks with their riot of color made a spectacle of bewildering beauty while in the distance the eye caught a glimpse of a limpid pool whose waters bathed in delicate colors shown as an amethist pool.

Story of the Allegory

The story of the allegorical dance was told on the screen before the beginning of the ballet, and typified the theme of the "Tarzan" story. As the curtain rose to the strains of Henry Hadley's famous ballet suite, "The Atonement of Pan," three slightly draped figures were silhouetted against the background, they were the wraiths of darkness who bathed in the purple pool watched over by The Goddess of Night, the spirit of Death. Soon the first streaks of dawn pierced thru the tangle of dense foliage and illuminated the gorgeous scene as the Heart of the Sun, the spirit of Life, entered to claim domain over this primeval world and drive Death and her wraiths away. With the coming of Life, entered the Spirit of Primeval Lure, mistress of the primeval forest, who proceeded to call her court to assemble.

Each of the emotions that human heart is heir to was symbolized in a beautiful girl. First came Passion, who emerged from the petals of a huge orchid, then Desire burst forth from the trunk of a tree, while Butterfly, the spirit of Vanity, fluttered in. Then Love awoke as a gorgeous rose unfolded and called to her companion, Purity, who arose from the pool and entered the scene, walking through a cascade of running water. As Love and Passion met Fury was borne in on the winds and called for her ally Hate to descend from the lightning. The court of Primeval Lure now assembled, they awaited the coming of Mortal Heart, the bewildered wanderer in the Primeval Forest. First Passion and her companions appealed to him, then Love and Purity struggled for his possession, while Hate and Fury stirred the boiling cauldron of human emotions. A mad bacchanal followed in which all took part, with Love and Purity finally triumphant as the ballet ended.

After such a presentation, naturally, everyone leaves the theatre thoroughly delighted. There has been an artistic whole presented and the impression is a lasting one that creates thousands of dollars' worth of word-of-mouth advertising. It is such presentations as this that have given the Circle a position with the very greatest of the motion picture houses of the country. Indianapolis isn't New York in size by a great deal, and therefore there could not be expected to be as great a number of the high class element to draw from as in the larger city, yet the Circle is larger than any motion picture theatre in the Metropolis and its record is nearly always "Capacity."

Another of things that enters into this success is the method of merchandising the

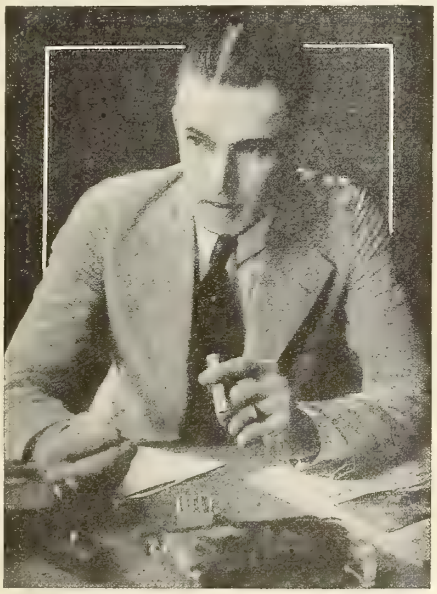
How McCormick Makes the Circle Stand Out

READERS of the Motion Picture News are familiar with the splendid work of S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, in selecting his pictures, in presenting and in exploiting them.

¶ In the future this department will feature week by week articles telling how Mr. McCormick gets a hundred per cent out of his pictures. These articles will deal with various elements of showmanship, including the splendid system of merchandising advertising that the managing director of the Circle has adopted.



¶ We regard this feature as one of the most important that could possibly be included in this department. It will not alone be of value to managers who want to lengthen the run of pictures, but even the exhibitor who changes his bill daily will get many lessons from these articles.

¶ Circle theatre is showing the biggest pictures that it can get. Many of these come to the Circle with the barest sort of exploitation suggestions. In every case Mr. McCormick merchandises the pictures in his own way. His methods will be worth careful study, and the exhibitor who plans to show any of these pictures later will do well to make a note of these articles and refer to them when he is ready for his own publicity. Other suggestions will afford a mighty good idea of the surroundings to give the pictures.

¶ This is one of a number of departures that will shortly be announced as additional features of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

¶ Unless you are reading every line of this department each week, you are missing the record of the best brains of the industry—you are deliberately throwing away capital for your business.

tising one motion picture like another has passed and that each production must be merchandised in the fullest sense of the word.

Merchandising consists principally in creating a demand for a thing. The bargain sale is no more merchandising than is the bally-hoo. Merchandising consists in convincing the public that you have something that is worth the price and that they ought to have it—in the case of the motion picture, that they ought to see it.

We are reproducing here three of the advertisements on "Tarzan." The ones of the figure of Tarzan standing in the tree and the other of his hanging to the limb appeared the Saturday before the run started, the former being fourteen inches across four columns and the other five full columns. The third advertisement appeared in the Sunday paper. We regret that there is not space here this week to reproduce the entire series of advertisements, for large space was used all during the week with the figure of Tarzan always in them and the pictures of the apes brought in through photographs or drawings.

Specialized on Elements

These were really the preliminary advertisements and they dwelt on all phases of the attraction, but after that has been done Mr. McCormick took up the various selling points of the picture, Adventure, Thrills, Animals, Romance, and each of these points was brought out separate and distinct from each other. Now it would have been far easier to have gone into the use of adjectives and to have declared that this picture was the greatest ever and all of that sort of a thing, but certainly the proper way to exploit this sort of a picture was by selling every element in it. And you do not need to do more than to tell something

Kehrlein Makes Individuality Asset; Arrow the Trademark of Los Angeles House

NO theatre should let its own identity become secondary to anything. That is a mighty good thing to remember in all sorts of exploitation. Your theatre should be first always and ever your effort should be made to impress the public that your theatre is THE theatre. It is for that reason that we have urged in these columns from time to time that every house should adopt a distinctive name plate in all of its advertising and there where possible it should follow distinctive styles of advertising that will immediately associate the display with the house without any necessity of hunting out the name.

Kehrlein brothers have made the arrow the trademark of their handsome new house in Los Angeles, the Kinema. Emile Kehrlein, one of the brothers who own theatres also in Oakland and Fresno, is managing director of the Kinema and he is a man who knows fully the value of advertising. An official of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation who has just returned from the Pacific coast points out that there are many things to be learned from other exhibitors in the policies that are being followed by Emile Kehrlein. He says:

"By night, in bright incandescents, two flaming arrows illuminate the wide expanse of side walls of the Los Angeles Kinema. These fire-tipped omens point downward toward the street on which the entrances to the Kinema open and at the upper ends of the arrows are red bulbs denoting the feathers that steer the arrows in their flight.

"In the newspaper advertising of the Kinema this arrow symbol pierces a 'still' scene used to herald a coming or present picture and links the house still closer to its trademark, from which no open-eyed reader, pedestrian or motorist, can escape. On billboards and painted signs the arrow persists.

"Emil Kehrlein is a distinctive and virile advertiser. He exploits a motion picture both inside and outside his theatre in such a manner as to invest it with the Kehrlein personality. And while he at no time neglects his motion picture attractions, he makes his policy a fifty-fifty one of building something that becomes a permanent house asset.

"Emil Kehrlein and his brother, Oliver, who reside in Fresno, and watch over the destinies of the Fresno and Oakland houses, are imaginative showmen. They are showmen of the new school—collegians who are willing to disregard the precedents and old-style principles of showmanship and strike out for themselves, creating their own precedents. They are believers in newspaper exploitation. They ignore, in the main, the cut-to-pattern advertising and publicity supplied by the motion picture producers and create copy adjusted to the towns in which they operate. They believe in copy simplicity; they believe in and use big space; they believe in plenty of open or white space. Therefore they obtain dominating copy in whatever papers they use, whether the space occupied be large or small.

How the arrow is worked into smaller Kehrlein advertising

"The Los Angeles Kinema cannot be said to emphasize over strongly any one phase of its program. It attempts to offer well rounded showmanship. Its musical program is remarkable; its house atmosphere is almost without a parallel and its house comforts would require much space for description. Mr. Kehrlein seeks constantly the biggest motion pictures—and usually finds them. But no one leaves his Kinema feeling that the picture has been the big, or the only thing seen and felt. It has been part of an enjoyable entertainment—which is as it should be.

"The basis of all Kehrlein announcement and exploitation is accuracy and truth. The house avoids over statement and overpraise. It sells the show for what it is, or for what skill has made it. It avoids the lurid and the sensational both in newspapers and on billboards. Its public sees in the photography, once inside the Kinema doors, what it has been told in public advertisements it would see. In other words, the house always delivers.

"In Fresno and Oakland, Oliver Kehrlein stands like a rock behind similar policies, and the result is three splendid house successes established by young, clean-minded, clean-thinking men who are forerunners of the newer type of showmen; the type of men destined to raise the standards of motion picture presentation throughout the nation."

Uses "Eagle's Eye" to End Daily Change Habit

A. H. Herron, manager of the Duchess theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, decided that simply because his city has a population of less than 12,000 there was no reason why he should change the bill every day. He determined that he would have three-day runs thereafter and he picked a series, "The Eagle's Eye," with which to make the experiment. He realized that he had to have something on an unusually strong appeal and he decided on a chaptered story because he wanted to get the people in the habit of coming week after week. The result was that he could not accommodate the crowds in three nights.

Mr. Herron advertised the serial heavily in the newspapers and on billboards. He employed the one-sheets by cutting out the eyes of the eagle, pasting red gelatine paper behind them and then using flashing lights behind them. Another thing was to clip every story from the newspapers about spy plots and paste them on a three-sheet board with such signs as "Do You Ynow Your Neighbor?" It was a splendid incentive to business.

Educational Issues Novel Exploitation Aids

Educational Films Corporation announces something really new in the way of advertising aids. These consist of a series of pictorial ads., just two inches in length, which the exhibitor may use at the end of his display on the regular feature. Robert C. Bruce's "What the Ice Age Left," Newman's "The Rainbow Bridge," Ditmar's "Wild Babies," and the Katzenjammer Kids in "Fisherman's Luck" are the first subjects to be covered.

Other exploitation matter being issued by Educational includes three and four coluumn mats for the U. S. Navy pictures soon to be released, and a story of the making of the Katzenjammer and Hooligan animated cartoons. These are all prepared from the point of view of news interest. Educational's publicity department is completing its plans for a comprehensive exploitation of each picture issue, regardless of its length.

Hyman Now Manager of Camp Wheeler Theatre

Edward L. Hyman, member of the Advisory Board, who recently left the management of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, to devote his time to Government work, has taken charge of the Liberty theatre, at Camp Wheeler, near Macon, Ga. This is one of the largest training camps in the country.

One of the first of the noted artists to appear at the Liberty under the management of Mr. Hyman was Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the President, who gave a recital for the soldiers.

It takes a circus to get away with exaggeration; but the circus is gone the next day and people hardly remember until next year. But you are here every day.

Good Advertising and Clever Staging Puts Over "Unbeliever" for a Record Week

LIBERTY THEATRE, biggest and finest of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses, Seattle, has just made a new record in putting over "The Unbeliever." And of the U. S. Marines, with special stage settings, backed up by the splendid advertising of "Hundred Per Cent." Fullerton is responsible for the wonderful showing made during the week of April 28.

A bugle call, a rattle of guns introduced "The Unbeliever" to Seattle audiences. The Marines opened each show with a bang. Out in front of the theatre two trumpeters stirringly blew their bugles. Inside the house was dark; a bugle sounded assembly; the tramp of feet, and a line of heads and bayonets appeared over the top of the dug-out built around the footlights. At the answer to assembly in the back of the balcony, there was a rattle of guns and a line of fire, and at the first chords of "The Star-Spangled Banner" the audience was on its feet while the theatre rang with cheers and whistles as the first scenes of "The Unbeliever" appeared.

For a week the picture was shown to packed houses, running continuously from eleven to eleven each day. The local Marines aided in the showing under the direction of Capt. Evans and the able assistance of Sergt. Adams. Between each show Private Hollister, who walked from Portland, Oregon, to New York last summer to join the Marines, gave a recruiting talk. One young lady down in the fourth row stayed to hear him three times on Sunday afternoon, in spite of the fact that Private Hollister's attentions were not directed toward the fairer sex. Through the week 123 recruits answered his call for men, to the cheers of Liberty audiences, and Sergt. Adams reports that the number of enlistments for the week at the recruiting station was also increased.

In the lobby of the theatre were Marine emblems of all sorts, flags, pictures, guns. There was a Colt gatling gun and a Lewis that had seen actual service in the Philippines and in China during the Boxer revolution. There was continually a group of people around these. Bennett messiers were piled in pyramids.

On Saturday morning J. Von Herberg, manager of the Liberty, turned over the house, film and services of his employes to the Marines, and a special show was given for the benefit of the Boys in France Tobacco Fund. A Seattle newspaper describes their selling of tickets: 'A volley of shots rang out at Third avenue and Pike street at 10 o'clock Friday morning. It was followed promptly by the strains of a bugle that melted into the distance. A crowd rapidly assembled. Then uniformed Marines filtered in among the bewildered civilians. What was the big idea? 'United States Marines want tobacco for the men over in France who are fighting Germans.' In this way some three thousand tickets were sold and the entire proceeds turned over to the Tobacco Fund. The theatre was packed with a wildly enthusiastic audience at 9:30 Saturday morning."

Another feature was sham battles, two of which were staged on Saturday by the Marines in front of the Liberty, one at 4 and one at 8 o'clock. The week was more than successful for both the Marines and the management. On the last night the house was filled and a line a block long, four abreast, waited to get in.

Fullerton was at his best in all of the advertising on the production. The page display used the Sunday of the opening is reproduced here, and there were half pages carried during the week which followed the same style, the drawing that was used for the big effect in the Sunday display being again employed in smaller space in the corner of the week-day advertising.

Every line of this advertising was full-measure patriotic, constructive matter. It was coupled up not only with the sale of Liberty Bonds, but with recruiting for the Marines and, as already told, aided the tobacco fund. It is certainly a manifestation of how well the very highest class of publicity pays a theatre. There are mighty few houses that can attain anything like the perfection in pulling power that Fullerton achieves, but certain the record of this picture is proof that it is well worth all the trouble and all the money that one can put behind a production.

Orleans Theatre Observes Birthday of "Movie"

Strand theatre, New Orleans, celebrated the fortieth anniversary of motion pictures on May 18 in a unique manner that proves that magnificent theatre to be right up to date. It was on May 18, 1878, that Edward Muybridge created the motion pictures of a racing horse on the track of the late Leland Stanford at Oakland, Cal. That was the real start of the motion picture.

Strand theatre not only observed the anniversary, but showed the progress made in pictures by screening Pathe's "Horse in Action," one of the "Analyses of Motion" pictures.

Wallace MacDonald in "Mlle. Paulette"; Father and Son Fall for Same Girl

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"Mlle. Paulette," a late Triangle release, features Wallace MacDonald, who recently won first prize in a contest conducted by the Motion Picture Classic Magazine to ascertain the screen actor possessing the most charm. Six million ballots were casted in this contest, and some of the screen most popular artists were included. In this late Triangle production, "Mlle. Paulette," produced under the direction of Raymond Wells, the story written by George Cowell and scenarioized by Frank Condon. Mr. MacDonald is supported by George Pearce, Claire Anderson, Walter Perry, Dot Hagar, Anna Dodge, George Hernandez and John Lince.. Mr. MacDonald has the role of Jack Wayne, whose father sends him to a summer resort to keep him away from the Gay White Way. Mlle. Paulette, a famous actress, in private life, Paula Grey, is rescued from the lake by Jack. Later Jack's father pays him a surprise visit, and arrives in time to see his son attempting to smuggle Paula from his room. He concluded that Jack is having another affair, and orders him back to New York. Jack insists that the woman is only his maid but father cannot see it that way, so back he goes to the Big Town. In the meantime father meets Paula Grey and a friendship springs up between them. Jack, once more in New York, chances upon an old girl friend and is invited to the apartment of a charming girl. The charming girl is none other than "Mlle. Paulette." The love affair is revived. A reporter who has been offended, reports an erroneous announcement of the engagement of Jack and Mlle. Father sees the announcement and rushes to Paula's, alias Mlle.'s apartment. A burglar arrives at the same time, the police are called and there is a general mix-up. Jack is sent for and clears up the mystery. Father then consents to the marriage of Paula and his son Jack.

Harry Morey in Best Characterization of His Career—"The Golden Goal"

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

Do you like character studies in the drama? If you do don't miss Harry Morey's characterization in Vitagraph's latest Blue Ribbon feature, "The Golden Goal," produced under the direction of Paul Scardon with Florence Deshon, Jean Paige, Arthur Donaldson and Denton Vane in the supporting cast. "The Golden Goal" was written by Lawrence McCloskey and tells how a big, rough longshoreman rises from a stagnant life on the river-fronts to a place in the world that spells power and influence. Mr. Morey has the role of John Doran, a big husky who inhabits the river wharfs and establishes a reputation as the best fighter along the front, by defeating the bully of the crowd. He wanders into a mission house and after throwing the self-same bully through a window turns to look into the admiring eyes of Beatrice Walton, daughter of a wealthy shipbuilder. Beatrice likes excitement and thrills and invades the slum districts for this reason. She engages Doran to work on her father's estate and when he makes advances toward her, having been lead on by her, she orders him from the place. He tells her before he leaves that he will return some day and demand her respect. He gets a job in the Talbot shipyards and it is not long before he is made foreman of the workers. In the meantime, Beatrice's father is seeking to control the Talbot shipyards. He sees in Doran a good instrument to gain his ends. Beatrice invites him to her home and Walton offers him five thousand dollars if he will call a strike among his workmen and ruin Talbot. Doran agrees. During his employment in the shipyards he has made friends with Laura Brooks, a stenographer. Laura teaches him the rudiments of the primary studies. Doran calls a strike and the result is that he nearly ruins Talbot but he realizes that he has done wrong and turns the tables on Walton, returns the money and sits down to the realization that he is a man and far above the so-called aristocracy.

Harry Morey in "The Golden Goal" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Gladys Leslie and Edward Earle in "The Little Runaway"—Irish Comedy-Drama

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

Gladys Leslie and Edward Earle are featured in an Irish drama, written by Paul West, noted short story writer, and it is one of the best subjects dealing with life on the Emerald Isle, seen on the screen for some time. It is a comedy-drama and one of the better grade. Miss Leslie and Mr. Earle make a good team when it comes to putting over the straight comedy and in Paul West's latest contribution to the list of screen dramas, they are afforded opportunity after opportunity to show what they can accomplish along these lines. William P. S. Earle directed the production and in the supporting cast are seen, Jessie Stevens, who gives a remarkably good characterization of the Irish type of mother; Mary Maurice, the grand old lady of the screen who, since this production was made, has been called to her reward; William Dunn, who will be remembered for his work in numerous Vitagraph pictures and Betty Blythe, who has an important role in Arthur Guy Empey's "Over the Top." This is a corking good comedy-drama offering and all will be the better for having witnessed the screen version so capably given by the principals and cast. Miss Leslie is casted as Ann, the little Irish girl who lives with her aunt and grandmother. The little family manage to support themselves by weaving Irish lace. Lord Killowen, who owns the little township has placed Harvey Dowd and his son Peter in charge of collecting the rents. Killowen seldom visits his property. Killowen plans to visit America where he has been invited to spend the summer by Eileen Murtagh, a rich American girl who is seeking a title. He informs Dowd that he must collect the rents, as he needs the money. Peter collects and leaves for America with the money collected. Ann resolves to find him and leaves for America. She arrives without a penny and is taken into the house of a kind-hearted policeman. Killowen learns of her presence and Lord Killowen and Ann return as husand and wife.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "The Little Runaway."

Alfred Henry Lewis's Most Popular Short Story, "Cynthiana"—In Two Reels

(General Two-Reel Release)

One of the best of Alfred Henry Lewis' popular short stories, "Cynthiana," has been adapted to the screen and produced under the direction of George Sargent for release on the General program. It is in two reels and has portraying the principal roles Patricia Palmer, Jack Dill, George Golt, Tex Allen, William Lester and Hattie Buskirk. This is one of the Wolfville series. Cynthiana Bark drops into a camp hidden away in the Southwest and opens a "Votes for Women" saloon. She bulldozes the men unmercifully and makes them patronize her, letting it be understood that she will stand for no nonsense. She demonstrates this when she drops a Mexican who is rude to her. Then young Oscar, "one of them human deficits," goes soft and proposes to her. She refuses with a Winchester, but changes her mind as she is about to kill him and merely shoots to scare. Oscar has had enough and jumps town and waits for the stage. Cynthiana discovers that he has gone and pursues him, marrying him before he gets his breath. Then Oscar's main worry is that his paw is due to arrive. Paw does get there and falls into a fit when he learns that his son is married. But Cynthiana fixes things by nursing the old gent—so well, in fact, that upon his recovery the old fellow proposes to her. When he learns she is his son's wife, it is quite a shock, but he can do nothing else but bless them and admit his son had more sense than he suspected.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "Cynthiana," one of Alfred Henry Lewis' most popular short stories, in two reels.

Fannie Ward in Big Stage Success, "The Yellow Ticket"—Milton Sills

(Pathe Production)

One of the best and most talented casts ever assembled for the production of a motion picture is seen in Pathe screen version of A. H. Woods' stage success, "The Yellow Ticket." Fannie Ward is featured and in her support are seen, Milton Sills, who has been seen opposite Mary Pickford in some of her most successful plays; Warner Oland, who is seen in "Patria," featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle; Armand Kalisz, prominent both on screen and stage; J. H. Gilmour, popular character man; Helene Chadwick, one of the most beautiful girls on the screen; Leon Bary, who was leading man for Sarah Bernhardt for many seasons; Anna Lehr, who is gradually rising the ladder of success on the screen and Dan Mason, an old timer in pictures. "The Yellow Ticket" was produced under the direction of William Parke. Tom Cushing made the screen adaptation. In its stage version, this dramatic piece was the sensation of the speaking stage during its run on Broadway and in Chicago. It ran for four hundred consecutive days in New York and three hundred in Chicago, to crowded houses. It presents a scathing denunciation of Russian Secret Service Police methods employed in prosecuting the Jews and the story deals with the way in which the Russian Police took advantage of their position in dealing with the beautiful and defenseless girls of the Jewish race. Miss Ward has the role of Anna Mirrel, the beautiful young Jewess, whose remarkable facial attributes do not betray the fact that she belongs to the race which in Russia, is prosecuted beyond all endurance. Milton Sills has the part of the American newspaper representative, investigating conditions in Russia with particular regard to the treatment of the Jews for the Government.

William S. Hart in "Selfish Yates"—Western Realism in Abundance

(Artcraft Five-Reel Production)

Can you imagine Bill Hart as a selfish egotist? Perhaps you can, but it is rather difficult. Still, that is the kind of role the Artcraft star has in "Selfish Yates," in which he will be seen at the ——— theatre on ———. It is something quite different from any thing Hart has done before, inasmuch as he has to go "ag'in his own natur'," so to speak, yet, after all, it is a typical Hart role with lots of gun-play and tense situations. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, one of the most talented as well as one of the most prolific of scenarioists. Hart directed the picture himself, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and a cast of favorites among motion picture audiences supports him in the play. These players include Jane Novak, leading woman, who appeared opposite him in "The Tiger Man"; B. Sprotte, Harry Dunkinson, Ernest Butterworth and Thelma Salter. As his name indicates, "Selfish" Yates is an egotistical and brutal dive keeper in an Arizona mining camp. Debased by his sordid surroundings he exhibits no manly qualities until the germ of love, planted in his soul by an innocent, brave and charming woman, blossoms forth in a consuming flame. Enraged at his own weakness and the disarrangement of his life's philosophy, he seeks in vain to escape the mysterious influence which this pure woman's character exerts over him, bending him inexorably to her will, and which he futilely resists. The regeneration of Yates is a subtle psychological study, which carries the message that selfishness is a hideous trait, as debasing as it is loathsome to lofty minds. With love in his heart Yates' selfishness vanishes and happiness, filled with undreamed-of joys, is his reward. Mr. Hart's portrayals in Western picture subjects have not only become film classics in this country, but they have won worldwide recognition because of the realism with which he vests the robust characterization he essays. In "Selfish Yates" he rises to higher planes of artistry than he has heretofore attained.

"Her Decision," Tale of Money, Marriage and Sisterly Sacrifice

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"Her Decision," the Triangle picture to be shown at the ——— theatre on ———, undoubtedly will carry a strong appeal to the feminine element in the community, for it is the story of a great problem which confronts a woman. Gloria Swanson and J. Barney Sherry appear in the leading roles, and their supporting cast, including Darrell Foss and Ann Kroman, is worthy of being characterized as all-star. For once in a screen drama, Sherry's supply of money is limited, though to no great degree. Instead of being a millionaire, he is only the general manager of a big supply company, struggling along on a mere pittance of $12,000 a year. However, even as a general manager, his money is the lure which wins him a beautiful young wife. In this picture he has the role of Martin Rankin. His secretary, Phyllis Dunbar, is in love with

Bobbie Warner. Rankin loves her, proposes, and is regretfully refused. Phyllis' younger sister, Inah, becomes involved with rich Billie Dexter, and attempts suicide. Phyllis thwarts the attempt, and promises to get money to send her away. Bobbie Warner refuses Phyllis a loan, which she begs of him. She then offers to marry Rankin if he will let her have the money to send Inah away. Rankin offers to help her without marriage, but Phyllis refuses the offer, though frankly confessing that she does not love him. Rankin then agrees to the marriage. The two live like pals rather than a married couple, for Phyllis still bears a strong affection for Bobbie Warner. Finally she asks her husband's permission to seek out Warner for the purpose of finding out if she cares for him as deeply as ever, and Rankin gives his consent. Phyllis finds Warner intoxicated and repulsive and her love is killed. She returns to Rankin, finding in him her real love.

Bessie Barriscale in "Rose o' Paradise"—Howard Hickman in Support—Paralta Play

(Paralta Production)

"Rose o' Paradise," Paralta's late release featuring Bessie Barriscale, was produced under the direction of James Young. Grace Miller White is responsible for the story. Miss White will be remembered for her "Tess of the Storm Country," in which Mary Pickford made such a decided hit. In the cast with Miss Barriscale are seen Howard Hickman, David M. Hartford, Norman Kerry, Edythe Chapman, William Delmar, Lucille Young and Arthur Allardt. Miss Barriscale has the role of Virginia Singleton, who on the death of her mother shortly after her birth, is placed under the guardianship of Jordon Morse, her father's half brother. Jordon places Virginia in an insane asylum. The child is placed under the care of an aged negro mammy. Seventeen years later Virginia is found to be a wild, young creature living in an old farm house. Singleton, Virginia's father, who went insane on the death of his wife, his mind restored, manages an escape from the asylum and finds his way to the place where Virginia is living. He tells her that he is her father. He knows that her guardian, Morse, has been using Virginia's money. He sends her to live with his old gardener, Luke Grandoken, now a cobbler in Paradise Row. Virginia leaves, and her father, unable to stand the strain of having to part with his daughter, dies from the shock. Morse learning of Singleton's escape, goes to Virginia's former home and finds that she has left. Then begins Morse's search for his ward. Virginia meets Theodore King, whom Molly Merriweather, fiancee of Morse, loves secretly. The clouds which have darkened Virginia's life give way to sunshine when she finds herself held in the arms of her hero.

Alice Joyce in Heart-Interest Play, "The Triumph of the Weak"

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

The appealing beauty and artistry of Alice Joyce are given wide scope in "The Triumph of the Weak," the story of a woman who rises above the direst adversity. This Vitagraph photoplay comes to the ——— theatre on ——— and Miss Joyce's legion of admirers will doubtless turn out in considerable numbers to see their favorite on this occasion. Edith Ellis wrote the story of "The Triumph of the Weak" and Tom Terriss has the credit for directing the production. Walter McGrail, a sterling actor of experience, appears in the leading male role and a fine cast, which includes Eulalie Jensen, Templar Saxe, Adele de Garde and others, also support the star. Miss Joyce has the role of Edith Merrill, a young widow, who has stolen a ring from a jeweler in order to buy milk for her baby and finds herself in prison for a five-year term. At the end of three years she is paroled and by the terms of the parole she must leave her boy in the orphanage for the remaining two years. She kidnaps the boy and finds employment in another city where she meets and subsequently marries Jim Roberts without telling him of her past life with its long, dark shadow. In the meantime Mabel, a former fellow prisoner, has found her and endeavors to get her to lead a wicked life. Although she spurns the proposal she gives Mabel refuge in her home. Mabel, threatening to tell Edith's husband of her past, prevails upon her to steal a large sum of money from him. Edith is caught in the act by Roberts and his friend, Robert Jordan, a detective who has recognized her as the ex-convict who broke her parole. Edith's story is then told to Jim for the first time and although she wins his forgiveness she insists upon going back to serve out the balance of her sentence, holding that they can never have true happiness until her crime is fully expiated according to the law. When she has done this the long-withheld happiness arrives.

"The Triumph of the Weak," with Alice Joyce in the triumphant role, is the attraction at the ——— on ——— of ——— week.

Clip These Ad Talks and File Them; or, Better, Index Them

MANY requests come to us for copies of Ad Talks that have appeared here or for copies of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS containing them. Only a limited number of copies are printed and back numbers are not always available. However, we are always glad to have copies made for you, or perform any other service without the slightest charge or obligation.

But how much better for you to preserve them while you have them. Either clip these out and file them alphabetically, or, better still, you can preserve the magazine intact by indexing them in a little book alphabetically arranged. Write down the issue and the page number. We try to have these Ad Talks fresh, about productions just released, but you can always be sure of finding them by keeping your own little index, and it won't be a great deal of trouble for the worth these are to you.

New Star Seen in "Vengeance," Thrilling Story of the Far East

(World Five-Reel Production)

The marvelous tricks of the East Indian wise men, who can do things through their occult science which no Westerner can do, are strikingly shown on the screen in "Vengeance," the new World picture, which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ———. Montagu Love and Barbara Castleton are the stars in this production and both of them have strong dramatic roles which they handle to the best possible advantage. The splendid supporting cast includes Madge Evans, George McQuarrie and Louise Vale. Although Miss Castleton's appearance in "Vengeance" is her first in World Pictures, she has a fine record of achievement before the camera. She was starred in Herbert Brenon's "Empty Pockets" and in Edgar Bower Hesser's "For the Freedom of the World," and already numbers her friends by the thousands despite the fact that she is but twenty years old. The story told in "Vengeance" is a strange and enthralling one. It deals with the experiences of John Cuddlestone, half Indian, half Englishman, who inherits a legacy of hate from his embittered father. The young man has been brought up by the priests of the temple of Buddha. He has but small respect for that faith and when, upon his twenty-first birthday, the call to vengeance comes unexpectedly into his life, he drops everything to follow out his father's wishes. Through an odd series of circumstances he meets Elsie, Lady Drillingcourt, and their lives touch time and again. Lady Drillingcourt is the ward of Andrew Cuddlestone, John's uncle, the man against whom John's hate is directed. An Indian slave girl who falls in love with John adds to the complication of the story.

"Confession," Strange Story of An Interrupted Honeymoon

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

What would you do if you had just been married and were starting out on your honeymoon and your husband were suddenly grabbed off and sentenced to die for a murder he did not commit? This is the situation that confronts Jewel Carmen in "Confession," a photoplay of big surprises which comes to the ——— theatre on ———. The play was written especially for Miss Carmen by S. A. Franklin and gives her every opportunity to show not only her extreme beauty but her great talents as an actress. Her career as a star has been comparatively brief but she has gained a remarkable reputation in that time. Previous to her elevation to stardom she did superb work in support of William Farnum in "The Heart of a Lion," "A Tale of Two Cities," "When a Man Sees Red," "The Conqueror" and "Les Miserables." In "Confession" she has the role of Mary Manning, young bride of Bob Armstrong. They have a merry wedding and slip quietly away from their guests. Ten minutes after their honeymoon is begun their motor car is held up. The robbers take their baggage, their money and even the bride's wedding ring. Having no proof that they are married they are compelled to spend the night in two large armchairs in the hotel lobby. Toward dawn Bob goes out to smoke. He hears a woman scream, enters a room off the porch and there finds a woman murdered. He is arrested and sentenced to die in the chair. Appeals to the Governor are in vain. Mary's father has her put on all her jewelry in the hope of enticing the real murderer to the hotel. On the morning set for Bob's execution a man enters Mary's room. He is captured and confesses. With him Mary and her father rush to the Governor, who calls up the warden of the prison. Too late! But no, here's where a real surprise comes in and it is as electrifying as it is pleasing.

"O'Garry Rides Alone"—Story of Mounted Police and the Indians

(General Release in Two Reels)

The late number of the Blue Ridge series of two reel dramas, released on the General program is titled "O'Garry Rides Alone" and was produced under the direction of Ned Finley. Mr. Finley, Marion Henry, Harry Hammil and Herbert Barry have the principal roles. The story is by L. Case Russell who is responsible for many five-reel features and is considered one of our best scenarioists. The Blue Ridge Dramas are human nature studies. They treat of the strong, virile natures and life in the open. "O'Garry Rides Alone."

Regan, a bad man from the States, trades Johnny Red Dog, an Indian half-breed, a gallon of bad whiskey for his horse. O'Garry of the Northwest Mounted Police destroys the whiskey and insists that Johnny help him locate the animal. Regan stops at the post traders and attempts to be familiar with 'Ciel, O'Garry's ward and sweet heart, who is living there. O'Garry arrives and recognizes Johnny's horse, he orders Regan to return it and tells him he is liable to arrest for giving whiskey to an Indian. Regan refuses and O'Garry takes the horse by force and arrests Regan. On the day he is freed O'Garry returns his revolver and tells him that he bears no ill will, but Regan is resentful. O'Garry is called to the post and Regan overhears a conversation between him and the sergeant and learns that O'Garry is to go alone the next day on a 200-mile trip to carry treaty money to a tribe of Indians. 'Ciel, having ridden a few miles with O'Garry, falls asleep on the other side of the rock and on waking, overhears them plan to waylay O'Garry at the deserted cabin where he has planned to spend the night. She sends a note to the post for help and then takes a short cut to the cabin to warn O'Garry. When 'Ciel arrives there is no one there apparently, but Regan has seen her coming and he and the Indian bind and gag her. The two men are arrested and O'Garry continues on his way with the treaty money.

O. Henry's "The Enchanted Profile," With Agnes Ayres and Evart Overton

(General Release in Two Reels)

Another of O. Henry's famous short stories has been adapted for screen presentation in two reels. "The Enchanted Profile" is one of the many that O. Henry wrote that can be classed with the "best sellers." The screen version was produced under the direction of Martin Justice and presents Agnes Ayres, Evart Overton, Mrs. Spalding and Adele De Garde in the principal roles. It presents one of the author's most human narratives. Ida Bates, a public stenographer in an old-fashioned New York hotel, attracts the admiration of Miss Anne Browne, one of the guests, to such an extent that she is invited by Miss Browne to live with her in a palatial hotel. Miss Browne is enormously wealthy and extremely miserly. Lathrop, a young newspaper artist who has had more or less typing done by Miss Bates, has made several sketches of the girl's classic profile, all of which Miss Bates buys, and she also offers him a fabulous sum to paint Miss Bates' portrait. Miss Browne gives a dinner for her protege to which the biggest men of Wall street are invited. Meantime, the sittings continue and the young artist and the girl grow to love each other, but Lathrop cannot ask her to leave one of the richest women in the world for him. A few days later he goes to the hotel and asks for Miss Browne and is shown to a small room on the thirteenth floor where he finds Miss Bates preparing a scanty meal over a one-burner gas stove, although wearing a $300 frock. Lathrop tells her that he has discovered the reason for Miss Browne's infatuation for her profile—it is a dead ringer for the lady on the silver dollar. Love wins over a strained sense of duty to a poor old lady, and Ida agrees to marry him. Afterward Miss Browne is content with the portrait of her dearest friend, the lady on the dollar.

Live News from the Producers

Mutual Reports New Activity

American Features to Be Released Every Two Weeks—Special Productions of Front Rank Soon, Says Sheldon

THAT a new whirl of activity is sweeping through Mutual is the gist of an announcement made by James M. Sheldon, the new president, who states that plans are under way for the early release of a series of special productions of the front rank. Incidentally, Mutual announces a contract for the release of a series of five-part productions from the studios of the American Film Company, the schedule including the following releases:

May 27, Mary Miles Minter in "Social Briars;" June 10, Margaret Fisher in "A Square Deal;" June 24, William Russell in "Up Romance Road;" July 8, Mary Miles Minter in "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor;" July 22, Margarita Fisher in "Impossible Susan."

The preliminary arrangements have been made for the production also of a series of feature productions starring Edna Goodrich. Prohibition will start shortly in New York studios. It is planned to give Miss Goodrich more pretentious productions than any of those in which she has previously appeared.

The Mutual schedule of short length productions of feature quality including Billie Rhodes in Strand Comedies, and the Screen Telegram, the Mutual news reel, will be maintained. In addition, a series of one-reel specialty pictures of a new type is shortly to be announced.

Mary Miles Minter, American-Mutual Star, In "Social Briars"

"The prospects are exceedingly bright for Mutual," observed President Sheldon. "We have by the contract just announced a consistent sequence of high class productions featuring Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher. We have almost ready to announce a series of special features of the very first magnitude, featuring one of the best known stars of the screen. We have a well established and constantly improving news reel, the Screen Telegram. I do not need to make comment on the Strand Comedies, they have set a standard of their own in the trade.

"We are enjoying a pleasant growth of business. The first of the William Russell Productions, entitled "Hearts or Diamonds?" is making a decidedly sensational success in various quarters of the country. It has had the distinction of being the production presented at the opening of several of the biggest new theatres in the United States. We have others with just as big box office possibilities to come.

"There is a decidedly healthy trend in business among the theatres. Better showmanship is making for the theatre prosperity and is having a most favorable reaction on the manufacturers and distributors of pictures."

Theda Bara Completes "Under the Yoke"

THEDA BARA'S super-production, "Under the Yoke," described as a fighting drama of the Philippines, which William Fox will release in June, has been completed at Hollywood, according to a wire received at the Fox offices.

In "Under the Yoke," which tells a story of an incident in the early days of American occupation of the islands, Miss Bara portrays a character which is said to combine all the salient qualities of Carmen and Cigarette in "Under Two Flags."

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, in reminding exhibitors of the triumph which Miss Bara scored in "Carmen" and "Under Two Flags," declares that in "Under the Yoke" the Fox star again appears in a sympathetic role, this time depicting the romance of a young Spanish girl who is in love with an American army captain.

The picture is based on a story by George Scarborough and was scenarioized by Adrian Johnson, who wrote the scenarios for "Cleopatra," "Salome," "Romeo and Juliet" and most of the other Theda Bara pictures. The picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, this being the twenty-sixth picture he has directed for William Fox.

Loew Books "Heart of the Sunset"

One of the biggest bookings of the season was made last week by Marcus Loew with the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation for the Rex Beach drama, "Heart of the Sunset," which will usher in the summer season at every Loew theatre in the New York metropolitan and suburban zones. An exhibition period of seventy-odd days is covered.

The Boston theatre in Boston has also closed a first-run contract for the feature, while at Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles, it has already begun to break records, it is said.

Kerrigan's Leg Mended,

J. Warren Kerrigan has fully recovered from the broken leg which he sustained last August and is again at work at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, Cal. Just after finishing "The Turn of a Card," his second Paralta play, Mr. Kerrigan was riding horseback near Santa Barbara when his horse stepped into a gopher hole and fell, throwing Mr. Kerrigan under him. At the hospital the actor's leg was found to have been broken.

Mr. Kerrigan has already begun the production of "Tobey," by Credo Harris, under the direction of Raymond West.

World's New Plan Pleases

An official of World Pictures says that over 1,700 exhibitors throughout America have availed themselves of the privilege extended to them of using the World library of pictures in much the same way in which a public library is used. "It is evident from this," the official declares, "that the World plan has been greeted with the greatest enthusiasm by exhibitors generally and that they all appreciate the opening of the World Library to them for the duration of the war."

Universal Lets Out Three

Universal announces that the contracts of Franklyn Farnum, Ella Hall and Emory Johnson have expired and will not be renewed. The names of several well-known screen actresses are under consideration for Miss Hall's place. Ralph Graves will hereafter play opposite Priscilla Dean. He is at present appearing in "Sporting Life," under Maurice Tourneur's direction, under a loan arrangement with Universal.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"Fields of Honor" Is Not Pacifist

Hearing that a rumor had recently reached the ears of the War Department that "The Fields of Honor," written by Irvin S. Cobb and starring Mae Marsh, was pacifistic in its tendencies, an executive of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation took a print to Washington at the suggestion of the office of the Chief of Staff. Representatives of the Chief of Staff and members of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities saw the film and the result was that they gave their emphatic endorsement to the picture.

Moreover, "Fields of Honor" was passed in its original form, without changes or eliminations, by the National Board of Review.

Inventor of Tanks Visits Lasky Studio

Among the recent visitors at the Famous Players-Lasky studios at Hollywood was Major-General E. D. Swinton, C. B., D. S. O., inventor of the British tanks, who is on a lecture tour in Southern California. He witnessed Cecil B. deMille making scenes for "We Can't Have Everything," and was much interested in the work.

"There are cameras all around me," said the General, "and they make me more nervous than if they were cannon. I've faced a battery of guns, but I'm not anxious to get in front of a battery of picture cameras."

Winding up "The House of Hate"

Final scenes of the last chapters of Pathe's big serial, "The House of Hate," are rapidly being done by Pearl White and Antonio Moreno at the Astra studio and on cliff locations along the Hudson.

Pathe executives report "The House of Hate" to have done the best business in all thirty Pathe branches in America yet credited to a serial. "Enemy Aliens" is the title of the 13th chapter released June 2.

Fox Reissues Six Productions

Chooses Three Theda Bara Box Office Winners and Three William Farnum Subjects—All Have Been Re-edited

AN announcement from the William Fox offices says that the organization is about to release new versions of six of the most popular box office features that Mr. Fox has made. The pictures, which are now being re-titled and re-edited by Hettie Gray Baker, editor of the Fox productions, will be issued to exhibitors over a period which is soon to be announced.

The films selected are three Theda Bara subjects and three William Farnum plays.

The Theda Bara subjects are: "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Two Orphans."

The William Farnum subjects are: "The Bondman," "The Plunderer" and "A Soldier's Oath."

"These dramas were chosen," the official statement reads, "after an intensive mail inquiry had been made among exhibitors throughout the United States. The investigation includes personal visits to leading exhibitors and a postal card canvass among thousands of them. Four thousand replies were received. The sentiment for the six pictures named was unanimous.

"The first of the group will be released in its new and entirely modernized form sometime in the latter part of June. A decision has not yet been reached as to the exact order in which the six will go forth, but this question will be answered shortly. New and attractive lithographs, new photos and new lobby displays are a part of the subsidiary material provided for the exploitation of the 1918 versions of what the exhibitor himself has voted as one of our supreme business-getting combinations.

"All of the various Fox exchanges have full details of our plans and the exhibitors can get complete information from the branch managers. It should be noted at once, however, that the six photoplays are to be marketed separately and independently of any of our other productions.

"We believe that we have assembled a half-dozen films that box offices everywhere have recorded as nothing short of remarkable.

"'A Fool There Was,' for instance, is certainly a memorable subject. The drama is not only among the most famous of the Theda Bara photoplays but is recognized as one of the best known pictures in cinema history."

Louis J. Vance Story for Doris Kenyon

IN the production of "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance, in which Doris Kenyon will make her second appearance at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., an original story will be presented on the screen prior to its publication as a serial story or in book form. The story, for which Theodore C. Dietrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., contracted with the author specially for Miss Kenyon, is said to have proved to be so remarkable that from its synopsis Mr. Vance has already sold the serial publication rights to one of the foremost magazines of the country, with over a million circulation.

Like all of Mr. Vance's stories, "The Inn of the Blue Moon" is chock-full of action and unexpected situations. In the story, Miss Kenyon will appear in two decidedly opposite roles. She will impersonate twin sisters, whose parents have separated in their infancy. The daughter taken by the mother is brought up in penury in the narrow confines of a country home and is a veritable wild girl. The other daughter, reared by her father, belongs to the fast social set of New York. Both girls have sweethearts and the most amazing series of mistaken identities occur when the two men accidentally come in contact with the opposite sister. Mr. Vance has interjected into the story some of the startling melodramatic situations for which he is famous.

Metro Ready for Busy Summer

Will Probably be Most Active Company Has Experienced Since Organization — Stars and Companies on Specials

METRO Pictures Corporation is preparing for the busiest summer in its history. All stars and companies, both East and West, will be engaged on feature and special productions, and both New York and Hollywood studios are already buzzing with activity. The usual five-act All-Star series pictures will be continued, and in addition there will be several Screen Classics, Inc., productions.

Ethel Barrymore will return to her screen endeavors in a few weeks, as soon as her season in dramatic repertoire at the Empire theatre is completed, and Mme. Nazimova, who expocts to bring her season of Ibsen revivals at the Plymouth theatre to a close next month, will then return to the Metro Studios. Emily Stevens already has returned, having completed her tour in Alan Dale's "A Woman of the Future." Miss Stevens' first picture this spring will be "A Man's World," a screen version of the play by Rachel Crothers. Herbert Blache is directing this feature production, his first since joining Metro's staff of directors de luxe. Leander de Cordova will assist him. June Mathis has adapted the play for screen purposes.

Viola Dana, who has returned from a seven months' sojourn on the West coast, having finished "The Only Road" there under the direction of Frank Reicher, has already begun work in the New York studios on "Opportunity," a five-act feature adapted from Edgar Franklyn's novel published in the All-Story Weekly. John H. Collins is directing Miss Dana, and he is assisted by J. J. Dunne.

Harold Lockwood, Metro Star, With Cup Presented Him By Members of His Company

In addition to the All-Star Series productions, multiple-real pictures have recently been completed under the Screen Classics, Inc., trademark for release as specials. These include "The Million-Dollar Dollies," starring the Dolly Sisters, Roszika and Yancsi; "Toys of Fate," starring Nazimova; "Pay Day," with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew; "My Own United States," starring Arnold Daly; "Lest We Forget," Leonce Perrat's spectacle starring Rita Jolivet.

All Metro's departments are busily engaged in the many phases of endeavor entailed by a full working program, and judging from indications there will be no idle moments for Metro stars or employees this summer.

John Barrymore Returns to Paramount

JOHN BARRYMORE is about to return to the screen as a Paramount star. This is an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who states that Barrymore has signed a contract to make a series of pictures, work on the first of which will shortly be commenced at one of the eastern studios of the corporation.

Several years ago John Barrymore made his motion picture debut under the Paramount banner, among his early film hits being "The Man from Mexico" and "Are You a Mason?" His work before the camera immediately proved his adaptability to motion picture acting, and he rapidly became popular among followers of the photoplay. After a triumphant season in the silent drama for Famous Players, Mr. Barrymore returned to the stage to take up engagements which resulted in several other big successes on Broadway.

"Mr. Barrymore's initial picture," said Mr. Lasky in his announcement, "will be an adaptation by Charles E. Whittaker, from Willie Collier's famous play, 'On the Quiet,' in which Mr. Collier toured America twice and presented for a long run in London. It was written by that eminent dramatist, Augustus Thomas, and was acclaimed everywhere as a splendidly conceived and genuinely humorous farce. The first presentation was made at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, where it ran for a whole season and went on tour the following year. Mr. Collier then took the play to London and upon his return to America in December, 1905, revived it for another run at the Criterion Theatre. Thomas W. Ross has also toured with 'On the Quiet,' with notable success.

"To direct this picture, Chester Withey, associated for some time with D. W. Griffith, has been engaged and is now on his way from California to start work in the East shortly. Mr. Withey is especially fitted to direct a story like 'On the Quiet,' as demonstrated in his past accomplishments for the screen, which are well known among followers of the motion picture. The combination of 'Jack' Barrymore in 'On the Quiet,' staged by Chester Withey, is a notable one and offers a guarantee for a photoplay that will be in keeping with the standard of Paramount Pictures."

May a Busy Month for Pathe

The month of May has been a busy one for Pathe stars in California. Since the first of the month Fannie Ward has finished "The Narrow Path," Frank Keenan "The Sierra Sixties," and Bryant Washburn "All Wrong." By Memorial Day Bessie Love will have completed "Carolyn of the Corners," and Baby Marie Osborne will have put the finishing touches on "The Record." The first episode of the new serial, "Hands Up," is under way, as is the third of "The Wolf-Faced Man."

Petrova at Philadelphia for Red Cross

Madame Petrova made a special trip last Thursday, May 16, to Philadelphia, at the invitation of Mr. Harry Schwalbe, secretary and treasurer of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and delivered a talk at the Stanley theatre in behalf of the Red Cross Fund. This was the first time that she had made a personal appearance at any picture house in Philadelphia and the audience was so enthusiastic that the Polish artiste was recalled again and again.

Goldwyn Pictures on Board Transports

The Community Motion Picture Bureau, acting for the United States Government, has arranged with Goldwyn to have six of its best productions shown for an indefinite period on U. S. transports bound for Europe. The contract provides that the films are not to be exhibited ashore and insures Goldwyn against monetary loss through their possible destruction by U-boat attack.

Goldwyn says that its pictures have been enthusiastically received in nearly every camp throughout the country, and it is safe to predict they will prove a welcome addition to the amusement programs mapped out for the various transports taking Americans across to put an end to German autocracy.

Ned Finley Pictures Make Hit with Exhibitors

General Film Company states that reports from the field indicate that the Blue Ridge Dramas, in which Ned Finley and Marion Henry are featured, are scoring a hit with exhibitors. Two of the O'Garry stories, by which term the series is informally known, and two Southern mountaineer dramas in this series, produced at Bat Cave, N. C., by the Ned Finley Films, Inc., have been released so far.

An O'Garry story forms every third or fourth release in the Blue Ridge series. "The Man from Nowhere," one of the mountaineer stories, is the current release.

Betty Makes 'Em Shy

More than a score of the best known range riders of the far West have turned actors on the screen for the new Pathe serial, "The Wolf-Faced Man." Many of them are new comers in studio life, and their shyness when pretty Betty Compson is around has become a by-word at the Diando plant, the Pathe publicists report.

Chautard Finishes Pauline Frederick Picture

Emile Chautard has just finished his first Paramount picture, "Her Final Reckoning," in which Pauline Frederick is starred. It is said to provide Miss Frederick with a role of intense emotionalism.

Director Edward Jose is now engaged in cutting down to final length the hundred thousand feet of film taken for "Love's Conquest," the Paramount picture starring Lina Cavalieri. It has already been trimmed to about 15,000 feet. Mr. Rose is now engaged in casting for Cavalieri's next picture.

The Elsie Ferguson company has returned from Yellowstone Park where scenes were taken for "Heart of the Wilds." Work on the interiors has started at Fort Lee, N. J.

Judge Brown Stories for Adult Appeal

JUDGE WILLIS BROWN, author of the stories of boy life being released by General Film Company, makes an interesting statement in which he says that contrary to a widespread idea, he is not doing the stories for children but for adults, directing their appeal straight at the grown-ups.

Ten of the Judge Brown stories have already been released by General Film Company in two-reel form as productions of the Boy City Film Corporation. The broad appreciation by grown-ups of the subtle juvenile touches worked into every scene by the author is said to be giving these productions an enduring hold all over the country. Judge Brown explains the entertainment of these films in the following manner:

"I am not making pictures for children, but of children. No Judge Brown story is any more a picture for children than "Peter Pan" or "Peg O' My Heart," or any play of youth. I am making pictures of youth for adults to see and renew their youthful memories. And it is simply an added feature that in so doing we have pictures which children can enjoy as well as the grown-ups; pictures of a nature which they can witness side by side with their parents and enjoy it just as a circus may appeal to both.

"The theatre managers unfamiliar with the Judge Brown Stories may assume, because the principal actors are children, the productions are planned for childish eyes and minds. Such is not the case. The enjoyment of them by children is only incidental to the big purpose, that of entertaining mature people with deep appreciation of the humor and pathos of life and who can enjoy the delicious fun of real existence as portrayed by the juvenile, active mind.

World-Pictures Establishes Title Bureau

WORLD-PICTURES points to its title bureau as one of its most unique departments and submits it to the thoughtful consideration of the industry.

The object of the bureau is to protect the company against the innocent appropriation of titles to which prior rights have been obtained by others. When it is taken into consideration that 258,000 plays have been produced on the English-speaking stage and that there are titles for over 900,000 novels and short stories, it is not difficult to realize the tremendous task the title department has to keep from encroaching upon the rights of others. Of course, in a number of instances, the copyright laws guarantee the protection of titles and limit the use of a title for only a definite number of years. The copyright law thereby automatically releases a large number of titles each year.

It is generally believed that one can copyright a title, but the courts have held that a title cannot be copyrighted as it is merely a handle to indicate the proprietary rights to certain subject matter. Still, the courts go further on the theory of unfair competition and guarantee proprietory rights to a combination of words because these words have something to do with a valuable right made so by usage. The combination of words, such as "Veribest," "Uneeda," "Takhoma," "Tarvia," has been classified as fanciful and such titles have been held to be the property of the creator.

Immediately upon the production of a picture, the title department of World-Pictures searches through its catalogue to learn whether or not someone else possesses a prior right to this title and if this is found to be so, another title is selected.

New Triangles Now in Work

Many Stars Busy at Culver City on Productions Planned for Early Release—Josie Sedgwick Turns to Comedy

AT the Triangle Culver City studios Director Raymond Wells has started on a new feature picture of the South and West, the working title of which is "The Heritage." Jack Richardson has the lead, with Irene Hunt as his leading woman. Both play dual roles. As two young people in the South, they experience a pretty romance which ends unhappily. Then the action jumps to the West, where they again meet as the son and daughter of the former sweethearts. The climax of the play is reached as they work out their own happiness in a most unusual manner. Others in the cast include Jack Livingston, Dot Hagar, Burwell Hamrick and Buster Irving.

Arthur Hoyt, who produced "High Stakes," a May Triangle featuring J. Barney Sherry, is completing another feature production under the temporary title, "Station Content." Gloria Swanson, the former comedy beauty who won new laurels in "Her Decision," a May production, will be featured in this picture. Lee Hill will be seen as Miss Swanson's leading man and there is a strong supporting cast including Nellie Allen, a new "heavy" woman; Arthur Millett, Diana Carrillo, William Ellingford, Ward Caulfield, May Walters and Lee Phillips.

"The Mossback," featuring Pauline Starke, William V. Mong and Darrell Foss, is now in the cutting department. J. W. McLaughlin, who directed it, is now preparing a new story, the working title and cast of which will shortly be announced.

Lee Hill and Margery Wilson, In Triangle's "Old Loves for New"

An entire new ranch set, with a big rambling ranch house, huge barns and corrals, has been erected at Indian Flats, on the Triangle Ranch, for scenes in the latest Roy Stewart Western production, "The Red Haired Cupid." The play is being directed by Cliff Smith. Indian Flats is described as one of the most picturesque locations which could be chosen for a ranch home. It is on a long plateau, surrounded on all sides by the Santa Monica mountains.

William Beaudine is directing a Triangle-Keystone comedy under the working title, "The Poor Fish." In it Josie Sedgwick makes her first appearance in comedy. Claire Anderson is featured and Edwin J. Brady, Gene Corey, Percy Challenger, Fritzie Ridgeway and Edwin Lewis are also in the cast.

Travel Films Under Newspaper Auspices

AS the finished development of a plan on which it has been working for the past two years, the Post Film Company, which has selected Pathe to distribute its series of fifty-two one-a-week one-reel travel pictures, has announced that the pictures will be shown in at least forty cities under the auspices of newspapers which will lend their columns to their exploitation.

Since in each big city the important newspaper presents the Travel Series as their own property, it is contended that there is no limit to what they will do to boost it and build business for exhibitors playing it. They will run a weekly story of the film released each seven days, considerable advertising — one-half page, one-quarter page, etc.—and advertisements each week announcing the theatres at which the travel pictures are shown.

In those few exchange centers where newspapers have not yet been approached in this matter or where negotiations are now being carried on with a view to closing, until such time as definite arrangements are made, the Pathe exchanges will be furnished prints with main titles reading "Post Film Co., Inc., Travel Series."

These are said to be real travel pictures. When one travels to a foreign country, one does not spend all his time looking at rivers and mountains. He is interested in the natives of that country, their habits, their homes, means of transportation, dress, children, their chief industries, etc. This is actually what the Post Travel Pictures give one and in the most intimate possible manner.

The first release dealing with "St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands of the United States of America," shows our newly acquired island possession of St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, recently purchased by the United States from Denmark at a cost of $25,000,000.

World Camera Records Many Locations

In order to facilitate the work of location men and directors, World-Pictures has had a special scenic cameraman photograph the entire district within a radius of fifty miles of New York City where there were backgrounds which might prove of value in future productions.

W. Fox Buys Gouverneur Morris' Story

"You Can't Get Away With It," one of the stories of Gouverneur Morris, short story writer, novelist and war correspondent, is about to be filmed by William Fox, it is announced from the Fox offices. Jewel Carmen will be the star.

In announcing the acquisition of this Gouverneur Morris story, William Fox calls attention to the fact that Morris is only one of several writers whose works are now being filmed for Fox releases. Among these authors is Guy de Maupassant, upon whose story, "The Crucible," is based, "The Bird of Prey," in which Gladys Brockwell is now working. George Scarborough, author of "At Bay," part author of "The Heart of Wetona" and other stage successes, and author of "Under the Yoke," which J. Gordon Edwards has just completed, is another writer for Fox, and a fourth is Zane Grey, whose "Riders of the Purple Sage" has just been finished by William Farnum, for release next month.

Eddie Polo Next in Circus Serial

Eddie Polo will be seen in a circus serial as his next appearance under the Universal standard. "The Lure of the Circus" is the working title of this novel chaptered melodrama of life under the "big top." J. P. McGowan, who produced the Helen Holmes railroad series, has been engaged by the Universal to handle the megaphone.

William E. Wing, who before becoming a scenario writer was advance agent for one of America's largest tented attractions, is writing the script.

Production started this week at the Universal City and Los Angeles and the Sells-Floto circus, playing a three-day special engagement in Los Angeles, was commandeered by Director McGowan for several extra performances in order to take a score of scenes for the serial.

Belle Bennett in a New Picture

Belle Bennett, whose last appearance was in an April Triangle production, "The Lonely Woman," will shortly be featured in "Iron and Lavender," a new play under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton. Joe King will appear as her leading man.

This drama, according to the directors, is a tale of life in the South, filled with touches of chivalry. Miss Bennett is cast as a daughter of the South, shielded and protected from the sordidness of the world.

Locke's "Viviette" for Vivian Martin

William J. Locke's popular novel, "Viviette," has been translated to the screen for Paramount by Julia Crawford Ivers, who wrote the Tom Sawyer and other scenarios for Paramount production, is being filmed with Vivian Martin in the stellar role. Walter Edwards, who for the time being has transferred his allegiance to Paramount following his recent completion of a Norma Talmadge picture, is directing.

Veteran Actors Support Edith Storey

In support of Edith Storey in her forthcoming Metro picture, "As the Sun Went Down," which was adapted by Productions Manager George D. Baker from his own play, written some fifteen years ago, three veterans of the spoken drama will be seen. They are George W. Berrell, who played with Booth, Barrett, McCullough and Mary Anderson; Alfred Hollingsworth, old-time Shakespearian actor, and F. E. Spooner, who once played with Mr. Baker when the Metro executive was an actor and later was a member of Mr. Baker's own companies.

Mae Kennedy Signs with Goldwyn for Years

Madge Kennedy has signed a new contract with Goldwyn calling for her services for a long period of years. Miss Kennedy's original contract with Goldwyn still had some time to run. This announcement is accepted as definitely putting an end to the rumor that Miss Kennedy would shortly return to the stage as a star under the management of David Belasco.

Alice Joyce Finishes One, Starts Another

Alice Joyce, working under direction of Tom Terriss, has finished work in "Find a Woman," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature made from O. Henry's "Cherchez la Femme," and has started another five-reel feature, "To the Highest Bidder." This play is a reproduction of the Florence Morse Kingsley's novel of the same title.

Carl Le Viness has been appointed assistant to Director Terriss in the direction of Miss Joyce, his engagement marking his return after a long absence from motion picture work, due to illness. Mr. Le Viness formerly with with the American, Majestic, Reliance and Eclair companies, and was regarded as one of the leaders in the field.

Goldwyn Plans Smashing Year

Will Produce More Than Fifty Feature Plays, Including Six with Geraldine Farrar and Eight with Pauline Frederick

SAUMEL GOLDFISH, president of Goldwyn, announces from California that in its second releasing year the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will offer to exhibitors more than fifty productions, as against the twenty-six which will have been released during the first year of the producing activities of the organization.

During its second twelve months Goldwyn will release six productions featuring Geraldine Farrar, eight featuring Pauline Frederick, eight with Mae Marsh as the star, eight with Madge Kennedy, eight with Mabel Normand, six productions from the works of Rex Beach, and six featuring a popular male star whose name cannot be announced at this time.

"Within a fortnight," says Mr. Goldfish, "Miss Farrar will begin her first Goldwyn production, and it is good news to be able to tell of her association with our company. From the day of her entry on the screen this brilliant artist has been a sensationally successful star, and our plans for her future foretell a doubling of her popularity through the selection of even greater screen stories than she has ever had before.

"Miss Frederick unquestionably ranks as one of our greatest emotional actresses; a beautiful woman of rare charm and constantly increasing popularity, both with the public and exhibitors. Owners of theatres everywhere have had proved to them her great box-office drawing power.

"It gives me great pleasure to witness the successes of Miss Normand, Miss Marsh and Miss Kennedy, three of our stars who have carried us so far forward during our first year as a producing organization.

"Miss Normand has materially increased both her reputation and her popularity since joining Goldwyn through her successes as a dramatic actress. Miss Marsh is today a greater favorite than ever before in her career. The faith we had in Madge Kennedy even before her first picture was completed has been amply borne out. She was an instantaneous success on the screen.

"Heretofore, as is generally known, there has been usually but one Rex Beach production annually. Every production ever made from one of his famous stories has made money for exhibitors. Goldwyn is assured of six Rex Beach productions in a single year, thus guaranteeing six additional times in each year when theatres playing his productions will do capacity business.

"I am not yet ready to announce by name the popular male personality to be starred by Goldwyn, but I am assured in advance of his great popularity with the American public.

"In June we shall announce our marketing or releasing plans and policies for the coming twelve months. The step we have taken in doubling our production output was foreseen from the beginning of our company's career. With twenty-six productions we first wished to build an organization and develop its capacities and facilities. We did not intend to be hurried into the making of machine-made pictures. We wished to test out our sales and distributing organization and also we desired to girdle the civilized globe with our sales offices and alliances.

"Doubling of our production output does not mean any lessening of our interest in distributing independently made pictures. We have had splendid success with our independent productions. Goldwyn Distributing Corporation keeps 'open house' for the makers of all worthy pictures. We desire to distribute still more productions. Any producer of a good picture or series of pictures can avail himself of our excellent facilities now and at all times."

Duncan Making Top Speed on New Serial

WITH the Liberty Loan drive a thing of the past, William Duncan, star and director of "A Fight for Millions," the forthcoming Vitagraph serial to follow "The Woman in the Web," starting in July, has returned to his labors at Vitagraph's Western studio. Reports from the Coast have it that the production is coming along rapidly and is holding up to the schedule Duncan set for himself when he started the filming. Reports to Vitagraph indicate, moreover, that exhibitors the country over are taking a keen interest in the new serial.

During the taking of scenes for the serial, Duncan, with Edith Johnson, Joe Ryan and others of his company had occasion to go to Boyle Heights, in Los Angeles, for location, and the enthusiasm of the residents so impressed "Bill" that he had to talk about it.

"I thought I was going to have a nice peaceable little time," said Bill Duncan in the eight o'clock light of a sunshiny May morning, as he leaned against the hood of his car and polished his revolver. "But say, I think those people over at Boyle Heights must be serial-mad. Some day I am going to take the trouble to inquire if they ever show feature pictures over there.

"Well, I went over the other night to Boyle Heights to sell a few Liberty Bonds, then for a quiet drive home. I hoped that there would be a representative number of people to hear me. It's discouraging to talk to a handful. But I needn't have worried about the kind of a audience I was going to have, for the space around the Court House where I was to talk, was so crowded that Miss Johnson and I had to fight our way through the crowd. A million kids climbed over our car until you would never guess that its color was white. By the time we reached the platform, we were both dragged and breathless. Miss Johnson lost her hat, my coat was half off and my necktie hung dejectedly over my left shoulder.

It Certainly Looks Like "a Dog's Life" for Charlie Chaplin In His New Production for First National. His Co-Star In "A Dog's Life" (Meaning the Canine Player) Is Called a Resthound

Chaplin Film Extends Its Run

T. L. Talley Holds "A Dog's Life" Over for Fourth Week in Los Angeles — Other Theatres Also Satisfied

ONE of the evidences of the pulling power of Charlie Chaplin's newest picture that has come to light is furnished in a statement from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to the effect that "A Dog's Life" entered upon the fourth consecutive week of its run at T. L. Talley's Broadway theatre in Los Angeles on May 12.

If there were any lingering doubts in the minds of American exhibitors regarding the advisability of increasing the length of runs on pictures of wide popular appeal, the publication of this fact should dispose of the argument to the satisfaction of all concerned, says First National.

Mr. Talley says that he originally thought of putting on "A Dog's Life" for two weeks, but at the end of the first fortnight he found that box office receipts were steadily increasing as the word-of-mouth advertising of enthusiastic fans began to get in its effect, so he extended the run.

So far as known, this marks a record for length of run of any picture that has been produced in less than five reels.

Reports received from F. V. Fisher, manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Inc., of Seattle also witness to the fact that "A Dog's Life" is proving a veritable box office clean-up in the Northwest.

"We have just finished a seven days' run on Charlie Chaplin in 'A Dog's Life' at our Liberty theatre, Seattle, and our Liberty theatre, Portland," writes Mr. Fisher, "and wish to say that we did a phenomenal business in both houses.

"William G. Ripley, owner of the Bijou theatre, Aberdeen, Washington, a city of 15,000 inhabitants, just called at our office and informed us that his receipts on last Tuesday, the first day on which he showed 'A Dog's Life,' were $248.50, which is the best Tuesday he has ever had.

"In fact, exhibitors throughout our territory are unanimous in their praise of the comedy and consider it far and away Chaplin's best piece of work."

This Comedy Even Made Its Director Laugh

Walter Edwards, who is directing Constance Talmadge in the Select Picture in which she is being presented by Lewis J. Selznick following "The Lesson," is said to be enthusiastic over the farce situations which the picture affords. Norman Kerry and Harrison Ford are members of the cast. From time to time at the Hollywood studio, it is said, the star, her leading men and everyone else in the cast, as well as the director, cameramen and even the blase studio hands, seem to be having the time of their lives, if one may judge from the gales of hearty laughter which sweep through the studio with most startling frequency.

Spiero Leaves Fox to Join the Army

Gerald B. Spiero, on the Fox Publicity staff for the past two years, has been called to the colors, and reported at Fort Slocum ready for duty on May 4. Mr. Spiero will probably be detailed to the Quartermaster's Department, since slightly defective eyesight barred him from the aviation corps, for which he volunteered.

Harry Murray, an employee of the Fox Film Corporation, has met the Boche and has given a good account of himself. Harry writes that he is now in a base hospital in France, having been gassed and hit in the leg by schrapnel in one of the battles in which the old 69th, the Rainbow division, introduced themselves to the Huns.

"The Scheme" Vehicle for Bushman-Bayne

"The Scheme," written by Katharine Kavanaugh, adapted by June Mathis and directed by Charles J. Brabin, is the June 24 Metro All-Star Series release, featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

William Dunn, who has been appearing in pictures for nine years and was recently a Vitagraph player, has one of the leading roles in support of the stars. Other well-known players in the cast are Leslie Stowe, Mabel Frenyear, Rolinda Bainbridge, Lila Blow, Elise MacLeod, Jack B. Hollis and Armorel McDowell.

New Block of Snakeville Comedies

A new block of Snakeville Comedy reissues by Essanay is announced by General Film. This makes the second series of ten Snakeville subjects in new prints, with new paper and advertising material.

The first five comedies in the new series are: "Slippery Slim's Inheritance," "Sophie's Legacy," "Sophie Gets Stung,' "Slippery Slim, Diplomat" and "Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent."

"Sid" Franklin Directs Norma Talmadge

Norma Talmadge, who recently completed a screen version of the interesting stage success, "De Luxe Annie," is now engaged on the filming of her succeeding Select picture. It is the story of a little music-hall dancer who is rescued by her lover from a theatre fire and also from falling prey to one of the harpies that infest the dramatic world.

Directing Miss Talmadge is "Sid" Franklin, who, with his brother, guided her in former days. He is delighted over the renewal of the association with the Select star. As this professional admiration is quite mutual between star and director, it is confidently expected by Select that the best work of both lies in the future.

Lockwood Company in Its Own Studio

The Yorke-Metro Company, which produces the Harold Lockwood features for the Metro, has moved its base of operations from Metro's West Coast studios, where it occupied space since its arrival from the East, to a plant of its own at 1329 Gordon street, Hollywood, Cal. Prior to the company's occupancy, extensive alterations and additions were made in the plant and in its equipment to increase production facilities.

The first picture the Lockwood company will put on in its new home will be "A King in Khaki," a romantic drama, based on Henry Kitchell Webster's novel of that name. In spite of its warlike title, "A King in Khaki" does not deal with a war subject of any order. Fred J. Balshofer made the adaptation of the book for screen purposes and will also direct the production.

Must Have Women at "U" Trade Showings

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has issued instructions that hereafter an audience of women must be included in every Universal trade showing. And he insists, furthermore, that the trade showings must be held at the convenience of women in order to insure their presence.

The order to all Universal exchange managers was issued last week with an explanatory note to the effect that women see the power of public appeal in a picture very often when men lose the point entirely.

"When you are asked for a criticism on a picture by the home office," says the order, "be sure and see that the women employes in your office view the picture. If possible also obtain the presence of some women not connected with the company who attend motion picture theatres with regularity."

Vitagraph War Special Dislodges Vaudeville in Beck's Orpheum Theatre, St. Louis—Heavy Business Reported from Many Cities

"OVER THE TOP," Vitagraph's war special featuring Arthur Guy Empey, sweeps on across the country, General Manager Walter W. Irwin reporting two bookings of more than ordinary interest. In St. Louis, Martin Beck, head of the Orpheum vaudeville circuit, has booked the picture for an indefinite run in the Orpheum theatre, the newest and finest house in the Beck chain. This is a remarkable tribute to the picture, marking the first time that Mr. Beck has permitted a motion picture to dislodge vaudeville in this splendid theatre.

In Chicago, "Over the Top" will open for an indefinite run at the Auditorium on May 26, Mr. Irwin announces. This will be the first showing of "Over the Top" in the Windy City and a successful engagement is predicted for it, based on the business in another big Western city, Minneapolis, where it is playing to overflow crowds at the New Garrick theatre. It is booked indefinitely in Minneapolis.

The Strand theatre, Erie, Pa., where the picture was booked for a week, ran it nine days and stated that "Over the Top" not only broke his box office record, but also was instrumental in increasing enlistments in that city. An army officer, he declared, told him that enlistments during the picture's run increased by 100 per cent., and he attributed it to the influence of Empey and "Over the Top." In a letter received by Mr. Irwin, the Strand manager, W. J. Hayes, wrote:

"'Over the Top' broke the record at the Strand on receipts. That means a tremendous business, for we felt that we had probably reached the top when we played 'The Battle Cry of Peace' to 30,000 people. No first class house can afford to miss running this picture. It is splendid war propaganda and unquestionably induced many to enlist in Erie. It had the house going at all times and is a money-maker. It is a picture with which the exhibitor can feel that he is serving his country from a patriotic view."

In Atlanta, where the picture opened at the Criterion theatre Monday, May 13, for a two weeks' run, the engagement was turned into a drive for enlistments, with the army officials of Fort McPherson working in co-operation with the exhibitor.

Vitagraph Leads Off with "Baree"

The following units are scheduled for release on the Vitagraph program for the week of May 27 by Albert E. Smith, president of the company:

Blue Ribbon Feature, five parts, "Baree, Son of Kazan," featuring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman. Adapted from the Red Book Magazine story of the same title, by James Oliver Curwood. Directed by David Smith.

Serial, two parts, "The Plunge of Horror," episode 8 of "The Woman in the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big V Comedy, one part, "Romans and Rascala," featuring Lawrence Semon. Written and directed by Lawrence Semon.

Vitagraph Drew Comedy, one part, "Rooney's Sad Case," featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Praise "The Yellow Ticket"

Story in Which Pathe Presents Fannie Ward Receives Flattering Endorsements from Prominent Persons—Notable Cast is Featured

"THE YELLOW TICKET," in which Pathe will present Fannie Ward and a supporting cast of well-known players, has received strong endorsement from some of the most notable persons in New York City. In the screen version of the stage play in which Florence Reed was starred, the cast supporting Miss Ward includes Milton Sills, Warner Oland, Armand Kalisz, J. H. Gilmour, Helene Chadwicke, Leon Bary, Anna Lehr and Dan Mason.

The story deals with the amazing adventures of Anna Mirrel, a young Jewish girl, whom the Secret Service of Russia attempted to force into the life of an outcast because of her race.

Oscar S. Strauss, statesman and philanthropist, said: "'The Yellow Ticket' is a great drama. It holds up the mirror of truth to actual conditions. I know from an intimate knowledge that it is not only based upon facts, but is fact. It grips the attention of the audience from beginning to end."

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of the Free Synagogue, New York, said: 'The American people will find 'The Yellow Ticket' a strong and moving drama, acted with intelligence and power by a rarely fine cast, and based upon undeniable documentary facts of Russian officialdom, which will come as a terrible shock."

Chief Justice Isaac Franklin Russell, Court of Special Sessions, New York, said: "'The Yellow Ticket' is interesting throughout. There is not a single dull moment."

William Randolph Hearst, publisher of the New York American, said: "'The Yellow Ticket' is not only an intensely interesting play—it is a great editorial utterance—a great sermon on the abolition of a crying evil. It is not only valuable as an entertainment, but has a powerful influence in arousing public sentiment."

Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst said: "'The Yellow Ticket' pictures the bad genius of Russian administration in such a way that no one who desires to know Russia can afford to deny himself the privilege of witnessing it."

Petrova Play Carries Lesson

"Tempered Steel," Straight Melodrama, Is Said to Teach Women of Nation the Virtues of Self-Earned Success

IN selecting her fourth special production, "Tempered Steel," written especially for her by George Middleton, author of the Broadway stage success, "Polly With a Past," Madame Olga Petrova is said to have had in mind the lesson to be learned through the enacting of this melodrama on the screen.

The story unfolded in the production of "Tempered Steel," made under the supervision of Ralph Ince, one of America's foremost directors, deals with the inborn desire of all women to be self-dependent. In order to teach the lesson of self-earned success and to impress the womanhood of the nation with the temptations and struggles facing them in the working out of a "career," Madame Petrova purposely caused to be written in many additional sentences which accentuate these points.

The entire narrative is said to have been embellished with innumerable "punch" scenes and the whole thing done in the most approved style of modern melodrama. The results achieved under the guidance of Ralph Ince in the working out of Petrova's idea have been a source of delight to all concerned. "Tempered Steel," it is said, brings home most vividly the lesson which the Polish star has endeavored to point out, while the picture in entertainment value ranks above anything in which she has yet appeared. George Middelton, the author, considers "Tempered Steel" one of the most exciting dramas of his creation.

The first Petrova production to bear the stamp of Ralph Ince's name as director has now been finally edited and titled and is in the hands of the Rothacker laboratory. It will be published via the exchanges of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit during the month of June and is confidently expected to set a new mark among feature films.

"For Sale" Offered by Pathe

"For Sale," in which Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale are co-starred, is announced by Pathe as its feature attraction following "The Yellow Ticket."

Fred Jackson, author of many stage and screen successes, to say nothing of half a dozen novels, a score of popular magazine serials and some six hundred published short stories, wrote "For Sale." From A. H. Woods it was bought by Pathe and the photoplay leaps way beyond the most optimistic expectations, Pathe says.

Harry Carey in Story of the Northwest

"Hell's Neck" is the title under which Harry Carey is making his latest Universal special feature production. With Jack Ford as his director, the cowboy actor in this new photoplay leaves his western atmosphere and invades the land made famous by Robert W. Serviss and Ralph Connor—the Canadian Northwest—where the adventures of the mounted police are rich in romance and furnish ideal themes for red-blooded melodramas. Neva Gerber will again be Carey's leading woman.

Mary MacLaren, In Universal's Special, "The Model's Confession"

Bluebird Dramatizes Novel After-War Problem

A Bluebird photodrama now in the making, under the title of "The Spawn," is said to vividly depict what will happen after the close of the present war when the social conditions in the belligerent countries will have been turned upside down as a result of the ravages of the Hun hordes on the women of the invaded lands. Grace Cunard is seen as an opera singer who has sacrificed all to a Teuton officer in order to save the life of the man she loves. Edward Cecil has the leading man's part, Herbert Prior plays the German officer and Dora Rogers is seen as the officer's wife. Kingsley Benedict wrote the story, Harvey Gates adapted it and Joseph De Grasse is directing.

"Shackled" in Laboratory

The final scenes of Louise Glaum's second Paralta Play, "Shackled," have been completed and the production is now in the laboratories of the Paralta studios in Los Angeles where it is being assembled for release.

The play is taken from an original story by Lawrence McCloskey which deals with the life of Lola Dexter, a young girl, alone in the world, whose life is apparently wrecked through her love for Walter Cosgrove, a man with the veneer of a gentleman, but through whose nature there runs an undercurrent of debaseness.

"Unbeliever" in Canada Via General Exchanges

"The Unbeliever," the patriotic Edison feature, will be handled in Canada by the George Kleine System through the exchanges of General Film Company. This is a direct result of the recent agreement entered into between the two companies regarding distribution in that territory.

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn Star

Newspapers to Publish Story of "Joan"

Goldwyn has arranged for the publication in more than 200 American and Canadian newspapers of a full-page fiction version of "Joan of Plattsburg," illustrated with stills from the production. Porter Emerson Browne, author of the play, has written the story and it will be used in furtherance of the intensive advertising campaign in the interest of the Mabel Norman picture.

Page matrices in seven and eight columns have been prepared and Goldwyn has directed its branch managers and salesmen to make every effort to tie up the publication of the "Joan of Plattsburg" story with the showing of the film play in towns and cities throughout the country.

New Series of Ebony Comedies

General Film announces a new series of Ebony Comedies to follow the current release, "Spooks." Subjects completed and ready for release are: "The Bully," "The Janitor," "Mercy, the Mummy Mumble," "Good and Rotten," "A No Account Count," "The Passing of Dollar Bill," "Some Baby," "Wrong All Around" and "The Devil for a Day." The release scheduled for this new series will be announced shortly.

The Ebony Comedies, General Film reports, have gained wide popularity in the last few weeks because of their novelty. The suggestion for the use of these subjects in the same manner as a black-face act is used in vaudeville has brought excellent results.

Fox Makes Changes in Leading Men

Attention is called by the Fox offices to the fact that seven of the organization's stars have new leading men or women in current pictures soon to be released. Four are entirely new to Fox plays, while three return after long absences. The list includes Kathleen Connors, Robert Middlemass, Bernard Randall, Mary Mersch, Violet Palmer, Herbert Heyes and Victor Sutherland.

About New Pictures

Monroe Salisbury has completed a colorful new Western romantic melodrama under the title of "The Eagle," written by Henry Christeen Warnack.

The Slave Market for Paramount's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was staged in front of the old St. Louis Hotel in New Orleans, which is a historical landmark, and during slavery days was one of the most famous slave auctions in the South.

General Film Company is about ready to release the Diamond Comedies, featuring Diana Allen with a trio of capable comedians. "Way Up in Society" is the initial screen subject.

Madge Kennedy gets all the action she wants in "The Fair Pretender." In some sections of the country she is being billed as "the girl Fairbanks."

Clara Kimball Young, whose latest Select Picture is "The Reason Why," was especially interested in the characterization of Zara, the young heroine.

"Married people should stay young—not grow old—together." That is a motto that may well be educed from the C. B. De Mille special Artcraft picture, "Old Wives for New," adapted by Jeanie Macpherson.

Edith Storey, the Metro star, is to be seen in a romance of the fifties, "As the Sun Went Down," her newest starring vehicle following "The Demon," "Treasure of the Sea," and "The Claim."

D. W. Griffith plans to launch another war drama which will be released as an Artcraft picture. Though he has withheld all information regarding the story, he has permitted it to be known that the new picture will present an entirely different angle from that of "Hearts of the World."

Director Dell Henderson, having completed "By Hook or Crook," starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, for World Pictures, immediately commenced work on "Hitting the Trail," written by Roy Somerville.

A bed-room set, used by the Diamond Film Company, in its first production, "Way Up in Society," starring Diana Alles, has quite a history attached. The set is valued at $3,000 and was loaned to the Diamond Company for this picture by one of the foremost society leaders of New Orleans.

"How England Treats Her War Prisoners" will be the fourth installment of the official British war film series being released through Pathe.

After much deliberation over the choice of a leading woman for William Farnum in "Riders of the Purple Sage," Director Frank Lloyd selected Mary Merch for this important role, according to a telegram received by William Fox.

In her latest Goldwyn production, "All Woman," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, Mae Marsh is supported by an exceptionally capable company of screen players. As her leading man, Miss Marsh has Jere Austin.

The advertising campaign to add to the box office value of Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket," released June 2, is the best Pathe ever had on a feature production. Thousands of dollars have been spent in national advertising.

A scene in the forthcoming Theda Bara super-production, "Salome" that is certain to arouse wide interest, in the opinion of the William Fox officials, is that in which a bolt of lightning from a clear sky wrecks the god, Jove, that both Salome and Hero worshipped.

Eugene O'Brien is again leading man in the new Select production which Norma Talmadge is making, and Sid Franklin is doing the directing.

A real fashion show of the screen will be presented by the Dolly Sisters, in their Screen Classics production, "The Million Dollar Dollies. Roszika and Yancsi Dolly appear in forty-eight changes of costume.

What is said to be one of the most remarkable comedies ever produced, because of the great number of animal "stunts" that figure in it, is "Wild Women and Tame Lions," a Sunshine Comedy release for June from Fox Film Corporation.

Viola Dana, In Metro Pictures

Tod Browning to Direct for Bluebird

Tod Browning, whose five years spent with D. W. Griffith gave him a position in the front rank of motion picture directors, has been added to the Bluebird directorial forces, coming direct from Metro where his latest picture was Edith Storey's "Legion of Death."

Browning's first Bluebird production will be Ella Hall's latest photodrama, made under the title of "Nobody's Bride," in which the Bluebird Star is supported by a cast headed by Eddie Ring Sutherland, a nephew of Blanch Ring, and Priscilla Dean.

The Ella Hall picture was originally started under the direction of Harry Pollard, who because of illness was forced to resign the megaphone in favor of Browning.

Unique Photography in Alice Brady Picture

An interesting feature of Alice Brady's Select Picture for May, "The Ordeal of Rosetta," is said to be the trick photography devised by Director Emile Chautard and his cameraman, Jacques Bizuel. There is a fine example of double exposure in the scene where Professor Gelardi, played by Henri Leone, puts his arms around both of his twin daughters, Rosetta and Lola, both of whom are portrayed by Alice Brady, despite their entire difference in looks, temperament and disposition. The star appears on both sides of her father at the same time, of course, but there is no break in the center of the film, as usually occurs in such "shots."

E. K. Lincoln Finishes New Production

E. K. Lincoln, who has been in California for the past three months, is expected in New York shortly with a new picture of the South and West he has been making under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne. His plans of release will be announced upon his arrival. Lincoln's last work was in the big patriotic picture, "For the Freedom of the World," released by Goldwyn, and in the support of Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor," which was also a Goldwyn production.

Paramount Lists New Subjects

Declares Month of June Will Bring Seven of Biggest Pictures Ever Made by That Organization —"Missssing" Comes First

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation puts its best foot foremost in the schedule of Paramount releases for the month of June, which has been issued by Walter E. Greene, Managing Director in Charge of Distribution, listing what are said to be seven of the biggest productions ever turned out by this company. Four of the pictures were made in the west coast studios, two in the east, and one comes from the Thos. H. Ince plant.

Six of the pictures present Lina Cavalieri, Vivian Martin, Sessue Hayakawa, Pauline Frederick, Wallace Reid and Enid Bennett, and the seventh is another of the J. Stuart Blackton photoplays.

The first subject in the order of release is the presentation on June 2, by J. Stuart Blackton of "Missing," a story of love and war from the novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, in which appear Thomas Meighan, Robert Gordon, Winter Hall, Sylvia Breamer, Ola Humphrey, Mollie McConnell and Kathlyn O'Connor. The story has a sympathetic appeal, dealing with a young officer in the English army who is reported lost in battle, and is particularly appropriate at the present time.

On the same date the Lina Cavalieri picture is issued, entitled "Love's Conquest," being an adaptation from "Gismonda," the Sardou drama. Edward Jose directed this photoplay, which is said to be one of the most pretentious ever staged in the east.

On June 9, Jesse L. Lasky presents Vivian Martin in "Viviette," from the book of the same title by William J. Locke, scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers and directed by Walter Edwards. The story deals with the love affairs of a girl after she leaves a finishing school. In the cast are Eugene Pallette, Harrison Ford, Kate Toncray, Clara Whipple and Donald Blakemore.

The same day marks the release of the Pauline Frederick production of "Her Final Reckoning," adapted by Charles E. Whittaker from "Prince Zilah."

Sessue Hayakawa is the star of "The Bravest Way," released June 16, showing the dramatic experiences of a Japanese in the United States, who follows the traditions of his race in sacrificing himself, through loyalty to a murdered countryman, wedding the widow though he loves another girl..

A patriotic subject is "The Firefly of France," released on the 23rd, with Wallace Reid as a French aviator in the world war. June 23 is also the date of the release of the Thomas H. Ince production, "A Desert Wooing," with Enid Bennett in the stellar role. The scenario was especially written for Miss Bennett by J. G. Hawks and the picture was directed by Jerome Storm.

Fox Coast Companies Complete Two Films

TWO productions, one a Special Feature, the other a Standard Picture, were finished last week at William Fox's Western studios. Tom Mix completed "Ace High," one of the fifty-two two-year photoplays, under the direction of Lynn Reynolds. This is the story which is said to provide the daredevil star with more opportunity to display his horsemanship ability than any of his previous vehicles.

The Standard Picture that was completed was made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards and will be a June release with the title "Under the Yoke." George Scarborough wrote the story and Adrian Johnson the scenario. The drama tells of a romantic and melodramatic episode in the Philippines.

In the East, five Fox companies are busily engaged. Jane and Katherine Lee are farther advanced on their vehicle than the other four, which began more recently. Jane and Katherine are again under the direction of Kenean Buel. No title has yet been selected for this forthcoming comedy-drama.

June Caprice is doing interiors on "Miss Innocence," the adventures of a girl in modern Bohemia. Harry Millarde is staging the play from a story by Hazel Corker. Virginia Pearson is also on interiors for "Her Price," an exceptionally dramatic subject that Edmund Lawrence is screening. George Scarborough was the author.

George Walsh is well under way on a vehicle with which Burton George will make his directorial debut for Mr. Fox. The picture bears the tentative title of "The Sleepwalker." Peggy Hyland, under Carl Harbaugh's direction for the first time, is busy at Fort Lee on a film to be called "Other Men's Daughters."

Ralph Kellard Back on the Stage

Ralph Kellard, former Pathe star, has returned to the speaking stage in Eugene Walter's "Nancy Lee," now playing at the Hudson Theatre, New York. Mr. Kellard, after playing the leading male role in "Eyes of Youth," early in the season at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, returned to pictures temporarily to appear in Pathe's "The Hillcrest Mystery."

"Tucson Jennie" on the Screen

"Tucson Jennie's Heart," the third of the two-reel Wolfville Tales, and said to be one of the best short stories written by the late Alfred Henry Lewis, has just been released by General Film Company. Patricia Palmer is the featured player. An O. Henry story, "The Girl and the Graft," with Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle, follows as the next Broadway Star Feature.

Paul Scardon, Vitagraph Director

Paul Scardon Has Been a Busy Director

Two and a half years ago Paul Scardon was installed as a director of Vitagraph productions by President Albert E. Smith, and the long list of features which he has produced since that time testifies to his industry and efficiency.

Mr. Scardon, following a long stage experience in Australia, came to this country with Nance O'Neil, in 1905, and shortly thereafter appeared with such stars as Kyrle Bellew, E. H. Sothern and Mrs. Fiske. In 1910, he went into pictures, being engaged by the late David Miles for the Majestic Stock Co., which had Mabel Trunelle and Mary Pickford as its leads. After several years with Majestic and Reliance he joined the Vitagraph forces as an actor and will be remembered as Professor Stilleter in "The Goddess," with Anita Stewart.

As a director Mr. Scardon has produced for Vitagraph: "The Island of Surprise," with William Courtenay; "The Hero of Submarine D-2" and "The Dawn of Freedom," with Charles Richman; "The Redemption of Dave Darcy," "The Man Hunt" and "The Alibi," with James Morrison; "Phantom Fortunes" and "A Prince in a Pawnshop," with Barney Bernard; "The Enemy," "A Rose of the South" and "Her Right to Live," with Peggy Hyland; "Arsene Lupin," "The Hawk," "Apartment 29," "The Maelstrom," "The Stolen Treaty," "The Love Doctor," "Transgression," "The Grell Mystery" and "In the Balance," with Earle Williams; "Soldiers of Chance," with Evart Overton; "The Other Man," "The Desired Woman," "A Bachelor's Children," "The Golden Goal," "A Game With Fate" and "Tangled Lives," with Harry Morey.

Norma Haas, Child Player, with Edith Storey

Norma Haas, the four-year-old tot who played "Dearie," with Edith Storey, in "The Claim," will again be seen in Miss Storey's forthcoming picture, "The Demon." She has the part of the heroine, Perdita, who is sold in an Algerian slave market. Miss Storey enacts the role of Perdita grown to womanhood on the island of Corsica, where she finally wins the love of the man who bought her.

William Fox Engages Burton George

William Fox announces the addition of Burton George to his directorial staff. Mr. George is a director of long standing, most of whose work has been done on the West Coast, but he will make his pictures for Mr. Fox in the East. The first will star George Walsh, and bears the tentative title of "The Sleepwalker."

Carl Harbaugh, under whose direction the last two Walsh subjects have been filmed, is to direct Peggy Hyland in her third Fox production, "Other Men's Daughters." The features Mr. Harbaugh has made include "The Scarlet Letter," "The Derelict," "The Broadway Sport," "When False Tongues Speak," "All for a Husband," "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" and "Brave and Bold," most recently.

Both directors began screening the stories for their new charges last week, in the studios at Fort Lee, N. J. Only the preliminary scenes of "The Sleepwalker" have been photographed as Mr. George has not yet chosen many important members of the company. It is announced, however, that Violet Palmer is to appear opposite Walsh.

Metro Engages Herbert Blache as Director

Herbert Blache, a figure well known in the motion picture world both as an active producer and as an executive, has been signed by Metro to direct Emily Stevens in a picturization of Rachel Crothers' powerful play, "A Man's World."

Hugh Thompson has been engaged to play opposite Emmy Wehlen in the star's forthcoming Metro All-Star Series picture, "For Revenue Only," which was written by Katharine Kavanaugh and adapted for the screen by June Mathis.

Clover Stars Gain "Pep"

Reports from the National Film Corporation's Denver studio, where "Bud" Duncan and "Dot" Farley are being co-starred in Clover Comedies, are to the effect that bringing them together in the same productions has had a stimulating effect on the work of both. "Kewpie" Morgan, one of the biggest and best-natured of comedians, is the other featured player.

Universal Combines Exchanges

Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Handles All Jewel, Lois Weber and Bluebird Productions and Century and Lyons-Moran-Comedies

EFFECTIVE May 20, the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., an organization incorporated in New York, has taken over the business of all the branch exchanges, distributing Universal products in the United States with the exception of a few exchanges not controlled by the producing company.

After the change goes into effect not only will Universal attractions be handled by Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., but these exchanges also will handle the output of Jewel Productions, Lois Weber Productions, Bluebird Photoplays, Century Comedies, and Lyons and Moran Comedies.

It is in combining the numerous interests that the economy in distribution will be practiced. For a long time Bluebird controlled its exchanges and Jewel also had exchanges entailing a large overhead expense in rents, salary of office force, deliveries and incidentals too numerous to designate.

With the combining of the exchanges this excessive expense will cease. Eventually the saving will be felt by the exhibitors who will be given the benefit of the economies caused by the new system.

The exchanges now operated by Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., are as follows:

Independent Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Universal Film Exchange, Detroit, Mich.; Universal Film & Supply Company, Kansas City, Mo.; Universal Film & Supply Co., St. Louis, Mo.; Universal Film & Supply Company, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Universal Film & Supply Company, Fort Smith, Ark.; Universal Film & Supply Company, Wichita, Kan.; Universal Film Exchange, Chicago, Ill.; Universal Film Exchange, Milwaukee, Wis.; Universal Film Exchange, Denver, Col.; Universal Film Exchange, Salt Lake City, Utah; Universal Film Exchange, Butte, Mont.; Film Supply Company, Portland, Ore.; Film Supply Company, Seattle, Wash.; Film Supply Company, Spokane, Wash.; California Film Exchange, San Francisco, Cal.; California Film Exchange, Los Angeles, Cal.; California Film Exchange, Phoenix, Ariz.; Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, Minn.; Laemmle Film Service, Omaha, Neb.; Colonial Film Exchange, Sioux, S. D.; Laemmle Film Service, Des Moines, Iowa; Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, Cincinnati, Ohio; Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, Columbus, Ohio; Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, Louisville, Ky.; Central Film Service, Indianapolis, Ind.; Central Film Service, Evansville, Ind.; Rex Film Service, Albany, N. Y.; Victor Film Service, Buffalo, N. Y.; Victor Film Service, Cleveland, Ohio.

C. H. MacGowan, assistant general manager of Universal, on Saturday, May 18, accompanied by six assistants, left New York for a trip around the entire circuit for the purpose of effecting the taking over of the exchanges by the new corporation. Before leaving he said that the change would automatically be effective as of May 20, and within a few weeks from that date he expected everything would be working smoothly in every one of the exchanges.

The change in the method of distribution does not mean that changes will follow in the Universal sales organization. All of the branch managers will retain their positions, but hereafter will be given assistance by the home office that will lead to greater possibilities for themselves and for the exhibitors served by them.

Three New Goldwyns Are Near Completion

THREE newly finished productions, with Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand and Madge Kennedy as their respective stars, are in immediate prospect at the Goldwyn studios at Fort Lee.

A last-minute change in plans makes the Mae Marsh release for June 2 a dramatic photoplay from the original story of F. Lloyd Sheldon called "All Woman." This is to be released in place of the same star's "The Glorious Adventure," which with the substitution automatically becomes the subsequent Marsh release, falling probably about the middle of July.

"All Woman" is being directed by Hobart Henley, whose capable supervision of Miss Marsh's work in her most recent Goldwyn success, "The Face in the Dark," gained for him wide praise. The new production gives the star a stronger dramatic role than any she has had. "All Woman" tells the story of Susan Sweeney, "the good girl who tamed a bad town." Every inch a woman—a real woman—is Susan, though the beginning of the story finds her a New York factory girl. She goes to a little Adirondacks town and finds herself in a tangle of exciting circumstances which eventually lead to her being suspected of murder. It all comes out right, of course, but not without a succession of thrilling developments.

Mabel Normand is at work on "The Venus Model," written by H. R. Durant, of the Goldwyn scenario staff. It is a story of business and a romance built around a bathing frock dubbed the Venus Model. It recalls Mabel Normand's happiest adventures on the screen and is said to provide many moments of laughter, suspense and genuine charm.

Madge Kennedy is busy at Fort Lee on "The Service Star," written for her by Charles A. Logue. Despite the title, this is not a war story. The only part the great world conflict plays in the drama, it is said, is to serve as a sketchy background for an intensely modern story enacted right here at home. Charles Miller, who directed Miss Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender," is supervising the new production.

Coming Program Offerings

Pathe Shows "Yellow Ticket"

Big Exploitation Campaign is Planned for Feature Released June 2—Part IV of "Britain's Bulwarks" on Program

PATHE starts off its June 2 program with "The Yellow Ticket," in which Fannie Ward is starred and for which one of the most elaborate advertising and promotion campaigns Pathe has yet undertaken has been planned. The first showing in New York City will be June 2 at the Rialto and simultaneously the play will be shown in many leading theatres throughout the country. In the cast appear Milton Sills, Warner Oland, Armand Kalisz, J. H. Gilmour, Leon Bary, Nicholas Dunaew and Helene Chadwick.

Episode No. 13 of "The House of Hate" is included in this program. Pearl White and Antonio Moreno lead a raid on a den of German spies in this episode and Pearl has pretty nearly bested "The Hooded Terror" when villainy triumphs over virtue again, and Pearl is thrown into the maw of a cotton gin and is being slowly dragged to death, when——.

The Harold Lloyd comedy is "The City Slicker." The plot hinges upon the smart young man who is hired to liven up a little country hotel and the highly amusing results. A happy married couple rent an apartment and the trick bed, the performing kitchenette and the disappearing bathtub—all give Harold Lloyd the opportunity to be just a little funnier than usual, so it is said.

Part IV of "Britain's Bulwarks," the official British war picture, is released June 2, the subject being "How England Treats Her Prisoners." This number will probably prove the most interesting of the whole series since with German cruelty to English, French and Americans in mind, it will be enlightening to say the least, to see just how humane England cares for the hordes of Hun prisoners now in various camps in the British Isles.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 46 and No. 47 are released on Wednesday, June 5, and Saturday, June 8, respectively.

Smith Recommends Curwood Story Highly

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, declares that "Baree, Son of Kazan," the May 27 Blue Ribbon Feature adapted from James Oliver Curwood's story, is on a plane with "God's Country and the Woman," the other Curwood story of the Canadian North Woods which was produced as a Vitagraph Special. Mr. Smith states that "Baree" possesses even higher dramatic values.

The story of "Baree," as it ran serially in The Red Book, proved one of the most popular features that publication ever offered to its millions of readers and served to strengthen the already enormous popularity of the author. Those who read the story will recall that it was the biography of Baree, a cross-bred nomad of the wilderness, half dog, half wolf. The life and travelings of Baree led him into stirring adventures wherein he repaid the kindness of a beautiful French-Canadian girl by saving her from a villainous suitor and putting her tormentor to death.

In making the picture, the Vitagraph announcement states, Director Smith used five Malamutes ranging from the puppy stage to the full-grown dog and used them as the story progressed, the biggest beast enacting the role of the avenger.

The picturesque and powerful style of Curwood, who easily ranks as the leading writer today on the Canadian wilderness, is said to have been retained in the screen adaptation of the story, and the richness of material, action and background is indicated by the fact that the scenario called for the taking of 391 scenes. This is an unusually large number of scenes for a five-reel feature and would seem to indicate their having a wealth of material at their disposal.

Director David Smith took his snow scenes in the snowsheds around Truckee, California, where the most effective snow pictures have been made of late, and the stills suggest that he has obtained many magnificent photographic effects.

Universal to Issue Two-Reel Dramas

On June 10 Universal will begin the issue, in weekly releases, of two-reel dramas. The subjects will be for the most part Western and railroad stories. President Laemmle, who is directly responsible for the innovation,: writes from California "They will contain all the thrills possible and everyone will be based on a regular

Franklyn Farnum as Cub Reporter

In his newest Bluebird production, tentatively titled "The Cub," Franklyn Farnum will be seen as an embryonic journalist. Eileen Percy, formerly leading woman with Douglas Fairbanks, appears opposite Farnum. F. McGrew Willis wrote the story and scenario and Douglas Gerrard is directing what is characterized as something unique for Farnum.

Virginia Pearson, William Fox Star

Fox Announces Two Fisher Cartoons

The next two Bud Fisher animated cartoons that William Fox will release will be "Superintendents" and "Tonsorial Artists," in both of which Mutt and Jeff pen-and-ink their way to triumph as janitors, and then as barbers.

"Superintendents," released May 19, shows the trials of Mutt and Jeff in trying to quiet a noisy pianola pumped incessantly by a woman of generous proportions, but with a small ear for music. "Tonsorial Artists" will be the last Mutt and Jeff issue in May and treats of the tribulations that the partners have when they buy a barber shop in a district where the only residents are inmates of the old sailors' home.

Metro Names Its June Releases

Edith Storey, Viola Dana, Bert Lytell and Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, in the order named, are the stars of the four June releases in the Metro All-Star Series. The productions featuring the first three named were made in California and the Bushman-Bayne picture at the New York City Studio.

Miss Storey's picture, which is released June 3, is "The Demon," adapted by George D. Baker from the novel of that name by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. Mr. Baker also directed the production. "The Only Road," by George D. Baker and Albert Shelby Le Vino, is Miss Dana's subject, released June 10. Frank Reicher directed. Bert Lytell's second appearance as a Metro star will be June 17 in "No Man's Land," adapted from Louis Joseph Vance's novel by the star himself and A. S. Le Vino. The direction is by Will S. Davis. "The Scheme" is the Bushman-Bayne release for June 24.

"Prunella" Comes May 27

Marguerite Clark's next appearance in a Paramount picture is on May 27, in the title role of "Prunella," said to be a part of great pathos, with intense dramatic situations. It is an adaptation of the play by Granville Barker and Laurence Housman and was directed by Maurice Tourneur.

Mary MacLaren Is Prominent In Universal's "The Model's Confession"

Three Comedy Offerings by Universal

"Liberty Belles," a two-reel L-Ko Comedy featuring Dave Morris, Rube Miller and the L-Ko beauties, leads Universal's list of comedy releases for the week of June 3. It is a so-called patriotic comedy, in which it is sought to drive home the assistance women may be in winning the war.

The Lyons-Moran Star Comedy release is "There Goes the Bride," while Kathleen O'Connor will be seen in the Nestor Comedy, "Home James."

The other short reels on the program consist of the split-reel subjects brought together in the Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Screen Magazine and Universal Current Events.

How Britain Treats Her War Prisoners

The fourth picture in Pathe's series, "Britain's Bulwarks," the official British Government films showing all phases of the war, is released June 2. This number shows how Britain treats her prisoners of war.

From the day Fritz raises his hands high above his head and cries "Kamerad," his health is looked after by the British Government. He is taken to one of the big concentration camps. Hundreds of them are seen at the Dorchester, Eng., prison camp. While they haven't all the comforts of home they have a great many. There is a big library, a chapel, and a Y. M. C. A. hut. The sick and wounded are well looked after in a splendidly equipped hospital with a finely appointed operating room.

Mutt and Jeff Three Times in June

Announcement from the Fox Film Corporation offices is that three Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons will be released during June. The releases are "The Tale of a Pig," "Hospital Orderlies" and "Life Savers."

Program Glances

In the new picture from Thomas H. Ince, starring Dorothy Dalton, and to be released via Paramount on May 20, bearing the alliterative title, "The Mating of Marcella," will be found a plot at once unique and convincing. It is a story by Joseph Franklin Poland and the picture is directed by R. William Neill.

Exhibitors who have added to their bank accounts through "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," will have an opportunity to capitalize on the popularity of the screen star by booking "Midnight Madness," which will be released by Bluebird on June 3.

"Fireman Save My Child," a new Lloyd comedy released May 26, has made a new record for Lloyd's "Laugh Festivals," but from all accounts "Somewhere in Turkey" is the funniest comedy Lloyd has ever made. It will be released June 16.

Portraying one of the most arduous roles in her screen career, Elsie Ferguson will be seen as Nora Helmar, the chief character in "A Doll's House," an Artcraft picture released June 2, adapted from the play by Henrik Ibsen, the Norwegian dramatist.

Edythe Chapman, who will be remembered for her performance in "A Modern Musketeer," reappears in Douglas Fairbank's next Artcraft picture, "Say Young Fellow," from the story by Joseph Henaberry who also acted in the capacity of director.

Several of the big outdoor scenes in the Rex Beach play, "The Heart of the Sunset," were taken near San Antonio, Texas, adjoining Kelly Field, the Government aviation camp.

Bert Lytell appears in several scenes of "No Man's Land," his second picture in the Metro program, in the garb of a convict. The production of "No Man's Land" is well along at Metro's West Coast studios, with Will S. Davis directing.

Among the heavily underscored features to be released by Pathe in June, in addition to "The Yellow Ticket," the most notable is Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in "For Sale."

Thrilling situations in which June Caprice has an opportunity to do some fine acting, are said to be included in "Blue Eyed Mary," the Special Feature release from William Fox's Eastern studios.

British women stand firmly behind their men in khaki. They are setting an admirable example to the world. In Universal Animated Weekly No. 24 are motion pictures of England's Women's Land Army in review before Lord Rhondda, British food controller.

The Pickford family reigned on Broadway last week. The sign at the Rivoli illuminated the fact that Jack Pickford as the star in "Mile-a-Minute-Kendall," a Paramount picture, was the attraction, while across the street the electric lights flashed back that Mary Pickford in her Artcraft picture, "M'liss," held sway.

In the Hearst-Pathe News No. 39, released May 11, a picture of the first American soldier to go over the top from a front line trench in France wins heavy applause everywhere. The hero is Lieutenant Burns.

The screens of the world have introduced "Smiling Bill" Parsons to picture lovers and he has been taken to their hearts. His credentials are his smile, his infectious funmaking and his inimitable personality.

Charles Ray is in his element in the character of Jimmy Duncan in the new Thomas H. Ince Paramount picture released May 27, "His Own Home Town," by Larry Evans.

The 119th release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue, on May 20, takes the audience on a trip through British Columbia, the subject being entitled "To Atlin, the Switzerland of British Columbia, with Burton Holmes."

Current Events No. 53 presents striking official French war pictures showing the "Blue Devils" among the snow-clad peaks of the Vosges Mountains in Alsace.

The final episode of "The Bull's Eye," the most popular serial yet completed by Universal, is scheduled for release during the week of June 3.

Realizing that the appeal of a motion picture production is largely influenced by the musical setting, Goldwyn exercised unusual discrimination in preparing the score of Mabel Normand's "Joan of Plattsburg."

Ethel Clayton, In "Silver Linings," a World Picture

"The Man Hunt" for Ethel Clayton

Ethel Clayton's next appearance on the World program is announced for June 17, when "The Man Hunt" is scheduled for release. Rockcliffe Fellowes, who hitherto has been seen supporting Miss Kitty Gordon in World Pictures, is associated with Miss Clayton in the principal role and the remainder of the cast is composed of Jack Drumier, Harry Warwick, Herbert Barrington, Albert Hart, John Dungan and John Adrizonia. Travers Vale directed the production of the picture.

Triangle List Has Society and Detective Dramas

The first release on Triangle's program for May 26 is "Old Loves for New," a drama of society featuring Margery Wilson. The cast supporting Miss Wilson concludes Lee Hill and Lee Phelps, while Raymond Wells directed the production.

The story of "Old Loves for New" is by Adela Rogers St. John. The plot opens amid scenes of luxurious New York society and relates how a shallow and thoughtless debutante is married to the worldly scion of wealth, through the tactful efforts of her mother. Later in the environment of the rugged but picturesque West, after many trials and thrilling experiences, their loveless marriage develops into a real romance.

The second release of the week, "High Stakes," features J. Barney Sherry in a Raffles role. Arthur Soutar wrote this story which first appeared in the Red Book. Jane Miller, Mr. Sherry's new leading woman, will make her first appearance.

Ned Finley in Another "O'Garry" Role

The current release of the Blue Ridge Dramas, distributed by General Film Company, the second "O'Garry" picture, is titled "O'Garry Rides Alone." Ned Finley, as a Northwest mounted police officer, and Marion Henry play the leading roles.

VITAGRAPH SHORTS IN DEMAND FOR MATINEES

The "Bobby Connelly Series," consisting of seventeen one-reel subjects with little Bobby Connelly as the star which Vitagraph is releasing as a program unit, are in great demand just now for special children's matinees, according to reports from the branch offices of the Vitagraph distributing organization. These little dramas, in which the comedy element runs high, were indorsed by the National Board of Review as the best subjects on the market for children's entertainment, and many exhibitors are featuring them in morning matinees for the youngsters. In several of them, such as "Bobby, Boy Scout," "Bobby of the Home Defenders," and "Bobby, the Pacifist," have patriotic themes which appeal strongly to the juvenile mind and are calculated to stir the enthusiasm of little patriots.

FUN AND KNOWLEDGE WELL BLENDED

The editor man of the Screen Magazine has found a novelty that should delight the American boy—a book of directions for making all sorts of useful things—ink, soap, and the like, from simple chemical combinations. The young man who performs the experiments certainly seems to enjoy himself.

Also pleasing to the youngsters, and for the matter of that to the grown-ups, are the trained ponies. With the witty colloquial titles supplied, the animals seem indeed to have feelings like "humans."

Again the United States Department of Agriculture is using the Screen Magazine to disseminate information about its very important activities. This time the lesson has to do with the work of keeping our forests replenished. Cone seeds are garnered from the stores of cones made by the squirrels. The tiny plants are carefully tended and transplanted, and when they are grown to sufficient stature are sent out from the nurseries to the denuded areas. It is an interesting subject and well handled.

The Sea Cow probably doesn't know she is funny, but presented in close-ups, as the camera man found her in the Gulf of Mexico, she rivals "Miracles in Mud" for comic interest.

TWO FINE SUBJECTS AND A CARTOON EVEN BETTER

Bray Studios offer three fine subjects in their current release—an extremely interesting cartoon by E. D. Parmelee, showing the operation of the depth bomb that is being used against submarines, the activities of the Salvation Army in war work, and an analysis of character through a study of hands, contributed by Professor De Kerlor.

As always, the work of the Salvation Army is directed along practical lines, and we see here how the women that are to join the eight hundred already behind the first line trenches in France are trained for their work. Cooking, first aid, sewing and knitting are some of the subjects taught. The picture closes fitly with a band of workers meeting for consecration to their task before their departure.

Dr. De Kerlor is known both in this country and in his native France for his ability to analyze character from physical attributes. The deductions he draws from the types of hands pictured are of universal interest.

Those familiar with the excellent cartoons of the Bray Studios will find "The Depth Bomb" equal to the best ever issued by them.

"IN SOUTHERNMOST RUSSIA"

There is excellent material in these pictures of Sebastopol and the rugged country of the Crimea. The city shows fine buildings and a general air of prosperity in contrast with the poverty of the country. Unfortunately, the editor has not been supplied with sufficient information regarding the film sent him for titling and has failed to get and give the facts necessary to an understanding and appreciation of the picture. May we suggest, in a spirit of helpfulness, that no titles are better than a great many words that say little or nothing.

TWO GOOD LAUGH MAKERS

The two cartoon releases of the week run each other a close race in point of fun and surprise, though for technique the International would doubtless be by many points the winner.

In the Fox release, "Superintendents," Mutt and Jeff are presiding over the lower regions of an apartment house whose evil genius is a lady with a player piano and unlimited playing capacity. The growing frenzy of the flat dwellers as the notes penetrate ceilings and floors, the gallant attempt of Mutt to oblige his patrons and the ills he suffers at the hands of the strong-footed performer, the heroic dash of the ambulance summoned by Mutt in expectation of Jeff's imminent death, and Jeff's final and remarkable triumph "form a series of thrilling incidents leading up to a strong climax," as the reviewer of real pictures would say. "Isn't that too silly!" remarked the very pleasant lady sitting on our right. But we had noticed her chuckles as the film went on from one absurdity to another, and we judged that even the very critical do not mind silliness provided it is funny.

The irrepressible Katzenjammers give a new meaning to "Fishermen's Luck" when they take a hand in rewarding the patient efforts of the Captain and the Professor. More than one surprise is "planted"—literally. Astounding things come out of the sea, and the peaceful piscatorial party is turned into a series of hairbreadth escapes, and a final rout engineered by an octopus who knows how to use his eight legs to advantage. The drawing and action of the cartoon are usually good.

THE FOX THE CHICKEN GETS

A cub that at five months is worth all of $800 is too valuable to be allowed to run around loose. That is the price set on a fox lucky enugh to be well silvered on the back and tip of tail. So down on Long Island, they make a business of raising these fashionable animals and the General Film issues a very entertaining reel devoted to showing them on the Fox Farm at Eastport.

The second part of the reel shows impressive waterfalls and gorges round about the meeting place of three eastern states.

CELEBRITIES TO APPEAR IN "ANIMATED INTERVIEWS"

Two figures of national prominence will shortly be presented to the public in the "Animated Interviews" that are a feature of the Universal Screen Magazine.

Ty Cobb, most famous of ball players, demonstrates for his youthful admirers not only how to obtain proficiency in baseball but how to reach and maintain physical excellence.

Chauncey M. Depew, former United States Senator from New York, and famed as a raconteur, tells how, despite his four score and six years, he is still young and happy.

SKILL AND INVENTION

There is a good masculine flavor about the current product of the Bray Studios, but in these days that is no bar to its enjoyment by members of the feminine sex.

"Rod and Reel Champions" display their skill in contests for long distant fly-casting, held in California. Instead of the fly, however, a half-ounce weight is used, which is aimed at a bell in the center of a floating target. The sport appears excellent and the pictures are most interesting.

The gratifying increase in ship production gives timeliness to a brief subject devoted to the cutting, transportation, and treatment of the huge timbers that go into the hulls.

Increased rapidity in the transportation of freight and an accompanying save in labor and fuel are effected by a newly invented device resembling that which delivers mail to passing trains. This is a double affair, one end holding the bundle to be delivered, the other end swinging round in turn to catch the freight for delivery from the train. The device is shown working at normal speed and is then slowed up to allow of comprehending its working.

Bobby Bumps profits by Fido's successful experience with the hated cat, and tries a little plotting to gain access to Goldie's preserve closet. But, as Earl Hurd says, the only result was that "Bobby got caught in the jam."

Toledo Down Town Houses Set High Marks in Advertising With Large, Striking Displays

each of the houses, each with a separate head and there is a four-column layout on the attractions. In addition there are used a number of cuts furnished by the film companies together with a large amount of news matter about pictures and stars. It is very well prepared and interesting, but it might be improved a little by making features of certain articles and running a couple of columns of short gossip, illustrated with half column cuts now and then, and grouping the attractions at the local houses.

This is done by the Blade. Of course the theatres would prefer to have separate heads because they think that they are getting more, when as a matter of fact more are apt to read the matter when it is grouped. The Blade used a three column layout on local attraction. The second page is decidedly interesting including short, live news matter, "Who's Who in Filmland" and brief notes about the photoplayers.

As we have said the News-Bee shows a short-sighted policy. It cartoons the attractions, and many of these sketches are worse than meaningless and then gives reading notices to each house. It's about the poorest showing that we have ever seen when the amount of motion picture advertising carried is considered.

During the week the papers do nothing for motion pictures, a weakness in our opinion. Certainly after the display the Times has had on Sunday one would expect to see short reviews of each attraction in the Monday issue. Monday morning papers are generally mighty dull and such a department would liven it up immeasurably.

Alhambra theatre takes a big tumble in its week day advertising, using only an inch, single column daily in the Times, 1½ inches double in the Blade and dropping out of the News-Bee after ten inches double in the Monday issue.

Temple and Valentine carry two and a half inches double in all three papers, sometimes varying this a little. Princess uses 2¼ single in the Times and 1½ double in the two other papers. Auditorium uses one inch double in the Times, two inches double in the Blade and from 2 to 3½ inches double in the News-Bee. Hippodrome uses one inch single in the Times and one inch double in the other two papers. Empress uses one inch double in the two afternoon papers.

Summing up the situation in Toledo we would say that the larger houses prove that it pays to advertise and advertise liberally. Whether any serious effort is being made to get their business or not, the neighborhood houses are making a mistake by staying out; they are apparently inviting the larger houses to take their business away from them.

The newspapers, except the News-Bee, are co-operating one day a week. They would find it to their advantage to give some space daily and at least reviews on Monday. We believe that the Times has a great opportunity to build up its Sunday circulation if the paper will have its canvassers call attention to the photoplay department. Just a little freshening up would make this a splendid one, and the paper should realize that not only are the people of Toledo but thousands of people outside the city are deeply interested in pictures and since the Times has the best department in the state outside of Cleveland, we believe that the results would soon be forthcoming.

Yes, advertising is paying the big theatres of Toledo and if the little ones stay little, it will be their own fault in failing to advertise.

but he did not tell the whole story—he left the public to come and learn that.

His language in these displays is always descriptive, but never superlative. For instance, in arousing the spirit of adventure in us he says: "It gives the adventure that the primitive heart of everyone craves and carries you away from beyond the borderlands of civilization across the frontier of imagination and lets you dwell spellbound in the grip of the strangest fiction ever written." There is not a misstatement there, not a descriptive adjective, not a superlative except that which refers to fiction.

And in another place he tells us: "He was a strange lover, this giant of the treetops." And then he asks:

> What could have been his emotions as he sat on the topmost limb of the Mighty Jungle Tree, surrounded by the Apes who were his companions, whose language he spoke, and gazed below at the beautiful white woman who had become lost in the tangle of the primeval wilds?
> Why did he crush her to his breast and smother her with kisses, he who had nestled at the breast of a mother ape?
> Why should she look upon him with eyes of love, she who had always hid within the arms of civilization?

The answer is left for the audiences to come and see.

Violates the Rules

Yes, we wish that we could reproduce here in actual size each one of these advertisements so that they could be read word for word and the element of merchandizing that Mr. McCormick has put into them could be appreciated. Yes, there is a lot of matter in these displays and some of it is in small type and that is one reason why it could not be read unless the displays were reproduced practically actual size, impossible on account of the page measurements of the NEWS. And that very fact causes us to take the liberty of quoting from a comment of Mr. McCormick on his own work. He says:

"Each advertisement contains enough reading matter to give the average 'Advertising Expert' heart failure and would no doubt bring forth a prophecy of failure, but as the results tabulated at the end of the week proved the success of this style of copy I feel justified in breaking one of the most sacred rules of the Advertising Writer's Primer. Personally I am of the opinion that a sales talk half given is worse than one given at length and which carries conviction. Also I think it is sometimes advisable to break rules and side step tradition, for precedent is always a very good thing to alibi behind—but also a very easy thing to stumble on.

"Without attempting to give a treatise on the subject of advertising, I am of the opinion that exhibitors would do well to incorporate more salesmanship into their copy rather than depend upon a ready made market such as Star's reputation, Author's fame, appeal of the Title. Particularly is this becoming necessary in cities where there is little or no newspaper co-operation and where one must get his sales argument over thru the display instead of letting his paid advertisement be merely a memoranda to the public to see an attraction that has already been sold to them thru the news columns."

Yes, Mr. McCormick and readers, it does violate many of the ordinary RULES of advertising that we have laid down week after week in these pages, but that is the very thing that rules are for—to be gone outside of when something else is required for good salesmanship of the picture. Rules of type and borders and white space and cuts are well enough for the man who is merely designing an advertisement, but they have no place in the work of the man who is merchandising the picture.

Now mark the difference—when a man is merchandising a picture. But the mere use of adjectives, the slathering in of cuts, the stream of words and the struggle of superlatives do not belong with merchandising. When you have something, first know what you have and then go out and sell that element of the picture. Mr. McCormick has picked out all of the elements of this picture and he created a demand for them, he created a longing to know the answer to his question, to see the final chapter to the brain story that was created in their imaginations.

Merchandising pictures is coming. It cannot be done with the ordinary picture always, but it can be done when the man sets to work to find out what are really the points in a production and puts them before the public in a manner that the public demands to see and know more.

In brief, here is a merchandising campaign that we believe to be marking an epoch in the exploitation of the picture.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

Ketty Galanta, Who Has Become Very Popular In Motion Pictures

"All Woman," the new Mae Marsh picture, is predicted to show the often-mentioned likeness of this screen star to Maude Adams more than any other of her pictures. The spirit which they both personify of girlhood—of aloofness—of almost spiritual charm is said to be the keynote of this picture.

The studio postman and personal mail box system recently installed in World Studio should give admirers of their stars added assurance in sending letters of appreciation.

Anna Luther, Titian-haired heroine of "Moral Suicide," possesses a valuable war trophy, a German gun, which she is going to auction off next week at some motion picture house for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Again we hear of Harry Franklin, Metro director, as host at his new Long Island home. This time it is a dinner party for various members of the directing staff of Metro.

Shirley Mason is, indeed, lucky to have no less personages than Anita Loos and John Emerson build a story around her seventeen-year-old self as her initial Paramount vehicle. Miss Loos is now on her way West with the script to confer with Mr. Lasky about future pictures for Miss Mason.

No less an authority than friend sister says that Violet Mersereau is seriously contemplating changing her mind, packing her bag, and returning to the Coast any minute.

Mary Anderson was almost buried in a sandstorm caused by the recent California earthquake, while out on a beach location for the new Sessue Hayakawa picture. Quick work on the star's part saved the little leading lady.

Director Paul Scardon, after completing his twenty-sixth Vitagraph feature, took a few hours off two mornings in succession and called it a vacation, the first in two years and a half. With this as a starter he is making phenomenal progress on "Tangled Wires," a Harry Morey, Betty Blythe, Jean Page picture.

Guy Empey is showing us that a soldier can make a success of any trade. After carrying off the honors of a motion picture star in "Over the Top," he is going to do the same on the legitimate stage in "The Drums," co-starring with Rose Stahl.

Dora Mills Adams did her bit at Lakewood last week when the Abramson Company, producing "When Man Betrays," were down there taking exteriors on the Gould estate. She was asked to talk to the wounded American soldiers in the base hospital there, and did so to their great delight.

W. P. S. Earle and his popular little assistant, Billie Bletcher, have pulled up stakes from Brooklyn and moved to World Studio at Fort Lee, where they are beginning a new story with a galaxy of stars, Barbara Castleton, Madge Evans and John Bowers, under the melodramatic title, "The Blood of the Trevors."

Few people know that the beautiful leading lady, Elizabeth Risdon, whom George Loane Tucker so often directs, is his wife. In "Hypocrites" her appeal is greatly enhanced by the perfect accord between director and star felt in seeing her work.

Jack Drumiere, arch villain of "The Blood of the Trevors," and made up as such, lurched through the swinging door of a corner saloon up at Fort Lee the other day as the camera man cranked merrily along, but backed out a bit quicker than he went in. Though the director had arranged with the proprietor to take the scene there, his partner, a huge burly Irishman, had not been informed. So when Jack fell through the doorway the big man came after him, both fists extended, shouting: "———, I'll have no bums in here," and Jack, seeing that he meant business, beat a hasty retreat, hands up.

A ring plays an important part in this tale of the Trevors, and last week work was held up for a few hours while the studio was ransacked for said adornment. Finally some one remembered that Miss Castleton had been taken home the night before from "location" instead of returning to the studio, and had been wearing the ring at the time and the day was saved—or rather —the ring.

Little Thelma Daniels, a niece of Niles Welch, by the way, has the honor of being the only child lieutenant in the National Army. She won her "commission" by splendid work in selling Liberty Bonds, Thrift Stamps, War Saving Stamps, etc.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and Dora Mills Adams in an Entertaining Moment of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back"

Flora Finch just received a fascinating letter from the Japanese editor of the "Cinema Star," the leading Japanese movie magazine of American pictures. It was written in quaint English, and asked in the most delightful manner possible for a few of her "charmful pictures" to use in their magazine.

By the way, the filly from the Maddern stables, named after this star, Flora Finch, has just been coming in strong in races around various Southern States.

A certain modeler, impressed with the beauty of Madge Kennedy's hands, wished to perpetuate them. He could not understand Miss Kennedy's refusal upon hearing that he was a modeler—not of marble—but of soap.

Pearl White's ambition to do something for the Government may soon be realized, as she is now in Washington, the guest of the War Department.

Oscar Apfel, director, takes up the gauntlet for the movie actress who can dance. He says that she is the one who walks well, carries herself well and possesses natural poise and grace. He goes further and says that she who has had legitimate stage training is always more effective on the screen. His shining example is Kitty Gordon, whose destiny he now directs.

With two-thirds of the cast Chinese, with real Chinatown scenes, and genuine Chinese costumes of fabulous cost "The Mandarin's Gold," starring Kitty Gordon, should have a decidedly Oriental appeal.

According to reports, Viola Dana before she left Hollywood had collected a young menagerie, which is now scattered to the four winds, or rather to the highest bidders. An auction did it for them all from the gold-fish to the donkey.

Billy Parson's latest big idea was the result off reading a newspaper clipping about a 235-pound bird, native of Canada. He investigated its authenticity, and ordered the bird procured at any cost, even if his agent has to ride it to California.

Eileen Percy is just what you would hope from her name, an Irish colleen, who considers California next best to Ireland. In her first picture with Bluebird, "The Cub," she co-stars with Franklyn Farnum.

Little by little the show places of New York are becoming accessible to those who may never get here—Cecil De Mille in "We Can't Have Everything," will present a perfect replica of "the cascades" at the Biltmore, with ballet dancers, two orchestras, and hundreds of people in evening dress.

Irene Castle, Pearl White and Fannie Ward are reported to be the authors of a series of articles to appear in the Associated Sunday magazines this summer.

Mabel Normand, a favorite in Japan, is hoping to find a scrip of Japanese life in which she may appear as one of these little people whom she likes so well.

Benjamin Chapin has been given the degree of Dr. of Literature by the Lincoln Memorial University of Cumberland Gap, W. Va. This is a fitting tribute to his long study of the life of Lincoln which he has perpetuated in "The Son of Democracy." It has been recognized as an important addition to the historical literature of the United States.

Madge Kennedy, whose own delightful personality spells candor and absolute lack of pretense plays quite the opposite type with amazing ability in "The Fair Pretender." She bluffs her way through life beginning as a little stenographer until she attains her end.

Constance Talmadge is happy portraying in "The Lesson," a girl who succeeds as an interior decator—as she herself always aspired to be one.

A new color has been evolved and called "Nazimova." It is a deep purple with the velvety appearance of a pansy.

Metro stars seem to possess unusual and interesting costume accessories. Viola Dana carries a particularly beautiful beaded bag made by an old Indian woman on the California reservation. Anna Nilsson proudly displays a purse made of the skin of a rattlesnake killed by Bert Lytell on a desert location for "No Man's Land." Emy Wehlen discards the prevailing wrist watch, and wears her tiny timepiece in a ring; while Beverly Bayne wears each day a bunch of white violets, her favorite flower sent by anonymous friend.

W. H. Strives to Please Public

Official Thinks Average Fan Is Better Judge of Pictures Than Hired Critics—Explains Why They Fail

"SATISFYING THE PUBLIC," said a W. H. Production Company official to MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, "is one of the most essential elements today in successfully exploiting motion pictures. The average motion picture fan, in many cases, is a better judge of picture values than the hired critics employed by a large number of the motion picture organizations. The national tendency of a hired motion picture critic is to find as many good qualities as possible in his company's product, and thus naturally overlooking the poor qualities. This is why a number of expensive productions have met with failure after being released to the public."

This official, in discussing further the exploitation of the various reissues sold by W. H. Productions Company on the state rights market, said:

"In the first place, in going over the market conditions last November, we discovered that a great number of the new productions were not up to the standard, and were not satisfying the public. We then came to the conclusion that it would be possible to reissue some of the best motion pictures that were produced and released several years ago and which had as a foundation prominent stars, virile stories and good direction; and these elements, in their entirety, being lacking in the new productions.

"To satisfy the public was the most essential factor. We then chose productions that had made stars famous, re-edited, reconstructed and retitled each production, and before giving them our final approval, invited people from different stations in life to our projection room to view these productions, and were guided by their criticism, thus being enabled to make pictures that would appeal to the masses throughout the country.

"We then laid out a complete advertising campaign on each production or series of productions, so that it would be possible for every exhibitor booking these subjects to exploit them properly to the public.

"The answer is that our Hart features, our series of twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystones, our series of Bessie Barriscale features, our series of Shorty Hamilton comedies, and our series of Charlie Chaplin comedies, are being booked successfully by the exchangemen in the most representative theatres in the country. And in many cases they are bringing more money into the box office than the best of the new features, because they are satisfying the public."

Graphic Tells of Abramson's Success

THE publicity department of Graphic Film Corporation last week sent out the following in connection with Ivan Abramson's accomplishments in the industry:

"Since its inception, the most modern of the arts, the silent drama has developed many directors. Some of them have achieved fame, others have not been so successful, but the man who stands out pre-eminently, the 'Shakespeare of the Screen' as he has been called, is Ivan Abramson. Not only does he compete with his contemporaries artistically and for commercial success, but every new photo-play for which he is responsible comes up to a standard of being a little better than his previous effort, each adding its mite of improvement toward the day of perfect pictures towards which all directors are striving.

"In his latest production, 'When Men Betray,' he has chosen for his theme a factor in life responsible for a large part of humanity's suffering—the betrayal of the marriage vow. The story is powerfully dramatic and, while fearlessly telling the truth of the evil as it exists, is handled in a manner that cannot offend any class or individual. The author shows that such transgressions are self-punishing—that no man may injure a good woman without inflicting injury upon himself, that the sacrifice of his honor for passion's sake, and the concealing of his crime under a mantle of hypocrisy and deceit, is the seed that breeds other crimes that will react upon himself.

"For the star role in this drama Ivan Abramson has selected Gail Kane. As the wife she has some very strong emotional scenes, and so impressed is this director with her work that he is to arrange for another picture with her as the star."

Another Youthful Player

Anna Mead, twelve years old, announced last week through her manager, Carolyn Lawrence, of 120 Lexington Avenue, New York, that she has decided to enter motion pictures.

Educational Shows Navy Film Privately

The first private showing of the Educational Films Corporation's new naval picture, "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," will be given in the club rooms of the Architectural League of America in West Fifty-seventh street, New York, on Thursday evening, May 30. It will be a strictly invitation affair, limited to the members and their families—a sort of Navy Night in which the architects who are keenly interested in Navy architecture will be addressed by Henry B. Culver on "Ships' Models," and by Lieutenant Henry Reuterdahl, U. S. N., on "The Fighting Navy."

The Educational's Navy spectacle will be shown in connection with Mr. Reuterdahl's talk. He will try out the titles he has written for the production, delivering them orally. He will also give much additional expert information as to Navy construction, statistics of tonnage, etc., such as would only be of interest to a professional audience.

The making of prints of "Your Fighting Navy" has started at the laboratories. In anticipation of extraordinary demand, the first order calls for fifty positives for the United States alone. At least a week's run at a leading Broadway theatre will precede the general release, which is scheduled for about the middle of June.

Cook Takes Control of Arcey

Gordon D. Cook has assumed full control of the Arcey Film Company at Chicago, for which he was formerly general representative, and which will now be known as the Gordon D. Cook Photoproductions.

Mr. Cook stated that there will be no change in the policy of the organization, regarding either the purchase or distribution of films.

This has caused some delay in the release of the prints that have been acquired thus far.

Mrs. Wharton Back in "Eagle's Eye"

Mrs. Leopold Wharton, who is remembered for her work in former serials produced by The Whartons, and also in "The Great White Trail," is back on the screen again in "The Eagle's Eye," the twenty-episode serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America by William J. Flynn, the recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service. The fifteenth episode of the serial, "The Campaign Against Cotton," marks her return.

The Mena Film Corporation Has Completed "Restitution," In Nine Reels, and Will Distribute It Shortly In the Independent Market. The picture Touches on Periods from the Garden of Eden to the Present Day

Mena Soon to Release Its First Production

The Mena Film Company's first production, "Restitution," is soon to be released, though there is considerable uncertainty as to just how it will be handled. However, arrangements are being made for a trade showing at an early date.

"Restitution" was produced under the working title, "Super Strategy," under the supervision of G. C. Driscoll, and the direction of Howard Gaye. It is said to be a big spectacular, nine-reel picture, telling the story of man's departure from the paths of virtue, with Satan, as his evil genius, ever at his elbow.

From the Garden of Eden the narrative progresses with Satan as a connecting link to a modern episode with the war as a background.

United Assembles St. Louis Exhibitors

The formation of local "get-together" clubs composed of exhibitor-members of United Picture Theatres of America was begun when Floyd Lewis, district manager, assembled the members in St. Louis and its vicinity at a luncheon at the Elks' Club in that city. The organization of such bodies in other cities will be fostered and encouraged as through them the exhibitors will find a convenient way of making their wants and needs known to the central organization.

Ochs Tours for United

Lee A. Ochs, having attended the convention of the exhibitors of the Northwest as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, spent last week touring the Middle West in the interests of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., of which he is vice-president. At Milwaukee he presided at a meeting of boosters of the co-operative plan, and another meeting was called by him at Pittsburg for Sunday, May 19.

Pitt Theatre in Pittsburgh for Pictures

FOLLOWING the announcement in the trade papers last week, that the Pitt theatre in Pittsburgh would adopt pictures for summer police, came a second announcement that the house is for rent for the summer, following the engagement of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, "Hearts of the World," which is now running.

The Pitt theatre has been leased to the Messrs. Shubert for regular dramatic attractions in September; but William Moore Patch, president and managing director of the Fort Pitt Theatre Corporation, owners of the property, is authority for the statement that pictures will be run in the Pitt theatre every summer. The house has a cooling system and has always remained open during the hot months—sometimes doing larger business in midsummer than in winter.

The Pitt theatre, which is one of the show places of Pittsburgh, has created an unprecedented record for runs, in so far as big feature films are concerned. It was opened during the season of 1915-1916, by Mr. Patch, with "The Birth of a Nation," which ran in Pittsburgh for four months. "The Battle Cry of Peace" followed and ran for two months. Other pictures that have created extraordinary records in the Pitt theatre, in the order of their engagements, are "The Ne'er-do-Well," by Rex Beach, four weeks; "Cabiria," five weeks; Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," four weeks; "Ramona," two months; "The Birth of a Nation," return engagement, three weeks; "Civilization," seven weeks; "A Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellermann," ten weeks; "The Honor System," two weeks; "Intolerance," eleven weeks; "The Crisis," five weeks; "The Barrier," four weeks; "Joan the Woman," three weeks; "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," seven weeks; "The Garden of Allah," five weeks; "The Bar Sinister," four weeks; "The Italian Battlefront," four weeks.

Liberty Distribution Takes the Field

THE organization of the Liberty Distributing Corporation brings into the motion picture distributing field a new factor. Offices are being prepared for the new organization at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, and P. E. Meyer, formerly attached to the sales forces of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, and New York exchange manager for the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, will be in charge as manager.

The Liberty Distributing Corporation was formed by a group of men who have had long experience in the local distributing field. After making an exhaustive survey of the metropolitan territory they decided that exhibitors today desired strong feature dramas, each backed by judicious exploitation.

The advantage this new concern claims is in having associated in its executive department men who have watched the mistakes of others in their field and have obtained through this experience an insight into the reasons why many heavily advertised features have failed to produce the desired results at the box office. Their first step, therefore, has been to acquire productions embracing a plot of extraordinary interest, a title that will create in an instant an interest in the picture and also an advertising "angle" that lends itself readily to intensive exploitation. The first two subjects to be distributed in this territory by the new concern are "Nine-Tenths of the Law," in which Mitchell Lewis portrays the leading role. The second feature will be "The Devil's Playground," in which Vera Mitchelena, the musical comedy star, portrays the leading role.

The sales force in addition to Mr. Meyer will embrace Mr. L. E. Burke, who will act as treasurer, and Edward Kelly.

" The Man from the Dead " Is the Name of Gaumont's New Serial, in Ten Episodes

Gaumont Names Unique Serial

" The Man from the Dead " Will Be in Ten Two-Reel Episodes—Trade Showings Promised Shortly

THESE are the days when something outstanding in the way of photoplay is welcomed with open arms. For a long time there has been a growing demand for a short serial which will hold the interest in every episode, according to Gaumont.

Recognizing this demand, the Gaumont Company will soon have ready for state rights buyers what the company terms an amazing serial in ten two-reel episodes. This is an up-to-date story of the Monte Cristo type, featuring a man who returns " from the dead " to avenge his wrongs, and, incidentally, to aid others who have been oppressed.

There is said to be not only compelling interest in every episode, but there is action and suspense in every foot. Frankly sensational, this serial is claimed to be replete with startling surprises, thrilling dangers and ingenious escapes. " The Man from the Dead," who captures the sympathy of the spectators from his first appearance, is pursued by his enemies through the entire twenty reels.

" The Man from the Dead " has many claims to the close consideration of the discerning exhibitor. The photography is said to be of the best; there is logical interpretation of plot; beautiful scenery; elaborate settings; wealth of idea, and perfection in detail, Gaumont asserts.

Apart from this, " The Man from the Dead " is said to be absolutely unique.

" The Man from the Dead" has been produced with the independent exhibitor in view and instead of being of the usual serial length of thirty to forty reels it has been trimmed to twenty action-crowded reels with no padding.

While " The Man from the Dead " frankly is not " high-brow stuff," Gaumont says it can be depended upon to interest any spectator, young or old, who has red blood in his veins and enjoys the thrills of adventurous melodrama.

The Gaumont Company plans to have the entire ten episodes complete in the near future at which time trade showings will be arranged for the convenience of the buyers and exhibitors.

" Straight and Narrow " A New King-Bee

On June 1 the King-Bee Films Corporation will release a new two-reel Billy West comedy, entitled " Straight and Narrow."

The scenes of this comedy are laid in a prison. Billy West plays a convict, with a mania for dancing. Babe Hardy and Leo White portray two safe breakers, who are always getting Billy into trouble.

" Straight and Narrow " is the twenty-third comedy made by the King-Bee Films Corporation, with Billy West in the star's role.

Foursquare Signs Distribution Contract

Foursquare Pictures has just signed a contract with the Standard Film Corporation for the exclusive distribution of the Foursquare product in the Kansas City and St. Louis territories. The arrangement is along lines similar to those entered into with the Southwestern Film Corporation, of Dallas, which gives Foursquare an organization of splendid strength in the carrying out of a policy to the material advantage of Foursquare and its exhibitor-patrons.

Keeney Picture Released Last of May

The first picture of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, " A Romance of the Underworld," will be released in about two weeks, according to an announcement by William L. Sherry, through whom the Keeney pictures are to be distributed in the United States and Canada. Mr. Sherry recently resigned as vice-president of the Paramount Picture Corporation to carry out certain large plans, including the distribution of the Keeney pictures.

" Marriage," the second of the Keeney productions, was run off last week for the first time in the projection room of the Keeney studio at 134th street and Park avenue. Those who saw it say it is an exceptional picture. They comment especially upon its artistic quality, dramatic power and absorbing interest as a story. It will be released shortly after the first picture. Catherine Calvert stars in both of these releases.

Jacksonville Welcomes Return of Binney

After spending a month in New York, Harold J. Binney, producer of " Josh Binney Comedies," has returned to his studios in Jacksonville, Fla., and was considerably surprised to find that his company had arranged a nice little celebration in honor of his return and the acquisition of Miss Laura De Cardi as new leading-woman. Mr. Binney and Miss De Cardi were met at the train by Mrs. Binney, Master Robert and all members of the company, and were immediately escorted to the studio where a little supper party had been prepared. Owing to the late arrival of the train much of the evening's program was eliminated but the supper itself and the welcoming address to Miss De Cardi given by Hilliard S. Karr, featured by Mr. Binney as Funny Fatty Filbert, were greatly enjoyed by all.

A Moment in " When Men Betray," Graphic Production

"Unchastened Woman" Distributed by Kleine

The record of progress inaugurated by Rialto-De Luxe productions with "The Unchastened Woman" is accumulating additional force by the announcement that arrangements have been concluded by which the George Kleine system will distribute the future productions of this brand throughout the country.

The wide territory covered by the Kleine system assures the Rialto-De Luxe productions being seen in a large number of the representative theatres, and the efficient manner of distribution between exhibitors and exchanges should prove of great worth.

The first production to be handled by the Kleine system is "The Unchastened Woman," adapted by Oliver Morosco's stage success of the same name, and it is announced that the future productions released under this brand will be special features with well-known artists based on successful plays or books.

Gaumont News Service Gains Rapidly

The Gaumont Company states that arrangements have been perfected for the handling of its independent news-reels, the Gaumont News and the Gaumont Graphic, in practically every portion of the United States, and it is expected that the entire territory in the United States and Canada will be closed within the next few days.

The Gaumont News and Graphic are the only independent news-reels, and are backed by the world-wide affiliations of the Gaumont Company, which has branches and cameramen in every civilized section of the globe, and closely associated with the Gaumont Actualities, of Paris, and the Gaumont Graphic, of London.

In arranging the distribution of this news service so that it will be available to all independent exhibitors, the Gaumont Company has been careful to place it only with the most reliable exchanges.

An Indication of the Magnitude and Perfection of Detail of Maurice Tourneur's "Sporting Life" Is Gained from This "still," Snapped a Few Days Ago While the Picture Was Being Filmed

Tourneur Promises Much in New Picture

UNUSUAL interest centers in Maurice Tourneur's first independent production, "Sporting Life," now in course of filming at the Tourneur Studios at Fort Lee. This is due to Mr. Tourneur's success with another Drury Lane melodrama, "The Whip." Mr. Tourneur produced a wide variety of photodramatic offerings for Paramount and the World Film, including "The Blue Bird," "Prunella," the Elsie Ferguson vehicles, etc., but his production of "The Whip" is looked upon as a box-office attraction and as one of his greatest efforts.

There are many interesting things attached to the history of "Sporting Life," which was written by Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks, and which enjoyed a phenomenal run at the Drury Lane in 1897. It duplicated its London hit in New York in September, 1898, and had one of the longest runs in the history of the metropolitan stage, and as a touring attraction it created box-office records wherever it played.

Robert Hilliard created the leading role of Lord Woodstock, which was played in England by Leonard Bayne. Elita Proctor Otis was the villainess, Olive de Carteret, who was played abroad by Mrs. Cecil Raleigh, wife of one of the authors. Jeanette Lowrie was the heroine, Norah Cavanagh. Marie Cahill, then unknown, played a tiny role of Clara, while John Ince, now a leading screen director, had another slender part.

Briefly, the story of "Sporting Life" deals with the efforts of Malet de Carteret and his wife, Olive, to get possession, by fair means or foul, of Lord Woodstock's horse, Lady Love, the Derby favorite. The vein of romance involves the young nobleman's love for his trainer's pretty daughter, Norah. There are a number of thrilling scenes, including one never before presented in screen melodrama. "Sporting Life" is probably the best known of all Drury Lane melodramas.

Willette Kershaw will play Olive de Carteret. Miss Kershaw is one of the best known actresses on the speaking stage. She was a member of the Princess Theatre Stock Company, of which Holbrook Blinn was the director. At that house of playlets she scored remarkably as the light o' love in "Any Night." She was the chorus girl of "The Country Boy," played the star part in "The Unchastened Woman," and was seen in Sir Herbert Tree's revival of "Henry VIII."

Arrow Officials Say Conditions Are Good

Despite the war and the lamentations of the calamity howlers, motion picture conditions are excellent throughout this country and Canada, according to the officials of the Arrow Film Corporation, who for the past two years have been making an exhaustive statistical study of making and marketing pictures all over the world.

The above statement is based on two things, according to W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow organization,—the optimistic reports from exhibitors throughout the country, and the tremendous increase in sales made by the state rights department of the Arrow Corporation. "These sales, and especially those of the past week, give one an excellent idea of the healthy condition of business throughout the country," said Mr. Shallenberger, "and, in addition, show what distributors in different territories selected as their 'best bet' from among the pictures we control."

Educational Announces Reels of Mexico

THE Educational Films Corporation of America announces that beginning next month, it will release a series of twelve single-reelers entitled "Mexico Today." This is the work of George D. Wright, a young American who has been settled in Mexico City for several years, and in partnership with a native Mexican, has received extraordinary facilities for picturizing all the aspects of the native life.

Among the subjects of the one-reel films are: "The Heart of Mexico," "Picturesque Industries," "History and Architecture," "Market Days and Fiestas," "The World's Most Useful Plant," "The Floating Gardens," "Life in the Indian Villages," "In Silverland," "A Modern Hacienda," "The Power House of Mexico."

It is hoped to have a trade showing of these pictures in the near future, and negotiations are in progress for one of the Broadway houses to show them weekly. Mr. Wright has an eye keen to the quaint and unusual, and an energy that got after the inhabitants of Manana Land and made them exhibit their customs, industries, feastings, dances and merry-makings. Anyone who looked at these pictures from week to week, it is said, would acquire a better knowledge of the country and its inhabitants than obtainable from a month's delving in a book library. In fact, although the pictures are not political in character, the whole Mexican situation is revealed in their striking contrasts between culture and ignorance, wealth and abject poverty, the wonders of science and the backwardness of the peons.

Whartons Work on Reel for the County

LEOPOLD and Theodore Wharton and the entire cast which has been producing "The Eagle's Eye," the twenty episode story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America by William J. Flynn, the recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service, are in Rochester this week working on a special one-reel production to be used in connection with the War Chest drive of Monroe County. The War Chest is a fund which has been founded for the purpose of meeting the county's quota in all future drives for contributions to war organizations and charities.

The picture will show what could happen if any of the organizations working for the welfare or comfort of "the boys over there" should have to cease activities through lack of funds. The fate of wounded soldiers in case the Red Cross was handicapped, the diversions the soldiers would have to seek if denied the Y. M. C. A., the discomforts which would follow the withdrawal of the Salvation Army from the war field, and all the other activities which are dependent upon the generosity of Americans for their support will be shown. King Baggot and Marguerite Snow and Mrs. Leopold Wharton, who played the leading characters in "The Eagle's Eye," will have the principal roles in the War Chest picture.

The picture is being made in response to a request from the committee of Rochester who are interested in the War Chest Fund. A picture which was made by the Whartons especially for the Red Cross drive last fall is given credit for a great part of the $1,000,000 total which was raised in Rochester.

O'Toole Is Engaged by Foursquare

John O'Toole has been engaged as manager of the Minneapolis exchange of Foursquare Pictures. He will work in conjunction with Frank J. Flaherty of Chicago, who is financially interested with Foursquare in both the Chicago and Minneapolis exchanges.

Mr. O'Toole has started with a rush, and states that with the material he has that he will be able to serve his patrons in a manner ensuring their permanent satisfaction.

Drummond Makes Big Purchase for South

W. E. Drummond, Special Features Company, one of the largest independent distributors in the territory composed of Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, announces the following purchases on his recent visit to New York:

Francis Ford's first independent production, "Berlin via America," through Ernest Shipman, sales agent, for above territory, excepting North and South Carolina; "Still Alarm," from Pioneer Film Corporation; "Million Dollar Mystery," re-edited in six reels, from Arrow Film Corporation; W. S. Hart, re-issue, "A Lion of the Hills;" twenty-eight Sennett-produced comedies and twenty-six Chaplin re-issues from W. H. Productions for the entire territory.

Mr. Drummond said that business in his territory is booming and that the independent market has never been in a more healthy condition.

Standard Announces Three New Films

The Standard Film Service announces the arrival of three new feature attractions in addition to which they have acquired the Ohio rights to the Mack Sennett comedies.

The features are Helen Gardner in "Cleopatra"; "Mothers of Liberty" and "The Guilty Wife." These have been secured for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

Mr. Harry Charnas, president and general manager of the Standard Film Service, left for New York last Monday. The object of his trip at this time is to secure some additional available features, and a few new short reel pictures. Charnas will be east two weeks, and will make his headquarters at the Astor.

Bee-Hive Expands

W. H.-Chaplin Films Meet with Success

An avalanche of business is said to be the result of W. H. Productions Company's new output of the 26 Charlie Chaplin one and two-reelers. The results far surpass expectation; in fact, before release, the exchanges already having contracted for these subjects were obliged to order additional prints to take care of the large quantity of business that has been pouring into their offices, according to W. H. Productions.

The first four of the series of Charlie Chaplin's are two-reelers and are entitled, "The Jazz Waiter," "His Dare Devil Queen," "The Roustabout" and "The Knockout." These have already been released and from every report are doing a smashing good business, without exception. They are being backed with a distinctive advertising display of one, three and six sheets on the two-reelers and one and three sheets on the single reelers, also attractive 8 x 10 photographs on both.

Allen Film Closes Cleveland Office

The Allen Film Attractions, handling "The Warrior" and "Mother" in Ohio, has closed its Cleveland office, 405 Sincere building. Before leaving the city, Manager D. L. Martin said that all exhibitors who had booked the Allen features would receive their prints on the dates contracted for. Mr. Martin has returned to his former home, Chicago, and his sales manager, Nathan Dobson, is now in New York.

It has not yet been decided whether these pictures will be handled direct out of Chicago into this territory.

"Natural Law" Sold

The "Natural Law" was sold for Cuba by the J. Frank Brockliss, Inc.

Before leaving for Chicago, Sidney Garrett, president of the Brockliss, Inc., closed this deal with the Central America Film Co.

Standardization Is United Aim

President Berst Sends Out First of Series of Communications to Members of the Incorporation—Rental Uniform

THAT the plan of The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., offers its exhibitor-members standardization in three very important phases, was the text used in the first of a series of communications addressed to the exhibitor-members of that corporation and dealing with the aims, progress and methods of operation of the company, which was issued last week by J. A. Berst, its president.

To begin with, President Berst declared, there would be standardization of price. The United plan eliminates the necessity of dickering or bargaining on the exhibitors' part to obtain desirable film. The rental price the exhibitor will pay will be mathematically determined and will be uniform in houses of the same classification the country over. As these figures will be available to the exhibitor-members of the corporation at all times, the rental price to the individual will be known to him in advance. It will be absolutely fixed and no degree of cleverness on the part of salesmen or no strength of opposition in the neighborhood can raise it a penny.

Then there would be standardization of quality. An exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled corporation, President Berst explained, would know no law higher than the exhibitors' wants and needs. Representing as it will, the exhibitors, it would naturally have the pick of the market from which to select its releases.

Furthermore, the plan will provide standardization of exploitation. In enlarging upon this topic President Berst gave detailed information as to the plan of operation of the United, which has not hitherto been published. It was part of the project, he said, to present each picture purchased in a New York theatre. During this presentation the most capable men obtainable would be employed to handle its publicity, to arrange its lobby display, and to provide its orchestral score. Exact reproduction of this publicity, this lobby display and this orchestration would be placed at the service of every United exhibitor showing the picture.

Foursquare Sells Four States

Transfers Territorial Rights in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska to the Standard Film Corporation

THE FOURSQUARE PICTURES CORPORATION has turned over the territorial rights to the handling of its productions in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska to the Standard Film Corporation, involving a sum said to be $112,100. Other territorial transfers to the Standard are said to be pending.

The deal for the Middle West territory was consummated by Jerry Abrahams, of the head office of Foursquare in New York, and General Manager Ryan and Treasurer Warren, of the Standard. It is said that the deal placed in the hands of the Standard about eighteen feature productions, in addition to the serial, "The Eagle's eye," and quite a large list of short-reel novelties. Also included are the so-called super-features, "One Law for Both" and "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

The Standard has been distributing the reissued Mack Sennett-Keystones, which were purchased by them from the W. H. Productions Company, of New York, and the three Wm. S. Hart-Thos. H. Ince super-features, "The Bargain," the "Hellhound of Alaska" and the "Bandit and the Preacher."

Also handled by the Standard at the present time are the two-reel Wm. S. Hart-Ince plays. The acquiring of the short-reel pictures formerly distributed by the Foursquare gives the Standard about the largest assortment of short-reel stuff, now quite popular with exhibitors in the smaller towns in the Middle West. Recently the Standard also acquired "The Birth of Democracy," the big French Revolution production, from the Export and Import Company of New York.

Francis Ford Decides Upon New Pictures

FOLLOWING the release of the Francis Ford Producing Company's "Berlin via America," by Elsie Van Name, the first of a series of six big features to be produced by this company during the current year; the announcement is now made that the next two productions have been decided upon and are entitled respectively "A Man of Today" and "Four Generations."

Mr. Ford and his company have arrived in Los Angeles, where activities are well under way on the first of the coming features and the date of release will shortly be named.

The bona-fide interest shown by the state right buyers and the fact that Ernest Shipman is able to report that practically seventy per cent of the territory has been disposed of within the first ten days of a sale campaign, is very gratifying to Mr. Ford and his associates, and is an incentive for an even greater and more pretentious effort than marked their first offering. Mr. Ford will personally govern the direction of each and every production and his long association with the film drama and his world wide popularity as an actor of heroic roles will undoubtedly prove an important factor in making these pictures a series of continued successes, and thereby establish a franchise for the entire output as a particularly attractive commercial proposition in the minds of the independent buyers.

“The Scenario’s the Thing’

By Roy Sommerville

NOT so long ago the motion picture industry awoke to the fact that the money-making photoplays invariably contained a good story. Immediately the cry went up, “the play’s the thing,” and producers began a mad scramble to buy up all the successful novels or plays on the market—and prices went up accordingly.

And after a lot of them were converted into photoplays the producers frowned and wondered why they didn’t get the money—good story, big star, celebrated director, fine cast, expensive costumes and set—but a “flivver.”

From long experience as a fiction writer, from several years in the studios, and from saving of “flivvers” from the shelf, I would say that the motion picture industry is “shooting against the sun.” The play may be the thing for the speaking stage, but in a photoplay it is only the beginning. Here’s a new slogan for you:

“The scenario’s the thing.”

Sounds a trifle far-fetched at first, but bear with me until I give you the analysis. Fully three-fourths of the successful novels and plays have proved to be “flivvers” or inferior photoplays, and many of the classics in drama and literature have developed into pallid mediocrities on the screen. That they were successful in other fields proves conclusively that they were what the people wanted; that they were not what the people wanted as photoplays, proves just as conclusively that they were not presented properly, and as the greatest dramatist of them all wrote, “Aye, there’s the rub!”

The one great crime of motion pictures is that first thought after a story has been purchased for production: “How can I change it?” Then the producer, the director, the star, the camera-man, and sometimes the stenographer, “do the German” on a masterpiece that has taken six months for an intelligent, trained author to create. Each one gets in his change, so that when the completed picture goes out he may claim the credit for making it a “good” story. If it isn’t, he blames it on the scenario-writer’s “cootie” script. I may be over-drawing this a little, but I have known it to happen just that way.

Conceding that they are conscientious in their changes, then, in the name of common sense, what training in story or drama have these scenario-lizards had? Only what they have gleaned from repeating some author’s lines as actors; from good, bad and indifferent photoplays that they have worked on or in—and perhaps, a course of reading in Snappy Stories. Forced to make a living at writing stories or scenarios they would starve to death. Yet they wade in where the angels fear, mangle the work of successful writers with “hokum,” and then turn the wreck over to the scenario writer with: “It’s a bully story now. Work it out along those lines.” And the “lines” are like barb-wire entanglements.

I can almost hear the squeaks go up from the scenario-lizards anent their changes: “The story couldn’t be done in pictures!” That’s the joke—and the tragedy—of the screen. Also the sandbag for better pictures.

In other arts or industries the cry is “how can it be done?” and a little gray matter is used to try and devise a way to do it. Let a newspaperman tell his city editor, “it can’t be done,” and he would find himself in the street with a tin-can dangling at his coat-tails. Let the successful author dismiss a problem in his plot with a lazy “it can’t be done,” and his finish would be writing for the cent-a-worders. Let the business man camouflage every scheme with “it can’t be done,” and in a brief spell he would be making conversation in the bankruptcy court. I never heard D. W. Griffith say “it can’t be done.”

I do not mean by this that every story can be transferred to the screen without adaptation, but I have seldom handled a good author’s work where the characters, situations or plot needed radical changes—the necessary switches were made in the construction to get parallel action and proper timing.

And there you have it. The average studio tries to fit the story to the screen, but the real writer tries to fit the screen to the story. The former way produces he dreary regulation play, the latter—what you paid for.

“The scenario’s the thing!”

Inter-Ocean Sells Paraltas for Chile

INTER-OCEAN FILM CORPORATION, through Gus Schlesinger, has sold the entire annual output of Paralta Plays for Chile. The full Paralta program has now been placed by Inter-Ocean in almost every country in the civilized world. Negotiations for the few “open” territories are rapidly approaching the completion stage, through the efforts of Louis Brock and Mr. Schlesinger, who have charge of this branch of Inter-Ocean’s work.

President Cromelin announces that Inter-Ocean has secured the Selexart features for foreign distribution. They are “Honor’s Cross,” starring Rhea Mitchell; “Blue Blood, starring Howard Hickman, and “Social Ambition,” with both Miss Mitchell and Mr. Hickman. The Lewis S. Stone features, “Inside the Lines” and “Man of Bronze,” and a Robert T. Haines play, “The Victim,” have also been added.

It is expected that the last of the Inter-Ocean home office departments will be moved into the new Inter-Ocean building, at 218 West 42d Street, New York, before the current week ends. Leon Schlesinger, sales manager of the domestic branch, has disposed of the territorial rights to “Enlighten Thy Daughter” for Quebec and the Maritime Provinces of Canada.

W. H. Says Story Is “First” in “Mickey”

“It is a known fact,” said W. H. Productions, “that one of the largest producing companies in the country has tried and is trying in all its advertising to adopt the policy of trade-mark and story first, and then the star. That is a very sound ‘theory’ policy, but in most cases and under present conditions, it is falling down.

“The point is, that the story—the plot, construction, appeal, etc.—must be strong enough to out-shine the star, which is a very rare occurrence. The plot, to support a production, must be a masterpiece—everything the public wants—heart interest interwoven with humor, pathos and adventure, so that they may lose themselves in the charm and appeal of the story.

“Mack Sennett set out to do this in ‘Mickey.’ At a private screening recently, for some of the showmen, their unhesitating praise, when set down and analyzed, proved beyond a doubt that Mack Sennett in ‘Mickey,’ soon to be released by Western Import Company, had accomplished what he set out to do—produce a masterpiece whose appeal would be universal, whose charm will be its very own, whether it is seen in an Esquimau movie-show hut or in some cocoanut grove in the Fiji Islands where they don’t know Mabel Normand from a barber pole.”

Wharton Employees Lost on Battle Front

Spencer Alden and Philip Moser, aviators, who were recently killed while in the service of the United States, were formerly employes of the Wharton Studios at Ithaca. During the time they were attending Cornell University they worked in several of the serials and other pictures which were produced at that time.

Howard Cody, known as the nerviest property man in the motion picture business, who did all the heavy work off scenes for “The Eagle’s Eye,” has enlisted in the medical department following the completion of the serial story of the Imperial German Government’s spies and plots in America by William J. Flynn, the recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service.

Educational Current Releases of Interest

Of immediate interest to exhibitors are the Educational’s current releases. Professor Ditmars in the three split-reelers of April 22, May 6 and May 20, deals with “Wild Goats and Sheep,” “Wild Babies” and “The Friendly Bee.”

Following “What the Ice Age Left,” Robert C. Bruce is represented on May 15 and 29 by the two parts of “The Silent Wonderlands of the West” and on May 22 by “Following the Course of the Cayuse.” The general merriment of audiences, week of May 20, is increased by “Der Black Mitt” of the Katzenjammer Kid series. After it will follow “Up in the Air,” pre-released at the Rivoli week of May 20 and generally released week of May 27.

Tom Bret Comedies Shown to Trade

At several showings to the trade, the Tom Bret Comedies featuring James Aubrey, formerly with Pathe and Vitagraph, went over the top, and the question as to whether or not Tom Bret could produce a comedy as funny as his witticisms in the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedies is settled for all time in Bret's favor, according to reports.

The Tom Bret Comedies are said to be high class and have a rich humorous flavor. What is more, they are said to possess a zip and action which resembles the style of lively production made famous in the Douglas Fairbanks pictures or the old-time Triangle Keystones.

Selects Sisters to Play Sister Roles

Maurice Tourneur is a sticker for realism. His first independent production, the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," has two prominent sister roles, in fact one of the parts is that of the heroine. Mr. Tourneur declined to engage two actresses who remotely looked alike and to cast them for the parts. He insisted upon finding actual sisters to interpret the characters. It was a difficult task, since the roles are of the ingenue type yet call for considerable emotional ability, but Mr. Tourneur finally found the Binney sisters, Freddie and Constance, one of whom is now dancing in "Oh, Lady, Lady!"

Gaumont Graphic Subjects Are Announced

From the opening subject, which shows the winning of the Southeastern sweepstakes by "Ellingboe" in the opening of the Atlanta track season, to the final close-up of Maj.-Gen. W. C. Gorgas, the man who is responsible for the health of the American army, the current issue of the Gaumont Graphic, No. 7, is said to be full of timely news topics of compelling interest.

This issue was shipped from the factories of the Gaumont Company on May 10, and like all Gaumont news-reels is released to exhibitors immediately upon receipt, so that there is the least possible delay in the showing of current topics.

United Shows Instance of Co-operation

That real co-operation will rule in United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., not only as between exhibitor-member and the central organization but as between member and member was shown by the action of Manager J. E. Costan, of Chicago, who, having secured the first run of United Pictures in his district for his theatre, the Harvard, consented to have his contract amended so that the A. E. R. theatre in the same district might be admitted into the same classification. Every new member of the United is becoming a booster for the co-operative plan and is doing his utmost to hasten the day when co-operative operation shall become an established fact.

"Who Is to Blame"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

JACK ABBE, a slender, little Japanese actor of the juvenile variety, wearing the "smile that never wears off" and presenting his own little self without affecting any of the "actor's" stuff, carries off the honors of this Triangle offering, written by E. Magnus Ingleton and produced under the direction of Frank Borzage, with Pliny Horne turning the crank. Young Abbe, after his performance in "Who Is to Blame," can take a front seat with his brother in arms, Sessue Hayakawa, with the one restriction that he must remain in the juvenile class and not aspire to the strong emotional roles portrayed by his Japanese elder. With a story to fit his purposes, a straight comedy drama of the Jack Pickford variety, this little fellow could headline the bill and bat three-hundred for the circuit of five reels. He certainly lends a ray of sunshine to this picture.

The last reel of "Who Is to Blame" covers a multitude of sins committed by the author in the preceding reels. The first reel is devoted to a rickshaw ride through a "prop" street in Japan. The action then shifts to America, where it rambles on with a punch here and there until the final reel.

The action in the climax carries dramatic pep and here lies the strength of the story. Considered as a whole, the picture is above-the-average. The sub-titler tried hard to make us believe that a German spy was to make her appearance but he, presumably, is the only one who could penetrate the depths and unearth such a character. Nothing in the story as revealed on the screen indicates that there is a German spy within shooting distance.

Frank Borzage is strong on the Japanese atmosphere. His work on the production, "The Curse of Iku," shown for review a couple of months ago, reflects his ability along these lines. In this late Triangle he gets the opportunity to invade Japan and the atmosphere is sure there. He has done very well with the production. Jack Livingston has the straight lead with very little to do. This he does well. Maud Wayne, Lillian West and Lillian Langdon are in support, Miss Wayne given the feminine honors. The lighting is up to standard, the photography is good, as per usual in Triangle offerings; the sub-titles are at times meaningless and the direction is, in general, good.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Grant Barton (Jack Livingston), a young American attorney, is traveling in Japan. On arriving at port he selects from among a number of rickshaw operators, young Taro Sam (Jack Abbe), because of his genial smile. Young Sam takes it upon himself to guide Grant about Japan and when Grant is ready to return to America he takes Taro with him as a personal companion and valet. Taro masters the English language and makes an ideal servant for Grant. Grant wins the hand of Marion Craig (Maud Wayne). Soon after the marriage, Marion is called away to Los Angeles to attend her mother who is ill. During her absence, Grant meets Tonia Marsh (Lillian West), a woman-about-town and the two become attached to each other. Marion returns unexpectedly and sees Tonia in her husband's arms. The shock confines Marion to her bed. She refuses to see her husband.

Taro understands the situation and knowing that his master loves his wife devotedly, takes action to bring them together. He, by clever strategy, wins the favor of Tonia and she becomes attached to him, thinking that he is a Japanese nobleman. Their friendship becomes intimate. Grant discovers his servant in the apartment of Tonia and orders him to leave his service. Taro has made his sacrifice and leaves, going first to Marion's home and telling her that her husband is very sick. Marion hurries to his home and finds him in the best of health and delighted to see her. Taro returns to Japan and again takes up his old occupation of operating the rickshaw.

"A Daughter of the West"

(Diando-Pathe—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

BABY MARIE OSBORNE is presented in a western melodrama in her latest picture, "A Daughter of the West," and attired in a cow girl's rig she makes a very cute appearance. While she is at the most incidental to the plot itself, the numerous scenes in which she appears with the little colored boy produce good comedy. This colored chap, by the way, is gaining quite a name for himself through his work in the Baby Marie pictures. He is the sincerest mite of humanity that ever showed face (colored or uncolored) on the screen and the unaffected manner in which he goes about his duties as foil for the star is most amusing. Here he dons chaps, bandanna and broad brimmed hat. To look at him is to experience a chuckle.

The story of "A Daughter of the West" is molded after the Hart type of western melodrama with Frank Whitson playing the hero. It in itself affords average entertainment until the author loses his sense of perspective in bringing it to a happy conclusion. The sudden reform of the villain and the introduction of the love interest between him and the heroine are turns in the plot that are built without foundation. And even melodrama built to display a child's talents in an incidental role must have a sound working basis.

William Bertram's talents as a director are better exploited when the story permits him to stay within certain limits. The western stuff in these five reels while it possesses an amount of atmosphere is short on realism when it comes to the heavy action such as the bar-room fight and the holdup of the town. The photographic work is average.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The shallow character of Stella Gordon (Marion Warren) causes her to lose interest in her husband Ralph (Frank Whitson) and her child, June (Baby Marie Osborne), and when Standish (Morris Foster) enters her life she willingly accepts his attentions. Ralph, taking June and her little playmate, a colored boy, goes West to look after his mining interests. There he receives word that his wife has died after being deserted by Standish. In the West his attentions are divided between Sarah Malcomb (Leota Lorraine), June's governess and the pursuit of an outlaw, Rawhide Pete (William Quinn). Standish comes West and buys the town bar. He allies himself with Pete in an effort to drive Ralph and the better element from the town. When Pete arrives to shoot up the place he is met by Ralph and his deputies. A heavy fight ensues. June and her companion succeed in locking Pete in jail after he has been seriously wounded. Sarah, believing Standish grossly persecuted, decides to elope with him when the villain has a change of heart and confesses that Ralph is the better man.

"Believe Me, Xantippe"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

PARAMOUNT has an excellent farce-comedy in "Believe Me, Xantippe," a picture adapted from Frederick Ballard's play of the same name. Its history dates back five or six years ago, when it was awarded the prize (its production) in the Harvard school for playwriting. Its appeal was further demonstrated when it opened in New York to pleased audiences. And now as prepared for the screen by Olga Printzlau, it gives further proof of the fact that Professor Baker at Harvard instructs his students in the art of writing to the general public as well as in turning out plays of literary and technical merit. Miss Printzlau might have been another Mr. Ballard so identical in spirit and humor is her photoplay as compared to the original. Certainly no opportunities for comedy were allowed to pass by. Each of them was seized upon by a ready intelligence and dominating sense of humor. A group of hardened critics (all critics are hardened) laughed out loud at "Believe Me, Xantippe" even though it was noon and their several stomachs were empty. This seems a final stamp of approval.

The comedy in MacFarland's early predicament when he realizes that his every move lays him open to arrest starts the picture off with a string of fine comedy scenes. The inter-play between MacFarland and Dolly offers some highly amusing situations, upheld by clever dialogue in the sub-titles, while the introduction of Calloway brings the element of suspense. The subsequent scenes in the small jail with the various bits of humorous business brings the story to a close in yet another whirl of comedy.

Wallace Reid has never done anything better than his George MacFarland in the present picture. His ease and naturalness and perpetual state of good humor are qualities which result in winning his audience in every scene. Anna Little is a pleasing Dolly Kamman. James Cruze's Simp Calloway, the bold, bad bandit, is a marvelous characterization. Charles Ogle does a small comedy part exceptionally, as does Winnifred Greenwood, while Ernest Joy, Henry Woodward and Noah Beery complete a most competent cast.

Donald Crisp's direction is proof conclusive of his versatility, judgment and sense of picture values. The camera work of Henry Kotani is commendable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

On discovering his apartment robbed, George MacFarland (Wallace Reid) wagers with his friends, Brown (Ernest Joy) and Sole (Henry Woodward) that he will elude the law for a whole year after committing a crime. They select forgery as the deed with which to blame him. Immediately his two friends give his picture to a detective agency, posters are printed offering a reward for his capture, together with the information that his habit of exclaiming "Believe Me, Xantippe" when surprised will easily identify him. After some early nervousness MacFarland begins to have confidence in himself and lives nearly the whole year through without being caught. While exploring a valley in Colorado he is lost and when night descends, takes refuge in a cabin. He finds there Dolly Kemman (Anna Little), daughter of the sheriff of an Arizona county, stopping in the cabin on a hunting trip. She recognizes MacFarland and places him under arrest. The arrival of Simp Calloway, a bank robber, unites the other two, however. MacFarland, after a fight, ties up Simp and then is obliged to lead him captive back to Arizona at the point of Dolly's gun. In the Arizona town he is cast in jail but is permitted to telegraph to his friends. They sent back word of their deaths! Despondent, MacFarland confides the whole story in Dolly and she, relenting, permits him to escape. Soon afterwards Brown and Sole arrive and back comes MacFarland from his contemplated trip to Mexico. The desert and the horse's back proved uncomfortable. And so MacFarland wins the bet because Dolly was not serving the law when she arrested him but only her father's interest, and, of course, he gets a wife besides.

"Social Briars"

(American-Mutual—Five Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

DAINTY Mary Miles Minter makes a decided hit in her latest Mutual picture, "Social Briars." The conventional life of a small town grates upon her nerves; she's anxious to see the world and do great things. As Iris Lee, living unhappily with a distant relative, she decides to shift for herself and upon this is a rather interesting story draped.

The picture shows a real old-fashioned church choir in the one-horse village of Dalton; it also gives a glimpse of a star's life behind the scenes, and the ungentlemanly behavior of a star's manager. The only apparent reason for injecting this unsavory episode into the picture being to create a vacancy for Iris.

Alan Forrest as Jack Colwell, a gay though wild young blade, gives a good account of himself, as also does Anne Schaefer as Martha Kane, the distant relative above referred to.

The picture gives a true to life reflection of the small town narrowness of character just as it also shows the broadmindedness of the old Mr. and Mrs. Brown (Jacob Abrams and Milla Davenport), who are at peace with the world and bubbling over with optimism.

The photography is uniformly good, and the picture, while not up to Minter standard, should not be classed as mediocre.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Pretty Iris Lee (Mary Miles Minter) runs away from the village to make a career. Her sweet voice attracts the attention of a church warden who secures for her a position as soloist in a city church. While so engaged she meets Helen Manning (Claire Du Brey), a light opera star, who invites her to call on her at the theatre. The manager of the theatre discharges Helen because she will not submit to his demands and Iris is offered her position. But the glamor has worn off city life for Iris and she returns to the village. Mrs. Kane's son Jim (Edmund Cobb) is in love with Iris, and has much to do with her return.

CHARLIE MURRAY, Mary Thurman, Wayland Trask and Harry Booker are the principals in this Sennett comedy and receive support from Ben Turpin, a lobster and Laura La Varnie. The chief set is a cabaret where all the principals and the support unite in a mixup where love at first sight, jealousy and revenge play their parts in typical Sennett style. Murray has a tremendous amount of good business to his credit and his expressions in themselves are generally good for laughs. The scene which he and Ben Turpin play with the lobster is one of the funniest in the picture. Turpin, as the fife player, is obliged to use his instrument to charm the pet lobster away from Murray's nose. The scenes taken in Los Angeles streets showing all the traffic blocked are full of new gags and the skating-loop-the-loop stunt staged in the cabaret is one of the many mysteries that Sennett's company are for ever turning out. Walter Wright directed.

"The Guilt of Silence"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

MONROE SALISBURY and Ruth Clifford co-star in Bluebird's "The Guilt of Silence," a picture that is chiefly notable for its magnificent snow scenes. Through the five reels the exterior scenes show snow lying on the ground that is apparently neck-high and often it is still falling. This background gives the film a certain impressiveness that assists the story to an immeasurable extent. One is transported from his theatre chair and set down, figuratively speaking, in the vast silences of the frozen north—an ideal effect for a picture to produce in summer weather. It is pleasing to state that the photography in these scenes is excellent.

The story, which is an adaptation of "Silent Smith," by Ethel Hall, concerns the temporary tragedy which comes into the lives of the characters because the titular person loses his voice. The only thing which goes to lessen the force of the dramatic situations that follow is the thought that constantly keeps occurring as to the reason why Smith doesn't write his knowledge down on paper and so enlighten the misguided ones who fall into the trap set by the villainous duet.

The leads perform to advantage and receive sterling support from Alfred Allen, Betty Schade and Sam De Grasse. The direction is the accomplishment of Elmer Clifton and is meritorious in every respect.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Smith (Monroe Salisbury), just before he is ready to start on his journey home is robbed of his gold mined in Alaska by Amy (Betty Schade) and her partner (Sam De Grasse). Pursuing them through the snow storm he loses his way and when finally rescued by Harkness (Alfred Allen) is unable to speak. Thereafter he is known as "Silent" Smith. Amy and Sam arrive in the town near Harkness' cabin and again start operations. They pick Harkness as their victim and despite Smith's inarticulate interferences Harkness falls for the game and marries Amy. Immediately afterwards he departs to look after his claim and while he is away his daughter, Mary (Ruth Clifford) arrives. Smith, Amy and Mary live in the cabin together and by a mistake Mary is led to believe that Smith is the lover of Amy. During the winter a child is born to Amy and with this Mary turns from Smith altogether. He is unable to understand her attitude. When Harkness returns he also suspects Smith and shoots him. An Indian who has long nursed a hatred for Amy and Sam apprehends them while attempting to escape and forces them to return to the Harkness cabin. There all guilt is removed from the name of Smith as it is learned that Amy and Sam were married. For the sake of the baby Harkness permits them both to depart. The shot has restored Smith's power of speech and all ends well.

"Hypocrites"

(Cosmofotofilm—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

SOME risque moments in it—but cleverly produced, cleverly acted and at the foundation of it all, a corking good story. In a sentence, this is a criticism of "Hypocrites," an English-made screen version of Henry Atrhur Jones' story, under the direction of George Loane Tucker.

Mr. Tucker shows in his work with this picture the same subtleness in putting over the human touches as he showed in his work with "The Manx-Man" and "Mother." Elizabeth Risdon, who was featured in one of these two productions, is also seen in the stellar role in "Hypocrites." In support, Miss Risdon has one of the most capable casts seen together for some time by the reviewer. Cyril Raymond, a juvenile who makes his initial bow to an American audience as far as the reviewer knows in this picture, is an artist and an actor. His work is one of the high lights of the picture. Margaret Brewster, an English ingenue, is equally good, pretty and has all the qualifications usually looked for in a portrayer of an ingenue role. The cast in general is excellent.

If your patrons are of the broadminded class of picture enthusiasts, book this picture. If they dislike the truth in its connection with the domestic relation problem, they will in all probability dislike this picture. In the opinion of the reviewer, "Hypocrites" should be seen by every man and woman. None will be the worse for having seen it, and many will have learned a lesson that can be taught in no other way.

George Loane Tucker has handled the sex problem in a most clever manner. He throws a hint and then broadens with scenes of human, heart-interest touches. To Elizabeth Risdon falls the major portion of the real work in this production, and she has handled her part with such a true sense of the artist that none can deny her cleverness as a screen portrayer.

The production has all the ear-marks of the made-in-England brand. It differs from English productions that have been seen by the reviewer, in that the camera work has been done with more clearness, the interior sets are more to the liking of an American audience and some of the exterior shots registered are in a class with some of our best travels views.

Director Tucker had a good story to work into a screen play. The action runs smoothly and the author has developed his plot with something more than the brazen idea of creating material for five or six reels of pictures. "Hypocrites" tells a story that must be weighed by the exhibitor before booking. It delves into the sex problem. Consider your audience; if they like the truth in this respect, book the picture. It has been produced with discretion, it tells a story that entertains and the story is told by a cast of screen artists. Besides those mentioned as members of the cast are seen Gynne Herbert; Frank Randall, very good as the curate; Kenelm Foss, Hayford Hobbs, Edward O'Neill, Minna Grey, Lewis Gilbert and Cyril Percival, all give excellent performances.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mr. Wilmore (Douglas Munro), squire and autocrat of the village of Weybury, England, considers himself guardian of its morals. The vicar is a man after his own heart, but the curate, Rev. Edgard Linnel (Frank Randall), hates hypocrisy and is full of kindness for his fellow men.

The squire is on the verge of ruin. His son Lennard (Cyril Raymond) is marked for marriage with Sir John Plugenet's (Charles Rock) daughter Helen (Margaret Brewster). Lennard goes on a tramping trip and in the country meets the daughter of a humble sculptor, Michael Neve (Edward O'Neill), Rachel (Elizabeth Risdon). They fall in love and after several days spent at the home of the sculptor, where Lennard poses for Neve, he receives a letter from his mother telling him that all arrangements have been made for his marriage with Helen Plugenet. The telegrapher who sends Lennard's answer makes an error and Lennard's telegram to his mother conveys a different meaning than the one intended.

Lennard leaves Rachel and promises to return. On his arrival home, he is informed that he must marry Helen in order to save his father from financial ruin. In the meantime, the village is startled by a rumor that the squire's stableman has been indiscreet in his relations with Sarah Piper (Minna Grey). The squire orders the curate to have the couple married. The curate refuses because he has reason to believe that the stableman has been used as a pawn.

Lennard writes a letter to Rachel but it is held back by his mother. She waits for his return. In the meantime her father dies and she decides to go to Weybury and see Lennard. She arrives and is taken suddenly ill. She is taken to the home of the curate. A doctor is called and he tells the curate the secret of Rachel's illness. The curate than exposes Lennard's affair with Rachel and when the squire learns of it, he proves himself a hypocrite. The squire's lawyer forces Rachel to sign a paper saying that Lennard had nothing to do with her affair. But the curate discloses the truth and Lennard and Rachel are married. Helen gives up her claim to Lennard.

FAY TINCHER, always remembered as the gum-chewing stenographer of the "Bill, the Office Boy" series made by the old Reliance-Majestic company, and as one of the chief laugh-makers in the Komic pictures produced by the same company, makes her first appearance as a World star in "Main 1-2-3," a two-reel comedy produced by her own company. Attired in a black and white striped dress and supplementing her gum-chewing with other "rough-neck" mannerisms, she presents an original character that remains amusing from first to last.

The production has some business that departs from the beaten path. The scenes in which the star makes herself at home in the store window where a furnished room has been set up are good. Miss Tincher shows a marked desire to undress before the camera. She does so once behind the window shade with a drunk and a rube for her audience. The main situation in the story results from four people conversing over crossed telephone wires. Appointments are made at a cafe and duly kept and the complications resulting are many. The supporting cast is made up of players who are sincere though they do not know their comedy thoroughly.

"Toys of Fate"

(Screen Classics, Inc.-Metro—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"SHE'S SOME PUNKINS"—this Mme. Nazimova. If you don't believe it, see her in Screen Classics' late one, "Toy of Fate." "Revelation" put her on the map with a good slice of territory for recreation. In her late work, she just naturally reaches out and grabs another acre or two for a garage or other incidental properly found in the star's list of taxable properties. A few more grabs like this one and—well she may be listed above a certain other well known "ampy" star who pays a few cents income-tax. No kidding, Mr. Exhibitor—just you watch this little lady run the gamut of emotions (as the well-trained press agent would say in his first copy to the press) and see if you don't agree with me.

Add to the emotional "pep" displayed in her "War Brides" (stage production); the vivaciousness displayed by the leading ingenue of comic opera hit; the coquettish pranks of a Marguerite Clark and a little bit of every characteristic embodied in the real artist's work and you have a mental picture of Mme. Nazimova of "Toys of Fate"—a mighty good picture because she makes it so.

The weak spots in the story are vanquished in the presence of this little black-haired artist. She lets nothing come between her and a successful performance in this screen offering. She's in evidence, even when she is off-stage. You sit and wait for her and when she springs with the agility of the tigress within the focus of the camera rays, she rewards the few minutes of waiting with some of the finest bits of screen acting ever presented for review of the critic. And this is true whether she be found around the camp-fire of the gypsies, the guest of honor at the bridal reception or the revengeful, fiery, little half-breed, waiting the moment when she can revenge her mother's death. Her eyes speak with the eloquence of an orator's voice. She conveys a world of meaning with every twitch of her saucy black head.

Without Mme. Nazimova or her equal as an exponent of emotional acting, "Toys of Fate" would not be the picture which was greeted with such acclaim by a Strand matinee audience last week. The flat places in its plot would be emphasized, not moderated to harmonious unison with the higher lights. The author has whipped into shape many strong moments in this creation but it remains for Mme. Nazimova to translate their strength of purpose into dramatic language that the humblest and most unsophiscated patron of the motion picture theatre can understand.

Without looking for mistakes, you will find them in the construction of the plot. One very noticeable one comes to light in the court-room scene. Even the layman knows that the presiding justice "charges the jury" before they retire for deliberation. And this is practically true in the case of a murder trial. Director George Baker let this little detail slip but the betting is in favor of the audience to notice it.

But we take our hats off to said Mr. Baker in the quality production he has given Mme. Nazimova's picture. He has spared neither expense nor atmosphere. His scenes showing life in the gypsy camps are ideal. The photography is some of the best work Metro has ever presented in this branch of picture work—and that is saying a mouth-full. The supporting cast is excellent. Charles Bryant again takes the leading man's position and he acquits himself with merit. Frank Currier's character work calls for especial mention. Irving Cummings is an excellent type and acts with ability showing in every move. Dodson Mitchell as the aged roue, takes rank with the best of them catering to the portrayal of these parts. Edward J. Connelly can not be beaten for his impersonations of the Devil incarnate. He isn't called a devil in the synopsis or in the sub-titles but he is one just the same, even though he doesn't appear with "prop" horns. Nila Mac does a bit well.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The story opens with flashes showing the death of Hagar (Mme. Nazimova) wife of Pharos, Gypsy chief. She leaves Pharos for Bruce Griswold (Dodson Mitchell) a wealthy roue. Years later Azah (also Mme. Nazimova), Hagar's daughter, is the life of the Gypsy camp. Pharos had found a locket around the neck of his dead wife. It contained a picture of Griswold. Henry Livingston (Charles Bryant) is assistant of the prosecuting attorney, Howard Belmont (Edward J. Connelly). Greggo (Irving Cummings), a No. one of the Gypsy band, hopes to win the hand of Azah. Griswold asks Livingston to go oust the Gypsy band from the land which it occupies. He meets and falls in love with Azah. Later Azah is persuaded to accept Belmont's money to secure an education. Her father makes him promise to marry her on her return. He does so. Azah despises him. After the wedding, Griswold accidentally drinks poison which Azah had prepared for herself. She has left it purposely to attract the eye of her husband whom she had learned from her father was the man who ruined and caused the death of her mother. Later Azah and Livingston are married.

"The Firebrand"

(Fox—Five Reels)

"THE FIREBRAND," Virginia Pearson's latest picture, has as its setting Russia in the tumultuous days immediately preceding and following the revolution which put an end to Czar Nicholas' regime. It was prepared for her by E. Lloyd Sheldon and offers her a number of opportunities where her emotional ability is allowed to play in all its varied shades. In general character "The Firebrand" quite resembles the state of Russia at the time in which it is laid. While this statement is full of praise of its realistic atmosphere, it also goes for the type of melodrama offered. Nothing of the Russian revolution could very well help being hurly-burly melodrama and this is the substance of Mr. Sheldon's picture. The heroine finds herself in so many distressing predicaments owing to the everchanging fortunes of the times that she finally knows not which way to turn. Miss Pearson gives a very vivid portrayal of the distracted Natalya, though her work doesn't reach to the innermost recesses of the heart. It is a fact peculiar with emotional heroines that they fail to penetrate very far under the skin while constantly being harassed by one force or another, while the quiet heroine on the other hand manages to deeply affect. The kaleidoscopic character of the story which deals more with "situations" than with the analysis of emotions may have something to do with this also.

Edmund Lawrence directed the production and his work is of the obvious sort typical of the older school. No one can ever mistake the villains in this sort of melodrama. They constantly register their character and smoke cigarettes. The Russian atmosphere is maintained by the usual assortment of beards, peasant garb and samovars. Victor Sutherland makes an earnest hero, while others in the cast are Carleton Macy, Herbert Evans, Nicholas Dunaew, Jane Courtney and Willard Cooley.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Prince Natalya (Virginia Pearson) of the aristocratic family of Rostoff reads the book written by the radical, Julian Ross (Victor Sutherland) and her eyes are opened. She visits him in the prison camp where he saves her life when a premature blast is exploded. In return she arranges for his escape. Natalya poses as the Rostoff governess before him. She is engaged to marry Boris (Herbert Evans), son of her guardian, Prince Andrei Rostoff (Carleton Macy). Unknown to her these men are in league with Germany and are responsible for the ammunition of the Russian troops being faulty. Through their treachery, Natalya's brother loses his life at the front. She curses the men who caused it. Ross and his fellows in Petrograd plan to do away with the Rostoffs because of their treachery and Ross is commissioned to do the killing. He is successful. Natalya learns the identity of the slayer and immediately her love for Ross is turned to hate. She journeys to Petrograd, however, and joins the revolutionary band. She gains its confidence and then betrays all the members into the hands of the police. Then comes the revolution, the overthrow of the Czar and the liberation of the political prisoners. They raid the Rostoff house headed by Ross. He promises to save her if she will marry him and she consents. Later, still vengeful, she shoots him. Immediately afterwards she discovers the paper which gives the names of the dead Rostoffs as being in league with Germany. Her mistake dawns upon her and she rushes to Ross, to discover, to her joy, that she only inflicted a slight wound.

"The Golden Goal"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

OPENING with an "honest-to-goodness" fight scene and closing with a real dramatic punch, Harry Morey's latest starring vehicle, "The Golden Goal," swings into line with the "best sellers" in program row. And it is Harry Morey's picture from start to finish. He hits the high lights of dramatics with the same powerful punch as he delivers against the face of the fellow-longshoreman. He gives a rattling good characterization of the longshoreman, later the shipyard foreman and still later in the picturization, the leader of the strikers. Morey had to work when Paul Scardon shot the scenes for this picture. He had no easy task to face. He couldn't walk through the scenes as Harry Morey, but was compelled to go into the world of the wharf-rats and demonstrate to his audiences the how, why and wherefore in the lives of these people whose world is bounded on the one side by the river and the other by the rear-end of a wharf gin-mill. Mr. Morey has few equals in this branch of character work.

"The Golden Goal" presents a good plausible story. Lawrence McCloskey, purposely or not, made this to order for Morey. The story fits the Vitagraph star like a glove and he wears it with all the assurance of one who appreciates the why and wherefore of the job in front of him. Paul Scardon has done some effective work. He turned out a good one—one that will stand up under the scrutiny of the most faultfinding audience.

Florence Deshon, as usual, is seen in a semi-vampirish role and in chief support of Mr. Morey. Jean Paige has the ingenue role and her work and her smile serve as an excellent bracer for a firmly established plot. Arthur Donaldson has a minor character role and works to advantage while in evidence. Denton Vane does his usual good work. The photography is good, the lighting is good—in short, "The Golden Goal" is a headliner for the program.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Doran (Harry Morey), by brute strength wins the respect of his fellow longshoremen, by beating up the bully of the docks. After the battle he wanders into the mission house and wins the admiration of Beatrice Walton (Florence Deshon), a wealthy young girl who seeks "thrills" and adventure in exploring the district along the waterfront. She is the daughter of a big shipbuilder (Arthur Donaldson). Beatrice hires Doran as foreman on her father's estate. She leads Doran to believe that she cares for him but when he makes advances she pretends to be insulted and orders him from the place.

Doran, before leaving, tells Beatrice that he will make good and return to demand her respect. He gets a job with a shipbuilding concern at the head of which is Richard Talbot (Denton Vane). Doran's progressiveness gets him advancement and he is soon made foreman of the gang of shipbuilders and leader of the union. Laura Brooks (Jean Paige), is a stenographer in the Talbot office. She and Doran become close friends and she consents to give him lessons in the elementary studies. Doran learns quickly and is approached later by Beatrice's father to call a strike and keep his men out until Talbot is ruined. He has attempted to persuade Talbot that he should consolidate his shipbuilding interests with the Walton interests and Talbot has refused.

Beatrice invites Doran to her home and introduces him to her father who offers Doran five thousand dollars to declare a strike among the Talbot employes. Doran consents and the strike is called. Later he sees that he has done wrong and goes to the Walton home and returns the money, saying that he refuses to enter into the scheme. Beatrice attempts to persuade him to remain, knowing that if he is not at the meeting called by the union at a certain hour, her father will have won his cause. Doran scents conspiracy, rushes from the Walton house, and arrives at the meeting in time to order his men back to work. Laura, who has worked for the cause of the strikers, intercedes for Doran after he has exposed the part he has taken in the affair, to his men. Doran's eyes are opened and he decides that Laura, in her humble circumstances, is far better than Beatrice with all her money and social prestige.

"Rose o' Paradise"

(Paralta—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"ROSE O' PARADISE" was the first picture Bessie Barriscale did for Paralta. It is an adaptation of a story by Grace Miller White, author of "Tess of the Storm Country." James Young directed it. Miss Barriscale is hardly the type to interpret one of the author's heroines. They are all young things, most of them ware rags and go about accompanied by some sort of domestic animals. Rose, for instance, carries three kittens, cute creatures that receive many a closeup. These heroines are always optimistic and refuse absolutely to consider the sordidness in life until it stands up and hits them square in the face. To live in poverty-stricken, miserable surroundings is to them a treat, a fine opportunity to philosophize. They only show fear when attacked by brute man. Mary Pickford's Tess was first cousin to Rose, as the author conceived her. And while Miss Barriscale plays the role with a sincerity and a true realization of its type, she naturally does better work in a part where her mature talents are allowed to play in their natural sphere.

However, Miss Barriscale and the vehicle would show to much better advantage had the simple story of Rose's fortunes and misfortunes been compressed into less space. There is the superfluity of feline closeups to be considered and the rather tiresome business between Rose and the old shoemaker, Lafe Grandoken, and his wife. Lafe dwells so often on his "Happy in Spite" club that he is at times responsible for making the spectator a bit unhappy.

The picture has a realistic production and Howard Hickman does some good character work as Grandoken. Edythe Chapman's performance is hindered by too much footage being awarded her scenes. Norman Kerry's Theodore King is not the finished hero that he is capable of playing at the present time. David M. Hartford as heavy, and William Delmar as the tough, and Lucille Young as the villainess, both unduly melodramaticallly villainous, and Arthur Allardt complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When Rose is born her mother dies, and Thomas Singleton (Arthur Allardt), her father, suffers a slight mental trouble as a result. His half brother, Jordon Morse (David M. Hartford), takes advantage of this, and has him confined in a lunatic asylum, where even after his recovery he is kept a prisoner.

After seventeen years Singleton escapes from the asylum, and takes refuge with Rose (Bessie Barriscale), who has been brought up by an old negro mammy. He tells her to seek a home with Lafe Grandoken (Howard Hickman), the Singletons' old gardener, until she has passed her eighteenth birthday when her fortune will come to her. Singleton realizes that Morse will make an attempt to see the girl and deprive her of her money by a trick. So Rose goes to live with Lafe, now a shoemaker. He is a hopeless cripple, but happy in spite of it all. His wife Peg (Edythe Chapman) is more of a pessimist, though she is kind at heart. A chance meeting with Theodore King (Norman Kerry), a scion of a wealthy house, precipitates romance, and all goes well until Morse re-enters the plot. He bribes Maudlin Bates (William Delmar), a tough, to do away with King when he learns that the young man contemplates marrying his niece. He wishes to retain the fortune for himself. Bates double crosses Morse, and decides to marry Rose himself, so gaining the fortune. While Bates threatens Lafe with bodily harm unless he force Rose to marry him he is shot by Morse. Morse throws the gun beside Lafe's chair, and as a consequence the old man is accused of murder. Morse carries Rose off a prisoner, but she escapes after a few days, and attends the coroner's jury in time to identify the real murderer. Subsequently Lafe is restored to the quiet of his home, and Rose is made happy with King.

"The Oldest Law"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS picture, in which June Elvidge, as the girl from the country, has weird adventures in the city, is not entertaining because of its lack of dramatic quality and its refusal to stand by anything approaching that which is logical. When the cruel Cora West, after obtaining a divorce from her husband, turns to her lawyer and calmly announces "I think I will open a fashionable gambling house," one can hardly refrain from laughing outright. Later Cora decides to reform, for the moment at any rate. When she sees her ex-husband fall into the power of another gambler she demands the I. O. U.'s and returns them to Mr. West. She has tears in her eyes as she hands them over, the while admonishing him not to gamble any more with professionals and to make Jennie his wife. Perhaps Cora had lost at cards herself and had become sentimental. Nothing else influenced her to change—nothing that was shown on the screen.

But to enumerate the inconsistencies of "The Oldest Law" one by one would be a tedious task. It seems a pity that Miss Elvidge's talents should be surrounded by such foolishness as the five reels of this picture present. John Bowers does little. If he had condescended to talk once or twice all the trouble might have ended before it began. But then it is not Mr. Bowers' fault that he was obliged to play the mute. Eloise Clement is the chameleon-like Cora, while others are Charles Charles, Frank Andrews and Frank Norcross.
